The SENTINEL's remarks upon "The Boys of Charlevoix" are very appropriate, and require even further consideration in order to remove the evil of which you complain.

The SENTINEL would be doing a good work if it devoted one column of its space weekly to a further consideration of the subject, because it is one of the most vital questions which now present themselves for solution: How can we best educate our children—develop their best qualities, and raise them up into noble men and women, so they will be an honor to themselves and a blessing to posterity? This is an important question; what do you propose to do about it? You must not suppose that you can remedy the evil by any means short of better example in the older ones, because we are all of us creatures of imitation or example. If our children did not hear the English language they would not speak it. If they did not have billiards presented to their notice they would not play billiards. If there were no saloons pandering to a vitiated taste, there would be less of drunkenness. Follow this line of thought up, by adding every influence which surrounds the child, and you will find character to be an outgrowth of all the influences that have acted upon him. Character is simply a product of the action and reaction of constitution and environment. This may seem a very easy way of summing up such a question as the education of our children, yet it is all there is of it; and the only way to solve the puzzle of our civilization is to study out the nature of man, and adapt his environment to a proper development of that nature.

The SENTINEL's remarks would seem to imply that in case the boys did not stop playing cards, billiards, etc., that it might be well to call in the majesty of law to stop the whole business. You can't do it in that way. The better way is to find some new direction for their better natures. Show them that you are their friend; introduce them to something useful; seek to draw out their higher, nobler nature, by directing their attention to some harmless game. Then you will have done something in the way of stopping the boys who are on the down grade, by lifting them up to a higher level.

We need much in the way of education. The world is just becoming aware that a proper knowledge of what constitutes a true education is what we really need. In fact, it is the great puzzle of our civilization. It is the all-absorbing question with many of our best educators. It is a question the proper solution of which will harmonize all conflicting interests in society, and speed the car of progress in true civilization.

You say "The sunday schools, the preachers, and the W. C. T. U. do their work, and moral platitudes are placed upon the lips of the young as a parrot is taught to talk;" and yet immorality prevails. The sunday schools and the preachers must change their texts. The "moral platitudes must be changed to something better. If, with the united force of these three influences in educating the boys no better results follow, there must be something wrong in our educational methods.

Yours,

THE SENTINEL'S FRIEND, AND THE BOYS' WELL WISHER.

Hazings from Hayes.

Jacob E. and Willis H. Chew gave a magic lantern entertainment at Burgess last Wednesday evening and at Undine Thursday evening. They will visit various places in northern Michigan during the winter.

And what does our young friend of Ironton think of Barens by this time? Whew!

The man who is out of debt, and has plenty to eat and an abundance of good dry wood to burn, can sit by the stove and let the winter winds howl, without much concern. Every farmer ought to get in to that condition.

A vacancy in the grade of Brigadier General will occur in March, caused by the retirement of Major General John Pope.

The trial of Stevens, the murderer of Bertha Duckwitz, was concluded at Detroit Saturday. After the arguments of counsel the Judge gave a brief charge, occupying not more than two minutes. The jury retired at 4:30, and about five o'clock they brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and Judge Swift, without permitting the interposition of any technical delays, sentenced him to imprisonment at Jackson for the term of his natural life. He was quickly taken from the court room to the jail under a strong escort, and followed by a noisy but not dangerous crowd.

—The Detroit Tribune in the few months since it was established under the new management has given positive evidence of the best business management, superior editorial ability, and an adherence to the best principles of republicanism. All the news is given in the briefest and most attractive manner, without the omission of a single essential detail, and also without the tiresome "padding" indulged in by the "blanket sheet" papers of higher price and less enterprise. All departments are complete. The daily comes at $5 a year while the Weekly Tribune and Charlevoix SENTINEL can both be had for $2 in advance.

SPECIAL PRICES!

We regret that our high-priced neighbors are grieved because we are quoting low figures in the public prints, but have no time to shed tears where sympathy is undeserved. They prefer the old plan: keep the customer in ignorance of real values, boast of "Square Deals," fossilization, low prices in the abstract, and great facilities for buying cheap, but it would not do to commit themselves. —Judge Kent of East Jordan, was in town yesterday.

—Miss Lynn Harner of Petoskey, is the guest of Mrs. A. Washburn.

—A new covered stage has been placed on the Charlevoix and East Jordan route.

—And still the East Jordan Enterprise continues to publish the G. R. & I. time card of January, 1884.

—Robert Roe, of Harbor Springs, is putting in a dock 58x300 feet in size. It will extend into 20 feet of water.

—Mr. Gunderson, of the commission firm of Gunderson & Barker, of Chicago, was in town last week looking after business matters.

—A handsome white owl shot near town by Mr. Peterson and stuffed and mounted by Fred Cochran is on exhibition in Weed's show window.

—Cameron Bros., of Torch Lake, are lumbering pine and cedar on section 21 Kearney Township, Antrim county, and have about twenty five men at work.

—Recently a bear was noticed on the straits hopping from one cake of ice to another opposite the water works. Whether Bruin met his untimely end or not, was not learned.

—W. Tomphins of Old Mission, received $1,500 for his last season's crop. He grew 2,800 bushels of new varieties of potatoes for a Chicago house, and has large contracts for another year.

—Plenty of snow now.

—Mrs. Rozelle Rose has returned to Petoskey.

—Charlevoix is to have a home minstrel combination.

—James Metcalf had a severe fall last week which confines him to the house.

—L. D. Bartholomew & Co. have an enlarged ad on our fifth page calling attention to their fine line of Garland stoves.

—In years past the G. R. & I. have shipped immense quantities of ice from Cadillac. No preparations have been made for shipping, this year.

—January 5th Congressman Cutcheon, introduced a bill granting a pension to Jacob Steed of Charlevoix. Mr. Steed is fully worthy an act of this kind.

—The young orange trees of the Charlevoix colony in Florida, suffered extensively from the recent cold snap. Indeed some of our townsmen speak about a trip back to Charlevoix in order to get warm.

—The briefs are out for the trial at the Supreme Court this month, of the tax case of the tug Boggs vs. the Township of Charlevoix. Cruickshank & Grier appear for the plaintiff, and F. W. Mayne for defendant.

—Orvis D. Wood, of this place, has on his Banks lotto, near Norwood, 60 head of cattle, 25 horses, and 160 sheep. Last year he cut 80 acres of hay. Wm. Wallace is managing the farm. Mr. Wood pays taxes on 5,000 acres of land.

The Eastport Literary Society had an election of officers last week, and the following officers were elected: President, Miss Kate Wagley; Vice President, Altha Wilkinson; Secretary, Willie Hopkins; Treasurer, Dora McEwan; critic, W. E. Campbell.

—Rev. W. H. McCartney, of Banks, spoke at the M. E. church Friday evening on his recollection of the war. Very few saw more of it than he, and the reminiscences were full of interest. It is hoped that another lecture from the reverend gentleman may be secured.

—The last number of the Western Paper Trade, the organ of the western paper dealers, contains a long and laudatory article on the Kalamazoo Paper Company. This concern is owned chiefly by the Messrs. Woodbury, Gibson and Hardeen, members of the Charlevoix Summer Resort.

—Ask Harry Chamberlin if it is true that he is married.

—Si Davis of Petoskey, committed suicide Monday, by taking laudanum.

—Mrs. Josie Dart has a card in this issue. Mrs. Dart is a dressmaker living at Capt. Carter's.

—Harry Wildfield returned Saturday from Toronto, where he has been visiting relatives and friends.

—One of the finest young ladies in the county arrived the 17th to remain with Mr. and Mrs. John Cook.

—To Messrs Carpenter, Stockman and Bartholomew, Florida: Did you take your skates south with you. If not why?

—Congressman Moffatt is on the committee on militia, and also on the select committee on election of president and vice president.

—The Kalamazoo Telegraph devotes a quarter column in describing a handsome row boat on exhibition in that city, the work of Charles Plass.

—The stolen boat referred to in last week's paper was that of Henry Bishop of the south side resort. His boat house was entered about three weeks ago.

—Rev. C. F. VanAuken is away on a months leave of absence engaged in revival work. During his absence Rev. A. M. Parmenter, and Rev. C. J. Strong will occupy the Congregational pulpit.

—Al. F. Draper has engaged to go into the mercantile and shipping business at South Arm, in partnership with a gentleman named Lang. They have bought the Peter LaClare property, at that place.

—When Elra Berdan, the genial representative of the Detroit Free Press visits the Charlevoix paternal roof he is always sure of a cordial welcome, not only from his relatives, but also from his host of friends.

—The first patient dying at the Traverse asylum, was Ferdinand Lauckin, formerly of Muskegon, who died Tuesday of last week. Lauckin was 43 years of age and formerly a saloon keeper at the above named place.

—The brilliant orthographer of the Boyne City Statesman is putting in odd time this winter in improving the common method of spelling. In last week's paper the following were ground out: "Februry," "requirs," "appolexy," "diptheris," "interrog," "famlies," etc.

—The Enterprise says: The Ironton hotel which was recently passed into the company's control will be opened and run in first-class manner the coming season. Several applications have already been made to the company for its lease, but as yet no arrangements have been completed.

—We don't beleive in dunning subscribers in these columns, but just at this time delinquents would confer a great favor upon us by handing in the amounts of their delinquencies. A dollar and a half won't hurt any man, and a good many of them, in the aggregate will afford us a good deal of consolation. Don't wait to be dunned by postal card.

—Peter Naw-gaw-nee living at Whiteville, Isabella county, a Chippewa Indian, has come down to us from a former generation. He is 90 years old, and claims to have known General Hull, and was 15 years old when Tecumseh died. His was a warrior under Pontiac and took part in the siege of Detroit, the massacres on the Wabash, Maumee, Raisin and Bloody Run. Pete had taken heap scalp but is a good Indian now, having been converted to Christianity.

—George Martin Post, G. A. R., of Eastport, gave a public installation of officers Saturday evening, Jan 9. The following others were installed: Commander, A. J. Drake; Senior Vice Commander, F. L. Church; Junior Vice Commander, Parker; Chaplain J. R. Child; Surgeon, Cyrenus Chamberlain; Adjutant, L. B. Rodgers; Officer of the Day, D. Blakeley; Officer of the Guard, J. McPherson; Quartermaster, S. R. Away. After the usual ceremonies, several addresses and a banquet followed.

—A Grand Haven dispatch says: Lake Michigan is open from shore to shore, and mark its wonderful influence on our weather this winter. When orange trees and their fruit are being frozen in Florida, and the sugar cane stocks are being killed out by the root in Louisiana, by 12° of frost, to the utter astonishment of the natives, Michigan, along the shore of the lake, is scarcely feeling the blizzard ten degrees colder than the gulf coast, and steamers are daily entering the harbor at Grand Haven from Milwaukee without the least hindrance from ice. The clearing up of the blizzard to-day with the wind in the south bringing snow, indicates very surely that moderate winter weather is yet before us as a rule, and the peach growers confidently anticipate "the flowers that bloom in the spring."

—W. S. Johnson of Sutton's bay, was in town two days the latter part of last week.

—Episcopal services at the Congregational church Sunday morning. Bishop Gillispie will officiate.

—Mr. and Mrs. Robert O'Neill will be "at home" to their friends in their State street residence, soon.

—A foot of snow and fine sleighing makes the long faces of lumbermen and business men as round as ever.

—Cadillacers are full of faith that the Toledo and Ann Arbor, and C. & W. M. railroads will both reach Cadillac by Jan. 1, 1887.

—Orlando Blair, county treasurer, is talked for Postmaster at East Jordan—provided, of course, that Charlie Hampton is willing.

—John Ward of Marion, has been lying very low from an attack of heart trouble. His friends throughout the county will be glad to learn that he is on the gain.

—The Grand Encampment of Odd Fellows, of the State of Michigan will be held this year at Big Rapids, beginning Feb'y 10th. Some three or four hundred patriarchs will be present.

—Arba Howard arrived Thursday for the purpose of removing his household goods to his new home, three miles from Ypsilanti, where he has purchased 40 acres and will engage in farming.

—C. H. Bellinger, the jeweler, has just received a fine line of new silver ware, jewelry, walking sticks, etc. and has a large lot of clocks on the way. Mr. Bellinger is constantly adding to his fine assortment. Look over his new ad.

—Sometimes boards of supervisors, composed of very wise and good men, over-reach themselves in their desire to protect the peoples' pocket book. Dr. A. C. Taylor of Manchester, presented a bill of $25 for services rendered at a post mortem examination. The bill was kicked into the waste paper basket as disallowed. Against this summary proceeding Dr. Taylor appealed to the supreme court for a mandamus to compel the board to show cause why they should not pay his bill. A writ has just been granted, and it will cost the people of Washtenaw county $200 for a meeting of the board to pass on the bill as ordered by the supreme court. —Telegraph.

—W. O. Johnson, one of the owners of the lost schooner Orphan Boy, has been looking over the wreck at Point Au Sable, Mich., and found the beach strewn with the wreck and cargo of the lost vessel. He says the lumber was broken into kindling wood and the yawl boat was found under it, and gave the impression that it was cut away from the schooner with an axe. Johnson says the Orphan Boy ran aground under full sail, as the masts were broken off close to the deck. None of the bodies of the sailors have been discovered and some venture the opinion they were found by fishermen and after stripped of their valuables were buried. Capt. Halliday carried several hundred dollars and a valuable gold watch. The cook also had considerable money. An investigation is being made.

—A South Arm special says of that town: South Arm in 1877 boasted of two frame buildings—it now has a population of two hundred and fifty, a school requiring two teachers, four groceries and general stores, one machine shop, requiring the services of two men to do the work, two blacksmith shops, requiring the services of three men, one saw mill built in 1882, and employing twenty men in the summer season, one heading and shingle mill, built in 1885, employing six men and boys, one hoop mill just completed, and employing 35 men, boys and girls. This is the largest and most active industry we boast of. It will require two million feet of elm logs to supply this mill annually, which will distribute $10,000 among settlers and make a market for a class of timber heretofore almost a drug in our market. These hoops are made by the Wilson process, which is of recent origin, this being the third mill of the kind in existence, and it is operated by the inventor of the process and his partners. They expect to run this mill every working day during the year, making a pay-roll of labor of about $15,000. They started their mill on full time Monday. We have in prospect a railroad, two lines having been surveyed for a standard gauge from here to Intermediate Lake, about six miles west of here. Depot grounds and docks have been purchased. Work is expected to commence early in the spring.

The Manufacturing Co

At a meeting of the Directors held Thursday, the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, M. J. Stockman; Vice Pres't, F. March; Treasurer, A. Bottars; Sec'y, H. L. Iddings.

It was decided to run the factory hereafter on a strictly cash basis. S. M. S[illegible] was engaged to collect accounts this winter.

The Presidency Bill Passed.

The United States house of representatives Friday passed the presidential succession bill as it came from the senate by 183 to 77. This important measure provides that in case of the death, removal, resignation, or inability to serve of both the president and vice president the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state, and then upon the secretary of the treasury, secretary of war, attorney-general, postmaster-general, secretary of the navy, in the order named, should further vacancy occur.

K. O. T. M.

The Knights of the Maccabees had a public installation and banquet at Odd Fellows' Hall on Thursday evening. A delegation of Knights from East Jordan was present accompanied by the East Jordan band, and the evening was spent very pleasantly. The following officers were installed:

Past Com.—A. R. Upright.
Com.—J. Milo Eaton.
Lieut. Com.—Dr. Preston.
R. K.—Will Covert.
F. K.—F. E. Wood.
Prelate—Alf S. Rosenthal.
Physician—Dr. Carlstein.
Sergeant—H. Emrey.
1st M. of Guard—John O'Neill.
2d " " "—Charles Kelley.
Sentinel—E. C. Bedford.
Picket—G. Sherwood.
Master of Arms—Jay Peine.

Happy Event.

At the home of the brides parents last evening, occurred the wedding of Capt. Robert O'Neill and Miss Mary E. Berdan, oldest daughter of Capt. Harrison Berdan, Charlevoix county's efficient sheriff.

The ceremony was performed at seven o'clock by Rev. J. T. Iddings, pastor of the M. E. church, after which a bountiful collation was served.

The affair was private, only the families of Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill being present. Among the number from abroad was Mr. Elra Berdan of the Detroit Free Press, brother of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill have a large circle of friends who will wish them health, wealth and happiness,—a wish in which the SENTINEL most heartily concurs.

The Patriarchs.

C. P.—James A. Keat.
S. W.—F. W. Mayne.
J. W.—A. L. Thurston.
H. P.—James F. Weed.
Scribe—A. F. Draper.
Fin. Scribe—Gus Brown.
Treas.—A. J. Modge.
O. S.—Fred [illegible].
I. S.—Geo. Madison.
Guide—Orlando Blair.
First Watch—Eugene A. H. Cole.
Second "—Richard Sharlton.
Third "—H. H. Flaney.
Fourth "—C. W. Sutton.
Guards of the Tent—H. C. Cooper, John Burns.

After the ceremonies of the installation a fine banquet was spread, and the Order and guests made merry the rest of the evening.

The address of the occasion was delivered by Rev. A. L. Thurston, of Boyne City, and was attentively listened to.

About 80 were present, including the ladies, and the occasion will long be remembered as the most [illegible] in the history of Odd Fellowship in Charlevoix.

Historical Society.

Friday evening last the Historical Society met with Mr. and Mrs. Ainslie, with about fifty in attendance, Major Green presiding. The interesting programme was opened with a vocal duet by Mrs. F. W. Mayne and Miss Flora Ainslie.

Major Green came next with a paper—a war reminiscence of the battle of Gettysburg, which was indeed tragic, romantic, and full of pathos, the heroine of the sketch being one Lena Vanderleigh, who, in aiding the brave boys with food and drink, amid the storm of shot and shell, perished on the field. The Major's regiment was among those for whom her efforts were put forth. The article was delivered as only an eye-witness could.

The beautiful alto solo "Summer Evening Memories," by Mrs. E. M. Clark, was followed by the regular evening paper by Miss Lena Washburn, on "Alfred the Great," and was a most creditable one.

Gard Brown sang a comic solo, and Mr. John Burns gave a select reading entitled "Masons on Tap," in which we learned how a Mason took 233 degrees, after which a rather lengthy and important business session was held.

On Friday evening next, the Society will meet with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brown. The entertainment will be exclusively of a "Longfellow" nature. All are requested to prepare themselves with a quotation, verse or poem from this author, in order that the plan may be fully carried out.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The Closing Sermon of 1885 in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

A Review of the Journey of Life, With Its Obstacles and Vicissitudes—Suggestions of New Things for the New Year

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, in preaching the last sermon of the old year at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, chose an appropriate theme, taking for his text:

Knowing the time that now it is high time to awake out of sleep.—Romans, xiii, 11.

While this morning with glad anthem we celebrated the Christmas hour, has it occurred to you that this is the last Sabbath night of grand, and beautiful, and eventful, and joyous, and solemn 1885? The occasion is mightily suggestive.

Starting out on a long journey on horseback, you ride along without stopping for many a mile, until after a while you come on top of a high hill. You rein in the steed. The horse smokes by reason of the length of the way. You take your feet out of the stirrups. You turn around in the saddle. You look off upon the ravines through which you have passed, and the hills over which you have come, and make an estimate of how many miles you have traveled. Then turning around again in the saddle, and putting your feet in the stirrups, you look ahead and wonder how far it will be before you come to the place of destination. And so to-day we come up on the Sabbatic Mount of privilege. No horseman ever spurred on a steed faster than we have gone up the steeps of life and down the dangerous declivities, but having come here to-day, we stop and look back upon the way through which we have come—the darkness and the sunshine, the accidents and the successes—and then look forward and wonder how long or how short will yet be the way. And sitting and standing here, the hour seems to me, as to you, it must be, momentous. I put my finger on the pulse of this moment and I feel that it beats high and eternal destinies. You and I have started on in a life which will continue to live after the sun has gone out cold in death and this wrecked and foundered world shall have strewn its timbers on the coast of an eternal desolation. O! it is a mean question for me to ask myself and you to-day: "Where am I? What am I? Whence came I? And whither am I bound?" The simple fact is that each one of us has a soul to save. Now, when any man in olden times had saved the life of a Roman citizen from drowning, for instance, that man who rescued the unfortunate was honored. He was allowed sometimes to sit in the Senate; he was allowed to ride in great processions, and when he entered a room the other people would rise up to greet him and do him honor. I would to God that to-night we might aspire for the higher honor of saving a soul—an immortal soul.

There are three or four reasons that I can think of why we should obey the injunction of my text and wake up. The first arousing consideration that occurs to my mind is the fact that there are so many obstacles in the way of our salvation. Now, there is no need of our hiding this fact. We sometimes hear people talking to the unconverted and saying: "It is just as easy for you to become a Christian as it is to turn over your hand." It is not. There are tremendous obstacles in the way of your becoming a Christian, and every man that has tried in thorough earnestness to become a child of God has found that there are obstacles. That is not a wise general who deprecates the force of an enemy—who says to his men: "My troops, you will have an easy time of it. Those castles can be captured without any very serious bombardment. There are only a few enemies in that opposing host. It will only be a few moments' assault and we will gain the victory." No. A wise general says: "Those are strong battlements; those men who are coming out to assault us are armed, and they are brave men. If you ever capture those fortresses, and if you ever overcome that host, it will be by a mighty rallying of all your energies." And I have to tell you now, that if you are ever going to get to Heaven, it will be by going out in a contest as one against a hundred, as one against a thousand, as one against a hundred thousand, aye, it is an infinite impossibility that you ever succeed by any strength or resolution of your own, and if there were not some supernatural aid to be offered and some divine promise to take hold of, we would be lost, and we would all be lost.

In the first place, there are the obstacles in the worldliness that surrounds you. I need not tell you, men of Brooklyn and New York, that there is a tide of worldliness setting away from God and from Heaven. You have felt it. You have waded down in it until the flood came to your knee, until it came to your girdle, until it has come to your hip. You rise in the morning. You find it is a few moments later than you thought it was. You are in great haste. You hurry through the morning meal. You race down the street. You go to your office. You open the letters and you answer them. You examine the money market. You run hither and thither. Your life is a toil and a turmoil. The long day, save the fifteen or twenty minutes in which you lunch, is given up to the influence of this world, and it is very rare, indeed, that from eight o'clock in the morning until four or five o'clock in the afternoon that you have a single thought about the great future. Some thought may, while you are standing at the counter or in the banking-house, some stray thought of the future world may come through your mind, but it darts out again, just like a swallow that in summer-time wheels into the open window, makes a circuit of a few minutes and then goes out. Oh! this tide of worldliness! You have felt it. It sets away from God and away from Heaven. You know it.

Then there are obstacles in the way of your getting to Heaven, in Satanic and infernal assault. The air is full of evil spirits. They accost you. They meet you at the crossroads. They tell you the wrong road. They try to unhorse your good resolutions, to spike your guns, to outflank you in every Christian movement, and if you are ever successful at all in gaining the realm of everlasting bliss, it will be by rallying all your physical, mental and moral energies, aye, it will be by calling upon the Lord Almighty by his infinite and omnipotent grace to help you. And yet, if there were a single man in all this audience who should suddenly have come upon him that he was going to miss Heaven, there would go up a shriek louder than that which is heard between colliding rail trains. There is no man who expects to miss Heaven. But how are you going to get over all these obstacles? I ask you as reasonable men, if the impediments in the way ought not to arouse you?

Another awakening consideration is in the value of the soul. Theodoric forbade the debasing of the National coin. They say: "We ought to debase it. We can mix something else in it and it will be just as good." "No," said Theodoric, "I will not have my face imprinted on a debased coin." Here we are. The image of God has been imprinted upon our soul, and yet it has been debased and has become a counterfeit. We have all sinned, and we are all lost, unless divine grace rescue and redeem us. Now, here is the soul. What is it worth? Is there not something in its value to arouse us? I sometimes hear people compare the soul in value to a mine. That is a very poor comparison, for the silver and gold in the mine will melt after awhile, and be of no more value than the scoria spit out from Cotopaxi, while these jewels of the soul will exist as long as there are vases in eternity to hold them. Might I not rather take a pair of scales? They are rightly adjusted. The two sides are just even now. I hold up the balances. On one side of that scale I put in simply a soul, nothing else at all; no trapping, but simply a naked soul. That is on one side of the balances. On the other side of the balances I put this world with all its riches and honors and gains, a ponderous world. But that world rises; that side goes up, while the other side in which is the soul comes down with ten thousand million ton weight. It is an immortal soul. It is a priceless soul. It is caged now. It beats sometimes against the wires of the cage and tries to escape, but it can not; but, let once the door of the cage be opened the thousandth part of an inch, as it will be after a while opened, let it be opened ever so little, and that soul goes out, taking fifty worlds at a bound. O! "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Another arousing consideration I find in the brevity of the time in which we have to prepare for the next world. How long it took to complete the East River Bridge! Twelve or thirteen years. If it had taken twenty years from the day the first foundation stone was laid, it would not have been a great while for so magnificent a structure. How long was St. Peter's in building? Scores and hundreds of years. And St. Paul's is not done yet. If there is a vast work to be done you expect it will take a great while to do it. Now, here, they tell us, is a temple of holiness to be built in every man's soul. How long are you going to give us to build that temple? A thousand years. "O, no," you say, "you can't have so much as that." Nor seven hundred, nor five hundred, nor three hundred, nor two hundred, nor one hundred, and some of us will not have sixty, and some of us will not have fifty, and some of us will not have thirty, and some of us will not have twenty—to build this great temple. O how vast the work and how short a time there is to do it!

When will this procession that you see every afternoon from two to four o'clock, stop! This long procession going out toward the cemeteries. Not until all these merchants have gone out of their stores and all these mechanics have gone out of their shops, and all these artists have gone out of their studios, and all these mothers have left their cradles, and all this city shall be emptied of this present population. The procession will keep going on until those who are here this night shall have joined it in silence. O, how brief life is! We talk about it till it gets a stale truth, but sometimes God strikes it on the soul with such vehemence that we are roused up. My brother, a missionary in China, was telling me of an instrument that they had at work in China during the insurrection for the beheading of men. He said it worked a stroke something like that (indicating) and at every stroke one life went, and another, and another. And, I thought to myself, that is just like the stroke of the minutes. In just that way the generations pass off. Certainly, as quickly as that. A life—another is gone, and another, and another. The waves of humanity dash up on that other beach in quick succession. Every stroke of the heart says: "Be quick!" The revolution of the seasons: "Be quick!" The coming of the morning, the dropping of the night: "Be quick!"

Another arousing consideration I find in the glory to be won. Paul was very fond of comparing the Christian life to a foot race. Those foot races have gone out of fashion. But you have seen racing, and you know that very often the driver and his horse is influenced by the wager. He knows whether it is a large wager or a small wager. Two steamers start for Liverpool, and it is known that the one that makes the quickest trip gets the job of carrying the United States mail. Will not the fact that the contract will be given to the swiftest vessel somehow influence the speed of those ships? Now, I say, we are started in a race, and ought not the fact that there are vast emoluments, great gains, a crown of glory that fadeth not away, before us, ought not these considerations to inspirit us by the way? O, blessed land. If you were offered in the gospel merely a bunch of withered flowers—if you were offered merely the dregs of a wine cup, I would not be surprised if you felt uninterested in the result; but when I tell you of the joys that are offered to you through the gospel I do not see how you can stop a moment in the race. I do not understand why you do not put forth redoubled strength that you may gain the prize.

"They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Blest are the saints beloved of God,
Washed are their robes in Jesus blood;
Brighter than angels, lo! they shine,
Their glories splendid and sublime.

There is another arousing consideration in this subject, and that is that so many have made shipwreck of their opportunity who had as good chances as we have. A man takes a good deal of responsibility when he says in regard to any one who goes out of this world: "That man is lost." There is a way of calculating the extinction of physical life. The physician comes in, examines the eye, puts his hand under the arm, feels the pulse, and says: "Life is extinct; the man is gone." But there is no such accurate way of deciding in this world in regard to the death of a soul. But I will say this: "That if you know a man who lives on without any interest in Jesus Christ and is careless in regard to his immortal destiny, and that man lives in that carelessness all the way long until his last hour, and you never hear him say one word of penitence or give any expression of faith or say anything in regard to the eternal world or his preparation for it, if he dies in silence in reference to all these subjects—I will say in regard to that man, it is a warning to you and me. Young people, where are those who entered school with you four years ago? Graduates of colleges, where are those who took the diploma with you on the same commencement day? Business men, where are those who started in commercial life with you twenty years ago?" "Well," you say, "some of them have passed off." There is a business man sitting here who had a partner who left the world, and now he thinks over that case. He says: "That man lived on without any concern about the future world and suddenly he died." Well, I come to you to-day and I say: "What do you suppose was that man's destiny? Where do you suppose he is?" Well, you are embarrassed. You say: "I wouldn't like to take the responsibility." "Well," I say, "you are not bound to take any responsibility. I want your opinion as to where he is, and again you resist the question. You don't want to take the responsibility. O! I wonder if, when we are dead, there will be any awful guessing about where we have gone? Those men sat under the same gospel; they sang the same songs; they had the same opportunities of salvation; they rejected them all. You sit under the same advantages, and you are going through precisely the same process, and I ask if it is not an arousing consideration for you and me. The day will come when you and I will have to quit this life. We may be stalwarts to-day, we may not have an ache or pain, we may be exuberant in our physical health, but our common sense tells us that there will have to come a time when we will put our head to the pillow and die. Oh! If in that hour you hear the upbraiding of conscience and the reverberations of a broken law, and the thunder's of God's anathemas, you will wish you had never been born. Why not come out to-night and have this matter gloriously settled? If there be anything in Christ, and a bright hope of heaven, why not come and get it? It is yours if you will have it. In the name of my Lord Jesus Christ I plainly offer it. Pardon for all your sin. Comfort for all your trouble. Help for all your burdens. The gospel that I preach is not one of destruction, but a gospel of salvation.

Perdidax heard, one night, pounding at his palace door, some messenger who wanted to get in. He said to himself: "They have come to take my life," and he trembled, and he refused to open the door. They kept up pounding and pounding away until he almost fainted with fright; but after awhile, plucking up courage and girding on his sword, and putting his hand on the hilt, he had the door opened, when, lo! the messengers had come to offer him a crown. They said: "The King died one hour ago of apoplexy, and you have been chosen to be his successor, and we have come to offer you the crown." O! I thought how much like that is our rejection of the Gospel, as though it were a matter of overthrow, when it is a matter of coronation. Not to slay, but to enthrone. If, this moment, by giving up your sins fairly and squarely—I do not take the responsibility of saying what your sin is, I do not know—if you would honestly, and before God, this moment give up your sin and take Christ, the news would fly heavenward and would strike seraphic harps, and angels bending in the sky, and ministering spirits flying on errands of salvation, would join wing to wing, and wing to wing, while they cried: "Behold! he prays!"

A FIGHTING HORSE.

[Lander (Wy. T.) Special.]

A desperate battle occurred recently between a Black Hawk stallion and a mountain lion. The stallion was owned by Charles H. Ferguson, a well-known hunter, camped on the bank of a tributary of the Wind River, up in the mountains. He had selected a small bunch of cottonwoods as his temporary home. These gave him both shelter and firewood. A little distance from the camp there stood an enormous cottonwood, apart from all others, beneath which was picketed the stallion. A few nights ago Ferguson was aroused from a sound sleep by a neigh from the stallion. The sound seemed to be one of rage rather than alarm, and hastily arising Ferguson issued from his tent and looked in the direction of the horse. The animal was standing in the full light of a bright moon and seemed to be intently regarding an object in the branches of the tree. As Ferguson's gaze followed that of his horse the branches were violently agitated, a wild yell was heard, a dark object hurled itself through the air and the horse had an enormous mountain lion for a rider. The horse sprang madly in the air, uttering a scream little inferior to that of the lion in shrillness and savagery. Though he returned to the ground with a tremendous concussion he failed to shake the lion from his firm position. Dark spots of blood now appeared on the stallion's shoulders and neck. The lion was tearing his way to the jugular. The horse, apparently realizing his full danger, sprang straight into the thick tangle of boughs. The lion was torn from his bloody seat and cast backward with great violence. The stallion passed through and turned to confront his foe in the open space beyond.

The lion speedily recovered himself, and sprang once more into the branches, and thence made another leap toward the horse; but he missed his aim. The lion began a series of circles nearer and nearer to the horse, and finally made another leap. With the rapidity of thought the stallion changed front, and his hind feet, heavily shod, struck the assailant full in the breast. The stricken animal rolled over and over, giving vent to yells of pain and rage. Once more he made an attack. This time the animal rushed to death. The heels of the powerful steed were planted fairly between the green eyes, and the mountain lion's skull was crushed. It had been fractured from side to side. A few convulsive struggles, a stiffening of the powerful limbs in death, and the stallion stood victor over the corpse of the lion. Ferguson took the skin of the lion home as a trophy.

Automatic Horses.

[N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

An automatic horse has been constructed which is designed to bring the salutary effects of horseback motion to those who are prevented from using the live animal. The rider seats himself upon a saddle firmly attached to a small wooden platform below by means of metal connections. The operator can be swayed about in all directions. Beneath the platform are four padded buffers corresponding to the horse's feet, and by the weight and motion of the operator's body these buffers strike or bump, at each depression upon the foundation below, so that an automatic imitation of horse exercise can be produced. The movement can be made either very easy or very violent, and the imaginative rider can fancy himself on a real steed or a boy's hobby horse at will. But there appears to be no provision made to keep him from looking supremely ridiculous.

The Captain's Precaution.

[San Francisco Argonaut.]

A very popular retired United States naval Captain, not far from New York City, used to walk down to the Post-office every morning in a fine old blue coat, high white collar, and carefully ironed trousers, with a natty cane in his hand, and the end of a fresh white pocket-handkerchief sticking conspicuously out of the back pocket of his coat. The sight used to be impressive, until one morning the usual small boy ran up to him and said: "Captain, you'll lose your handkerchief." "No, my boy," replied the veteran, kindly; "it's pinned."

A True Woman.

[Boston Herald.]

Miss Anna Ripley, of Ruxton, Me., has, unaided, secured the necessary papers and a pension for George W. Eugerly, an old broken-down soldier of her town. While engaged in this work she took the affidavit of every man in his company, from Maine to California, every physician who had treated him, and personally supplied his wants as long as she was able rather than allow him to go to the poor farm. When the pension was granted $1,070 was allowed as arrearage. She asked and received no compensation for her efforts.

FOREVER SLEEP WELL!

[Written and printed for the Chicago Union Veteran Club, of which General U. S. Grant was an honored member.]

Sleep well, comrade Grant; and serene be thy slumber;
And sweet be thy rest, in the tomb of the brave,
While fast-fleeting time—rolling years without number—
Shall prosper the land that unfettered the slave,
With the Nation restored: all her warriors disbanded;
The just rights of each freely granted to all,
And the fame of the heroes thy genius commanded,
Their children, with pride, ever love to recall
For the grand deeds of heroes their children recall.

Sleep well, comrade Grant. For while Time's rolling billows
Shall sweep o'er the graves of the heroes who fell—
While the brave boys in blue slumber under the willows,
And the grey, 'neath the lilies, are sleeping, as well,
Still high over them all waves the Old Flag of beauty—
The Ensign of Right, still afloat in the sun,
Sustained by those heroes, performing their duty,
Defending the land that shall always be one,
Surely must not be two, but shall always be one.

Sleep well, comrade Grant! for a peace-loving Nation,
The victor supreme, over faction and strife—
The victor, but just—fair in every relation,
Moves onward, redeemed, to a glorious life.
It was duty that called thee to marshal our millions,
Engaged in a contest of Right against Wrong;
And to save, in the future, the anguish of billions
From fetters that held down the toilers so long,
From the bondage that held down the toilers so long.

Sleep well, comrade Grant. And when Justice shall rally
Her grand host to combat with Error again,
They will come—like those heroes, now low in the valley,
That brighten the records and glad hearts of men.
For they fought to Restore—fought for Freedom and Honor;
And death is not feared in the great cause of Justice,
For those who may die shall forever sleep well,
Those who die for the Right shall forever sleep well.

Sleep well, comrade Grant; while around the white marble
That shelters thy dust from the cold storms of years
They are planting the cedar, the ivy and myrtle,
And bright, lovely flowers—and bedew them with tears.
Worthy man and thy legions—a million in number,
Where'er they may sleep, in the vale, plain and dell,
True friend and great leader, forever sleep well!
Freedom's chieftain and leader, forever sleep well.

—Charles A. Story.

EASING THE SUPREME COURT.

Why the Davis Bill Was Defeated by the Last Democratic House of Representatives.

President Cleveland's declaration that there is "an imperative necessity for legislation" to relieve the over-burdened Supreme Court meets with general approval. To supply the remedial legislation needed rests on the present Congress as an urgent and imperative duty. The court is now between four and five years behind the docket, and the long delay of justice amounts in many cases to its practical denial. Corporations and other powerful litigants who are able to stand the expense of prolonged litigation can keep cases pending until the controversy is settled by lapse of time rather than according to law, and the victorious party is the one able to wear the other out. A fresh illustration of this fact is furnished by the litigation against the Bell Telephone Company. The alleged fraudulent patent held by this company has only five or six years more to run, and by carrying its cases up to the Supreme Court and prolonging the litigation the corporation can maintain its monopoly for the full time whether it has law on its side or not. To escape this hardship was the sole object in asking the Government to institute a suit to set aside the fraudulent patent. The present condition of the Supreme Court docket gives an enormous advantage to powerful litigants, and in many cases makes it impossible for other suitors to obtain justice.

The Senate at its last session adopted the Davis bill, which aims to deal with the difficulty by establishing an intermediate court midway between the District and Circuit Courts and the supreme tribunal. The function of the new court would be substantially the same as the Appellate Court in the Illinois system. It would diminish the pressure on the higher court by cutting off needless appeals, and the great body of cases could be pushed to final judgment without unnecessary delay. This plan commended itself to the people and to the bar as much better than the schemes for increasing the number of Judges of the Supreme Court and dividing that body into sections—measures of doubtful constitutionality, to say the least. The Davis bill adopted the wiser plan of dealing with the difficulty near the source, and provided a good method for expediting business without disturbing the present organization of the Supreme Court. The measure was thoroughly considered, and the best thing Congress can do is to take it up again and put it through both Houses as soon as possible.

The Democratic House defeated the Davis bill for the partisan reason that it would give a Republican Administration the appointment of eighteen new Circuit Justices. Had it not been for this partisan objection the bill would undoubtedly have been adopted at the last session. The situation is now reversed, and if the bill should be adopted Mr. Cleveland would have the appointment of the new Judges. Nevertheless, it is the duty of the Republican Senate to adhere to its former action and not imitate the Democratic House in denying a needed and important public measure solely because it would enable a few members of the opposite party to obtain office. The appointment of Democratic Judges is an unavoidable evil, and public interests of great importance demand that business in the Federal courts be expedited and the Supreme Judges relieved of needless and frivolous appeals.—Chicago Tribune.

A MICHIGAN MYSTERY.

The Mother of the Ill-Fated Knoch Family of Detroit, Dies Under Circumstances Which Lead to the Belief That She, Too, Was Murdered.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 2.—The Knoch murder case was brought into prominence again yesterday by the sudden death of Mrs. Elizabeth Knoch, the mother of the ill-fated family. She had been sick only a few days, and on Thursday sent for the officers for the purpose, it is said, of making a statement about the recent case of arson and murder. Before they arrived at her bedside she had relapsed into a comatose condition, from which she did not rally. She died early yesterday morning. In the opinion of a physician who accompanied the officers to her home Mrs. Knoch was affected with heart and lung trouble, but there were symptoms of poisoning, and an investigation will be made. If the death of Mrs. Knoch can be traced to the use of poison by any other than herself, it is possible that the deep-laid plot to assassinate the entire Knoch family, if such it is, will be laid bare.

Mrs. Knoch's death heightens the mystery enveloping this family. When the house of Frank Knoch was burned on the night of December 16, and the bodies of Knoch and his wife and children were found in the ruins with bullets in their brains, it was learned by the police that the father of the murdered man also died by an assassin's hand, and that it was thought that a brother had also been murdered, as the latter was found two years ago in a stable with marks of violence on his body, although at that time the case was dismissed on the theory that he was kicked by a horse. The fire at Knoch's house and the murder of the family are attributed to the fact that he showed a roll of bills to friends on the evening of the tragedy, and said that he had $1,000 which he was to pay on his land next day. It is supposed that some one overheard Knoch and went to rob the house a few hours later. But an uncle of Knoch refuses to believe that robbery was the only object, and hints that another purpose enters into the case. He does not say what he thinks this other purpose is, but a neighbor claims that the Knochs stand in the way of somebody securing a rich inheritance in Germany, and that if the detectives are shrewd they will trace the crimes to one person, and that person the least suspected man in the world.

ENGLAND'S LATEST.

RANGOON, Jan. 2.—The proclamation announcing the annexation of Burmah to the British Empire was received yesterday. There was a grand parade in honor of the event, and a large concourse of people gathered to hear the reading. England visits to China a part of Upper Burmah in order to make the Chinese and India in its tier contiguous. India advocates an offensive and defensive alliance between China and India.

The proclamation is addressed to all the inhabitants of Great Britain and India, who are thereby notified that the territories formerly governed by King Theebaw are no longer under his rule, but have become part of her Majesty's dominions and will be administered during her pleasure by officers appointed by the Viceroy of India. There is no mention of a protectorate or even of annexation. It is a plain and simple appropriation by conquest of a territory equal in area to all of New England with New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Virginia added, and a population of over four millions. This has been the programme of the Government, and especially of Lord Randolph Churchill, the Secretary for India, ever since General Prendergast started from Rangoon to invade the country. The delay in issuing the proclamation is due to the time required to obtain the consent of the other Powers. Most of them made no objection, but it is said that the consent of France and Russia was tardily and reluctantly given.

LEPROSY IN MINNESOTA.

LANSING, Ia., Jan. 2.—It is reported here authoritatively that there exists near the village of Spring Grove, in Houston County, Minn., a large number of cases of leprosy. The afflicted persons are all Scandinavians from the northern part of Norway. The first victim was an old man, and the disease was at first thought to be measles, as red spots appeared all over his body. Later he was seized with excruciating pains in his limbs and the extremities began to wither. This continued and the epidermis began to scale off, and now there is but a semblance of skin over the flesh. The body retains its flesh, but the limbs have withered and dried until the fingers and toes seem like sticks ready to drop off. The disease also exists in three or four other families, all related. Physicians from Decorah pronounce it leprosy, and say that the disease was imported.

SWINDLED BY A FORGER.

CHEYENNE, Wy. T., Jan. 1.—The Stock-Growers' National Bank received Wednesday night from a bank in Montgomery, Ala., a letter acknowledging the receipt of a letter purporting to have been written by the Stock-Growers' National Bank on December 18, identifying George L. Sanders, and requesting it to cash a draft purporting to have been drawn by the Stock-Growers' National bank for $6,000 on the Fourth National Bank of New York and inclosing the signature of Sanders, sealed with the bank's seal. No such letter having been issued, the Montgomery Bank was wired accordingly, and telegrams were sent to all the correspondents of the Stock-Growers National Bank East and South warning them not to negotiate forged drafts. It is feared that the Montgomery bank has been victimized.

In a Sad Condition.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Latest reports from the west coast of Ireland are heartrending and show that prompt and liberal help for the poverty-stricken people is sorely needed.

HOME AND FARM.

—It is now stated that a raw potato is far more effectual in beautifying the complexion than any cosmetics. The face should be rubbed with the freshly cut vegetable then washed and then treated to gentle friction.—Cincinnati Times.

—To destroy the black buffalo or carpet moth, which eats straight lines across carpets, dresses, etc., take corrosive sublimate of double strength, one tablespoonful in a quart of boiling water, and saturate the floors and woodwork thoroughly.—Boston Budget.

—Hickorynut Cake: One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, half a cupful of milk, four eggs, one cupful of chopped raisins, one cupful of chopped hickorynuts, two cupfuls of flour, half a teaspoonful of soda, juice of half a lemon. Bake in two square loaves, and frost.—The Cook.

—Cranberry Sauce: A young housekeeper thinks she has discovered the proper way to cook cranberries. For a quart of berries place a pint of water on the stove with sufficient sugar. Let the water come to a boil, and when boiling put in the cranberries and boil briskly about fifteen minutes.—Western Rural.

—Egg Sauce: One cup of chicken broth, heated and thickened, with tablespoonful of butter rolled thickly in flour; poured over two beaten eggs; boiled one minute, with tablespoonful parsley stirred in; then seasoned and poured upon pounded yolks of two boiled eggs placed in bottom of bowl. Stir up, and it is ready.—The Household.

—Most farmers feed corn to everything. Corn to the cows, corn to the calves, corn to the colts, and corn to the pigs. What were oats made for? For all young animals. Corn is good to fatten grown-up animals and to be a part food to fatten young ones. Very little of it should be used for food for young animals, as it does not contain enough of the elements to make a perfect body.—Troy Times.

—Nothing tarnishes silver more quickly than rubber, the ring around the neck of a fruit jar being enough to color a whole closet full of silver in one night. Coal gas is also inimical to bright silver or plated ware, but a lump of gum camphor in a closet will do much to protect the goods. Silver spoons, discolored by contact with cooked eggs, are easily brightened by rubbing with common salt.—Chicago Times.

—Mustard Dressing: Some one asking for a recipe for a nice mustard dressing will find, I think, that this will suit: Take six eggs with three teaspoonfuls of mixed mustard, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar, one and one-half cup of the best salad oil, half cup of water and one cup of vinegar. Mix thoroughly and place in a water bath. Stir constantly until it creams, then put away for use. If kept in a cool place it will be good for a long time.—Toronto Mail.

WILLOW CULTURE.

It Opens a Large Field for Useful and Profitable Industry.

Considerable attention has been turned of late, in this country, to the cultivation of the basket willows, and their manufacture. That a desirable and promising industry is opened to us in this direction is indicated by the fact that we import willow rods and baskets ready made to the amount of more than $3,000,000 a year. The cultivation of the willows, and their manufacture, is simple and easy, and may be carried on with hardly any capital on any scale, large or small. They are readily propagated from cuttings about a foot in length, taken from well-ripened shoots, and set in the ground in a slanting direction, and to such a depth as to be nearly or quite covered with earth. Cultivators differ in opinion as to the distance apart as to which the cuttings should be set, some saying two feet each way, others eighteen inches one way by twelve the other. The closer they are set the less is the tendency to throw out side shoots, which are undesirable. The ground in which they are set should be well pulverized, and should be kept free from weeds by cultivation, for a year or two, until the plants are well established, and send up shoots vigorous and numerous enough to shade the ground, so that weeds will not grow. The shoots should be cut close to the ground soon after the leaves fall in autumn.

A large field of useful and profitable industry is here open to us. Basket work may be carried on upon thousands of farms and in thousands of dwellings without interfering with other and necessary labor. No machinery is needed. In the long, leisure evenings of winter, in many a farmhouse, while pleasant talk or profitable reading is taking place around a cheerful fire, the fingers of one or more could be fashioning the pliant twigs into forms of usefulness and beauty; and the product, if more than sufficient for home needs, would find a ready and remunerative market. Why should we send three thousand miles over the ocean for willow twigs when we can grow them as easily as we do corn? And why hire fingers in France or Germany to weave them into baskets for us when we can do the work equally well?—N. Y. Independent.

THE ROTHSCHILDS.

Doing Business on a Capital of One Thousand Million Dollars.

The combined capital of the great firm of the Rothschilds is estimated by persons pretending to know (although nobody but themselves can really know anything about it) at no less a sum than $1,000,000,000, fully one-half of which has been gained within twenty-five years. Their opportunities for making money, which are almost unlimited, are perpetually improved. Their credit being of the highest, they might continue their immense banking business indefinitely with little or no capital. It is hardly more than one hundred years since the founder of the family and its fortunes, Mayer Anselm, of very poor Jewish parentage, was an humble clerk in a Hanover counting house. He afterward established himself as a banker in Frankfort. The discreet investment of $5,000,000 of silver, deposited with him in 1806 by the Elector William on the invasion of his territory by the French, was the source of the enormous wealth of the firm. It was deposited without interest, but Rothschild paid interest regularly and returned the capital to the Elector's son seventeen years later. The Rothschilds have never been so rich as now, but they have nothing like the power they once had, probably because the capital of the world has so rapidly increased. It used to be said that kings could not go to war without their consent. Those days have forever passed.—N. Y. Commercial-Advertiser.

PERCHERON HORSES.

40 Years' Experience.

To a Tribune reporter, Mr. A. S. Chamberlain, who for 40 years has been the proprietor of the "Old Bull's Head Stables," New York City, said: "I keep exchange and sale stables for horses, thousands of which annually come to my stables from all parts of the country. I don't deal on my own account to any extent. The French horses have good feet and stand the pavements better than the Clydesdales, and bring a better price on the market. The Clydesdales are shorter-lived, thin waisted and lack action. Comparatively few of them are now brought to this market. The demand is largely for French horses. I would advise the farmer and breeders, who are breeding horses to sell on the New York market, to breed from French horses in preference to all others."—Chicago Tribune. Percheron stallions of the finest quality and with choicest pedigrees, registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France, are annually imported in immense numbers. Within the past two years 1,000 have been imported and collected by one firm alone.

CHARLEVOIX!

ITS FUTURE.--DESTINED TO BECOME ONE OF THE LEADING CITIES OF NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The following extract is from a letter written by a gentleman who has spent three resort seasons here:

. . . The Location on the shore of Lake Michigan, at the point where the waters of those most charming sheets, Pine and Round Lakes empty into it, renders it the natural headquarters for the important Shipping interests of the entire Pine Lake Region.

Other small villages may thrive and grow, but they must from the nature of things, always pay tribute and owe allegiance to Charlevoix.

At least two Railway Companies are anxiously looking towards Charlevoix as a terminus, and in my opinion the place offers inducements for the operations of Capital, second to few points. . .

I would say farther, if your patience were not exhausted, that at the store of Stockman & Iddings' there may be found one of the finest assortments of HARDWARE, IRON & NAILS, STOVES, TIN-WARE, PAINTS, OILS, BRUSHES, and everything in the line of BUILDERS MATERIALS, in Michigan. What is more, their prices are reasonable and they WILL NOT be undersold by anyone.

Historical Society.

The Historical Society were to have observed Longfellow night at the parlors of W. P. Brown last Friday evening, but owing to the blizzard which prevailed, the Executive committee postponed the programme until Friday evening of this week at the same place.

The few members who attended last Friday evening, however, remained until after ten, spending the evening in a most enjoyable manner.

New Establishment.

Last fall when Frank Craine left Charlevoix to accept a position in a Cadillac house, there were many expressions of regret among his large circle of friends here. Consequently when he came back to Charlevoix last week for the purpose of making arrangements to stock the new brick building of Major Green's with a full line of Dry Goods, Carpets, Fancy Goods, etc., he met with many good wishes for success.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

A Short Sermon on Long Life for the Human Race.

How We Shorten Our Lives by Disobedience to Natural Laws—The Religion of Health—Christianity and Hygiene.

Dr. Talmage, in a recent sermon, took the subject of "Long Life" as his theme, the following text being used as the foundation:

That thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Exodus xx, 12.

January 31, [illegible]. The old almanacs and the old memorandums fling aside. Everything to remind us of the fact that another volume in the history of time has begun, and every thoughtful man and woman at such time discusses the length or the shortness of human life. Faithful discharge of duty is in my text set forth as having much to do with the length of our earthly stay. Through the mistakes of its friends religion has been chiefly associated with sick-beds and graveyards. This whole subject to many people is odorous with chlorine and carbolic acid. There are people who can not pronounce the word "religion" without hearing in it the clipping chisel of the tombstone [illegible]. It is high time that this thing were changed and that religion, instead of being represented as a hearse to carry out the dead, should be represented as a chariot in which the living are to triumph. Religion, so far from subtracting from one's vitality, is a glorious addition. It is sanative, curative, hygienic. It is good for the eyes, good for the ears, good for the spleen, good for the digestion, good for the nerves, good for the muscles. When David in the Psalms prays that religion may be dominant he does not speak of it as a [illegible] sickness or an emaciation, or an attack of moral and spiritual cramp; he speaks of it as "the saving health of all nations," while God pronounces long life to the pious, saying: "With long life will I satisfy thee."

The fact is that men and women die too soon. It is high time that religion joined the band of medical science in attempting to improve human longevity. Adam lived 930 years. Methuselah lived 969 years. As late in the history of the world as Vespasian, there were at one time in his empire ...

... night heavens—it is the work of God's fingers. His life-giving power—it is the breath of the Almighty. His dominion—the Government shall be upon His shoulder. A body so divinely honored and so divinely constructed, let us be careful not to abuse it. When it becomes a Christian duty to take care of our health, is not the whole [illegible] toward long life? If I toss my watch about recklessly and drop it on the pavement and wind it up any time of day or night I happen to think of it, and often let it run down, and while you are careful with your watch and never abuse it and wind it up at just the same hour every night, and put it in a place where it will not suffer from the violent changes of the atmosphere, which watch will last the longer? Common sense answers. Now, the human body is God's watch. You see the hands of the watch, you see the face of the watch, but the beating of the heart is the ticking of the watch. Oh, be careful and do not let it run down!

Again, I remark that practical religion is a friend of long life, in the fact that it is a protest against all the dissipations which injure and destroy the health. Bad men and women live a very short life. Their sins kill them. I know hundreds of good old men, but I do not know half a dozen bad old men. Why? They do not get old. Lord Byron died at Missolonghi at thirty-six years of age, himself his own Mazeppa, his unbridled passions that dashed with him into the desert. Edgar A. Poe died at Baltimore at thirty-eight years of age. The black raven that alighted on the bust above his chamber door was delirium tremens.

Only this and nothing more.

Napoleon Bonaparte lived only just beyond mid-life, then died at St. Helena, and one of his doctors said that his disease was induced by excessive snuffing. The hero of Austerlitz, the man who by one stamp of his foot in the center of Europe shook the earth, killed by a snuff-box! Oh, how many people we have known who have not lived out half their days because of their dissipations and indulgences! Now, practical religion is a protest against all dissipation of any kind. "But," you say, "professors of religion have fallen, professors of religion have got drunk, professors of religion have misappropriated trust funds, professors of religion have absconded." Yes, but they threw away their religion before they did their morality. If a man on a White Star Line steamer bound ...

... verish people of the world, try this Almighty sedative; you will live twenty-five years longer under its soothing power. It is not chloral that you want, or more time that you want; it is the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Again, practical religion is a friend of long life, in the fact that it removes all corroding care about a future existence. Every man wants to know what is to become of him. If you get on board a railroad train you want to know at what depot it is going to stop. If you get on board a ship you want to know into what harbor it is going to run; and if you should tell me you have no interest in what is to be your future destiny, I would, in as polite way as I know how, tell you I did not believe you. Before I had this matter settled with reference to my future existence, the question almost worried me into ruined health. The anxieties men have upon this subject, if put together, would make a martyrdom. This is a state of awful unhealthiness. There are people who fret themselves to death for fear of dying. I want this morning to take the strain off your nerves and the depression off your soul, and I will make two or three experiments.

Experiment the first. When you go out of the world it does not make any difference whether you have been good or bad, or whether you believed truth or error, you will go straight to glory. "Impossible," you say; "my common sense, as well as my religion, teaches me the bad and the good can not live together forever. You give me no comfort in that experiment."

Experiment the second—When you leave this world you will go into an intermediate state, where you can get converted and prepared for heaven. "Impossible," you say; "as the tree falleth so it must lie, and I can not postpone to an intermediate state that reformation which ought to have been effected in this state."

Experiment the third—There is no future world; when a man dies that is the last of him. Do not worry about what you are to do in another state of being; you will not do anything. "Impossible," you say; "there is something that tells me that death is not the appendix but the preface; there is something that tells me that on this side of the grave I only get started, and that I shall go on forever. My power to think says 'Forever;' my affections say 'Forev-...

Notable Banquet at Columbus, O., in Celebration of Jackson's Victory at New Orleans—Speeches by Hoadly, McDonald and Thurman—Watterson's Mild Criticism of the President.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 9.—The Jackson Club of Columbus ... There were three hundred guests, including a number of Ohio Congressmen, members of the Legislature and State officials. The arrangement and service were complete. Hon. H. J. Booth, President of the club, was master of ceremonies and Hon. T. E. Rowell master of toasts.

Hon. Joseph E. McDonald of Indiana responded to the toast "Andrew Jackson." Judge Allen G. Thurman spoke to "The Constitution and the Democracy," though his remarks were quite brief, owing to the late hour when the speaking began.

Governor Hoadly responded to the toast: "The State of Ohio—at eighty-three the Belle of the Union," in a humorous speech, extemporaneous in character, in which no important question at issue was touched upon. Toasts were also responded to by Hons. George L. Converse, Joseph H. Outhwaite, John F. Follett and General Durbin Ward.

Henry Watterson, in response to the toast, "The Democratic Press," paid a tribute to its work and long-suffering and ... Referring to President Cleveland Mr. Watterson continued: ...

Some munths ago, me and three others feelin that we wuz outraged by the retenshun in offis uv a nigger Postmaster wich hed held the posishen twenty-four years, with one breef interval, pitched him out onto the sidewalk on his disgustin flat nose, and I took possession uv the place and perceeded to open the letters deposited therein wich wuz addresst to the Looziana Lottry Co. For thus assertin my rights, I wuz arrested and incarserated in a Basteel, where I hev languished ever since. Yisterday ther cum from Washton this breef message to the Sheriff:

I refoozed to go. The note addid insult to injery. To discharge me now prevents my bein tride and shinin ez a marter afore the Dimocrisy uv the kentry, and besides to turn me out uv my comfortable quarters in the jale, in the dead of winter, without givin me the ollis to live onto, is a outrage. I wuz at least decently fed, and the jale is warm, and Bascom did rebent occashunally, to the pint uv sendin me sum sustenance, and altogether I wuz doin very well. Wat will become uv me I don't see. It's a cold world.

My release wuz made the occashun uv a demonstrashun on the part uv the citizens, that is a part uv the citizens. Bascom, Deekin Pogram, Issaker Gavitt and Kernel M'Pelter embraced the opportoonity to git in sum fine work, and they succeeded in gettin enuff others together at the meetin house to make a respectable show. I wuz escorted thither, fur effeck, leanin on the arms of Bascom and the Deekin ez tho the long confinement hed undermined my helth and destroyed my strength. REPUBLICAN PROGRESSION.

How the Anticipated Growth of the South is to Be Retarded by Supporting a Niggardly Policy.

Some impatience is evident among the Southern people at the expressed intention of the Democratic party, now that it controls public expenditures, of returning to the cheese-paring policy of ante-rebellion days. Threats are made that, if this course is pursued, it may not be for the interest of the South to stand solidly by the Democracy any longer. The sacrifices that section has made for the benefit of the party now in possession of the Government are known only too well. It has been the hewer of wood and the drawer of water for the Democratic party for twenty years. It has taken the risk of unlawful political methods and withstood just censure and obloquy in order that the Democracy might have a chance to win the Presidency, and now, when it should receive its reward for this sacrifice and patience, it is told that the old niggardly policy of a quarter of a century ago is to be begun again.

This is naturally discouraging to the South, which wishes to enter upon a career of prosperity. The people have awakened to a dim sense of the possibilities of that section. It has taken them long to learn that the black man would work better in a state of freedom than in bondage, but to-day the straightest Democratic papers are rejoicing that the South has the best and most trustworthy working class anywhere to be found. With this question settled, the Southern people are anxious to share in the boundless prosperity which they see has blessed the North. They want some of the immigration which flows in a ceaseless current to the great States and Territories of the West, and the use of some of the capital which crowds Northern bank vaults to cultivate their rich lands and work their inexhaustible mines. Their harbors need to be cleared and their rivers dredged and other improvements begun, which the general Government alone is rich enough to undertake. ...

UNCLE ISAM.

The Little Reminder He Placed in the Way of His Pastor.

"Mas' Jack," said old Uncle Isam, "I wants ter ax you to do a favior fur me pu' ole niggah."

"You bet I will, Uncle Isam. What is it?"

"Well, honey, yer see, it's dishyer way. Our Brudder Gab'l is a good ole man, one de seasonin' ob de y'arth, but wen de Holy Sperrit gits 'im to preachin' an' gits excited, he beats on de Big Bible till he dun bus' de kiver clean off'n two fine Bibles dis yer year, an' we can't 'ford ter pervide Bibles so frekwunt fur ole Brudder Gab'l ter poun' on same as [illegible]. Dis yer de way he do.

"'Yes, my chilluns (bam! wid he fis' on de book), ef yer don' stop quarlin' (bam!) an' lyin' (bam!) an' stealin' (bam!), you's gwine ter de lowy furnace ob struction, sho' an' sartin' (bam! bam! bam!), an' de good Lawd ain't gwine ter put out de leetle teenchy tip-een' ob His finger ter lif' yer out'n de pit fillin' wid sulphur (bam!) an' brimstone (bam! bam!!), des lak ole Aunt Kizzy's gumbo pot wen she's a whoopin' up dinner, an' you pore souls bobbin' up an' down in torment lak de lysters (bam! bam! bam!), wid bof fis's lak he beatin' de dead march fur de Kingdom come.'

"Now, Mas' Jack, ole Satan's hisse'f, can't stan' no sich tauntin' ez Brudder Gab'l lay on de back ob dat good book—an' so we breddren an' sisters kinder met up tergedder an' sturb our min's how ter perwent it widout 'ffin' de ole man, cause de ole man's monstus tetchy, an' we all 'nanimus' greed on dish yer plan."

Here Unk'l Isam produced a large card.

"I wants you jes ter print 'spacious lak on dish yer big kyard:

Visitin' Breddren,
Please don't beat on de Bible.

"Dat'll be a leetle 'minder you see, an' ole Brudder Gab'l he'll cotch on. He'll cotch on. I jes tack 'im on de sidge ob de pulpit, an' wen Brudder Gab'l git excited an' wan' ter bam on somfin, he jes' batter on de desk, an' let de new Bible res'."

The next time I met Unk'l Isam, I hailed him. "Well, Unk'l Isam, how did it work?"

"Wuk, chile? Hes lak cunjin (conjuring)—slick ez smoove ez wax. Brudder Gab'l setter clar he th'oat, and look grouty at fus' but he soon beam out agin, an' wuz hammerin' way on de ole desk lak he wuz beatin' sofky, an' sendin' us all ter fire an' brim stun lak he 'joyed hese'f doin' it till some ob de young gals fell ter shedin' tears.

"But he dun stop poundin' on de Bible from dat day til dis honey—sho's you bawn!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Dude and His Dog.

The fashion of wearing a dog, either loose or on a string, still prevails among young men. Yesterday in one of the hotels a slim youth came down stairs into the office with a pug on a long yellow ribbon. The "sllm" looked as though he had on corsets and was really too sweet to be out of a glass case. He stepped to the counter and gazed at the register. The dog began an inspection tour as far as his tether would permit. He went around the dude and between his legs until he used up the surplus string and was choking so his eyes stuck out like pegs on a hat rack. Suddenly the owner stepped back, trod on the dog and got his legs tied up in a hard knot. Then he fell and there was a wild commingling of dude, plug hat, dog and howl. When the youth had pushed the dents out of his hat he looked at the dog and said: "Oh, you saucy doggy. I'm so wicked that if you and I were alone I should say something real naughty." Then he took a bottle of perfume from a pocket, sprinkled the pug and said: "Theah, now, we'll go on the promenade."—Detroit Tribune.

Why Jews Live so Long.

The New England Medical Monthly comments very favorably on the proverbial long and healthful lives of the Jews. Dr. Picard holds that this superiority is due to their stringent health laws. The Mosaic, like the older Egyptian code, is very stringent regarding the eating of flesh and other articles of food. Of the animals examined a large proportion are always condemned as unfit for food. People who eat meat indiscriminately are very prone to disorders of the blood and of the kidneys, for meat is composed of nitrogen, which the kidneys have to remove from the blood, and of course they can not do this successfully except by the aid of Warner's safe cure, the best kidney strengthener, unless it be temperately partaken of and only the very best meat is used. Jews also use alcoholic liquors very sparingly and thus keep up good digestion, and then again they are a holiday-loving and Sabbath-observing class.—Housekeeper.

Drawback to Progressive Euchre.

[Harper's Bazar.]

The only obstacle to the success of the game in a social circle in either city or country is the occasional effort on the part of the hostess to make a display in the prizes or in the supper. To do so is a mistake; it has in many cases been found to mar a whole winter's success, by making members of a coterie feel that because they could not afford an equal display, they would not invite the company to their houses at all. Besides, there is always greater freedom and more joviality when the restraints and oppressions of mere ostentation are absent.

Practicing "Mind Cure."

[Milwaukee Sentinel.]

When you see a Boston person shut his eyes, drop his jaw and loll his head as though his muscles were ruptured, there is no need to send for a doctor. He is going through the process of "devitalization"—reducing himself to a state of idiocy to rest his mind. Says the Ionia Statesman, (Dem.): 'Mr. Manning must change his methods or else get out of the treasury department. Otherwise the next President will not be a Democrat.'

Even the Mormons themselves are beginning to realize that they must go. The laugh with which they greeted the Edmunds law when that measure was enacted has turned to something very like a sob.

The idea of John Sherman walking away with the Senatorship for six [illegible] years by a vote of every Republican in the legislature is gall to the Ohio Democrats who have for years set up nights to abuse and misrepresent him.

Ex-Governor Long of Massachusetts, says that since ex-Congressman Herr and Cox retired there are no members of the house capable of a true quality of humor. Still there are members of the present house who make the country laugh.

Maybury struck at his own state, a foul blow, when he introduced his bill placing iron ore, copper, salt and lumber on the free list. Four of the chief industries of Michigan attacked by a man representing Canadian interests and British ideas rather than the interests of Michigan and American ideas. He is a disgrace to the constituency that chose him, and that is the worst of the eleven—the denizens of the slums of Detroit.—Escanaba Iron Port.

HOW TO TRAVEL.

Rules for Passengers Which Differ Slightly from the Golden Rule.

First, please keep off the grass. Travelers without baggage must pay in advance. So must travelers with too much baggage. Second, the traveler who has never before been twenty miles away from home is permitted to sit in one seat and put his feet on another. Third, the man who plants his dusty boots on plush furniture at home and in his friend's house is expected to conduct himself in a like manner on a train. Fourth, gas burned after four o'clock will be charged extra. Fifth, the passenger who knows the least about anything is particularly requested to talk the loudest about everything. Sixth, whenever the conductor calls "all aboard," all passengers who are taking their first trip in a railway car will shout, "if you can't get a board get a rail." This will enable the conductor to pick them out without any trouble. Seventh, the passenger who has been "aboard" (Cook's excursionist, Europe, Asia and Africa in ninety days), will please give accounts of the fabulous speed and superior comforts of continental railways; (two days and ninety seconds from Boulogne to Paris including stops). Eighth, all loose change in possession of the passengers may be safely intrusted to the train boy, who will deposit it in a safe place, and give you collateral security for the same. Ninth, no smoking about the [illegible]. Tenth, please to remember the porter. Eleventh, when the brakeman fills his cheek with half an apple, just cribbed from the train boy, and shouts, "Owwowwollowallockalowai—" and smashes the rest of it into atoms by banging the door shut, get off; that is your station. Twelfth, when you show your baggage checks to the conductor, and he says "dounnonoth 'bout 'tay task I ugglshmast," and hurries on, put your check back in your pocket and trust to luck. Thirteenth, no passenger may smoke a fragrant 25-cent imported cigar anywhere save in the cattle car set apart for a smoking-room, but he may fill his jaws with navy plug, and spit all over the whole train from headlight to rear brake, if he wishes. Fourteenth, always abuse the financial and mechanical management of the road over which you are travelling to the brakeman; it's all his fault that the road isn't run in your interest. Fifteenth, passengers will bear in mind that the brakeman's name is "Johnny;" never call him anything else. The conductor may be formally addressed as "Say, George," or if his appearance is usually impressive, you [illegible]

ELK RAPIDS MACHINE —AND— BOILER WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

A MAN OF HONOR.

Colonel Skerrett, Major Marsh, and Captain Pickering were sitting in their room at the Hotel Anglais, Paris. They were Americans on their travels, all three rough-looking down-easters, who had gone through the worst fire of the civil war. Dr. Vicaire, surgeon in the French army, was standing in front of them, regarding them with a severe air.

"I come to denounce to you as you have insult my friend, M. le Lieutenant Foulon. He demand ze satisfaction," said Dr. Vicaire, particularly addressing Colonel Skerrett. "You have kick his dog. You write apology, ver goot. You write no apology, you choose ze—ze—ah! vat you call l'arme—ze."

"Weepons," said Major Marsh, coming to his assistance. Dr. Vicaire bowed.

"Apologize for kicking his darned cur!" shouted the Colonel. "What did it come snapping and barking at my heels for? I would kick Mr. Foulong himself if he did that."

"Ah!" replied the doctor, "var goot! Insult additional;" and he blew his nose like a flourish of trumpets.

Colonel Skerrett was as brave a man as ever stood in boots, but besides his conscientious objections to a duel, the cause of quarrel was so ludicrous that he only answered with a burst of laughter.

"Ah!" said the Doctor, calmly, but reddening. "Insult tree." And he took a prodigious pinch of snuff.

The three friends looked at each other. Major Marsh took the word.

"My friend will allow me to act for him. We have the choice of weapons?"

"Yes."

"Then I choose them that nature provided. Fists?"

"Feest!" said the doctor, pondering. "You mean ze-ze."

Major Marsh explained in pantomime.

"Sir!" cried the fiery doctor, "you make ze game of me! I see you after my friend have ze satisfaction."

"Don't get so hot, now. What do you say to stuffed clubs in a darkened room?"

It took a long time to make the doctor understand this proposition, but when he did he rejected it with constantly increasing wrath. Captain Pickering suggested a rough-and-tumble in a pit, kick, scratch, bite, claw, and gouge. Major Marsh thought an excellent way of settling the difficulty would be for the two adversaries to go into shallow water and see which could drown the other. Finally, Colonel Skerrett suggested that they should bring a keg of powder on the field; cast lots; and whichever lost should sit upon the keg and apply the cigar he had just been smoking to a hole in the keg. Dr. Vicaire tore his hair and rejected one and all.

"Why," said the Major, "it 'pears to me that we haven't got the choice of weepons at all."

"Of ze weapon, yes! But this is no weapon. Swords, dagger, peestol, gun—zey all weapon. But ze gouge, ze feest, ze club rempli, or vat you call ze stuff clubs—oh, monsieur!" and the worthy Doctor stamped with rage.

"Doctor," said the Major quietly, "the last suggestion of Colonel Skerrett is one that has been acted on, in at least one case in one of the Southern States of America. If your friend wants an out and out dooel, he will accept the offer of a barrel of powder under them conditions. If he don't he is only foolin' with the matter. People [illegible] blaze away at each other [illegible] an hour and [illegible] pigs. When we [illegible] States we do it."

"Sir!" shrieked [illegible] trated rage. "Y[illegible] troon, scelerat! I [illegible] hotel. I and my [illegible] ze—eh!—ze whip [illegible]" rushed from the r[illegible] frantically in one [illegible] at his hair with th[illegible]

M. Foulon advan[illegible] bowed courteously [illegible] dressing Colonel Sk[illegible] fect English:

"I have just seen [illegible] Possibly he mis[illegible] what he told me, [illegible] you made proposition[illegible] man would make, [illegible] no gentleman. It [illegible] if you are a cow[illegible] aware that your [illegible] mode of the duello [illegible] parts of your coun[illegible] friend Vicaire was [illegible] the practice is irreg[illegible] consideration, a[illegible] your proposal of a k[illegible] the specified condi[illegible] oblige me by nam[illegible] place."

"Say to-morrow [illegible] afternoon. I reckon [illegible] Plessis, on the road [illegible] quiet enough place [illegible] keg of powder for y[illegible] will supply the one [illegible]"

"Very well, sir," [illegible] ing. "I shall be ther[illegible] be rigidly adhered t[illegible] cigar which one had [illegible] to the open hole in th[illegible]"

"Precisely," answ[illegible]

"I presume," said [illegible] with a sinister smil[illegible] event the service of [illegible] geon will be unnecess[illegible]"

"I am sure of that," [illegible] with a grin.

Foulon left the room [illegible] had gone Colonel Sk[illegible] flight this here devil, [illegible] to be blowed to ato[illegible] gwine to let that there [illegible] self to atoms." The t[illegible] measures accordingly.

The next day, at the [illegible] the five men, all smok[illegible] were on the ground. [illegible] brought its powder-ke[illegible] Major and Dr. Vicaire [illegible] Major won.

Foulon turned gha[illegible] walked firmly to the [illegible] Americans had brought [illegible] on it. It was an ordin[illegible] and Major Marsh kn[illegible] bung. All then retired [illegible] tance except the Colonel [illegible] standing by Foulon's si[illegible] down whose will face t[illegible] rolling, took his cigar fr[illegible] and advanced it, still gl[illegible] open bung-hole.

"Certainly it is," [illegible] lips quivering in spite [illegible]

"Well," said the Colo[illegible] you be'nt such a darned [illegible] a lighted cigar into a keg of powder, be you? Where was you born?"

"Sir," replied the lieutenant, vainly endeavoring to hold the cigar motionless in his shaking hand. "I have given my word that if I lost the toss-up I should put this lit cigar——"

"Hold on; you didn't say lit."

"Well, the cigar I was smoking."

"Put it out then."

"Sir, you have run the risk that I ran. I have lost, and I but do as you would have done. I will put this lighted cigar into this bung-hole——"

"Put in the chawed-up end, then."

"You insult me again, sir!"

"Bless your heart! You fire up a darned sight easier than this ere powder ever will. Do you think that I would put the burning end of a cigar into the bung-hole of a keg full of powder? Great Jerusalem?"

"I have told you again, and I repeat it, that you are no gentleman. But I—I am a man of honor. Bah! You shall see me die as one. I keep my promise."

Foulon slowly advanced the burning cigar toward the opening in the keg beneath.

"Go away here, you shall be kill!" shouted Vicaire to the Colonel; but the latter remained quietly beside the victim. Vicaire covered his face with his hands, and waited for the awful moment which was to blow his friend to atoms. There was a dead silence, and then a slight hiss was heard. Vicaire looked up. Foulon, his face purple with rage, was holding his cigar, after repeatedly poking it into the bung-hole. The Colonel was one broad grin.

"Is this powder?" asked Foulon.

"Tooth powder," answered the Colonel; "cost almighty."

"But," said Foulon, shaking with rage instead of fear, "if you had lost the toss-up our keg was full of gunpowder. What then?"

"I'd have put the cigar out before I put it in," said the Colonel.

"Ah!" murmured Foulon.

"Or stuck in the chewed-up end. Hold on to the terms you know."

Foulon calmly walked to his carriage. He and Vicaire hoisted in their keg of gunpowder and followed it themselves.

"Sir!" shouted Foulon to the Colonel, "I said you were no gentleman. I say now you are a coward."

The Colonel smiled.

For three days the friends walked about Paris and saw both Foulon and Vicaire several times. They were not posted in the cafes, for the Frenchmen feared the storm of ridicule which a knowledge of the grotesque duel would bring upon them. Neither were they horsewhipped, for Vicaire argued that they would probably retaliate, and in such a case the whipping would be only a modified form of the duel a la club rempli.

On the fourth day after this "duel" the three friends happened to be on one of the large and beautiful steamboats carrying excursions down the Seine. Colonel Skerrett, like a consistent Yankee, was in the pilot house, watching the working of the wheel. He came down afterward and sauntered back to where his two friends were standing. Near them were no less individuals than Foulon and Vicaire. Neither party addressed the other. The boat was in the middle of the river. For a long distance on either side the banks were straight, and the tide was flowing directly down the middle channel. Suddenly arose a cry of fire. A wild stampede of passengers in the bow of the boat was made toward the stern, and Foulon, who was standing near an opening in the railing was thrown from his balance. As he was falling overboard the Colonel stretched out his [illegible] Colonel stretched out his [illegible] and [illegible] him by the collar [illegible] The French[illegible] the Colonel [illegible] with a friendly smile [illegible] adversary. Interesting News Compilation.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

TUESDAY, Jan. 5.—Congress re-assembled. In the Senate the credentials of John W. Daniel, of Virginia, were presented. A bill was passed to legalize the Ninth Territorial Assembly of Wyoming. Bills were introduced to substitute silver dollars for gold coin and currency in reserve funds of the Treasury; to increase the pension for total helplessness, to adjust account of laborers under the eight-hour law; to provide for the erection of monuments in Washington to Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant, at a cost of $1,000,000 each, to establish a National University in the District of Columbia; to repeal the Civil Service Reform act, and to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children. In the House 790 bills were introduced. The more notable were: To remove restrictions on the coinage of the standard silver dollar; to abolish internal revenue taxation; to appropriate $250,000 for a monument to General Grant in New York; to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs, to reform the civil service; to repeal the duty on sugar; to prevent fraudulent entries on the public domain; to repeal the tobacco tax; to tax the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, to give honorably discharged soldiers and sailors preference in public appointments, and to deprive polygamists of the right of suffrage.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 6.—In the Senate Mr. Beck's resolution regarding the payment of duties in coin was called up and discussed, Mr. Edmund's Utah bill was considered and the bill to aid in establishing common schools was favorably reported. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to fix the time for the meeting of Congress in 1886, and every second year thereafter, on the first Monday in October, and in 1887 and every second year thereafter, on the second Monday in November. In the House 882 bills were introduced. Among them were: For the free coinage of the silver dollar, to limit it, and to suspend it; to force National banks to keep a large reserve of silver, to retire the trade dollar, and to direct the calling in of $50,000,000 of three per cent. bonds; providing for filling vacancies in the offices of President and Vice-President, to repeal the Civil Service act, and to authorize the employment of one letter-carrier in each town where the postal revenues are more than $7,000 and less than $10,000 a year.

THURSDAY, Jan. 7.—Long discussions took place in the Senate upon the Utah bill and the affairs of the Pension Office. [illegible]

SILVER AND GOLD.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The Vice-President and General Manager of the Wells & Fargo Company, Mr. John J. Valentine, has issued his annual statement of production of precious metals covering the last calendar year. It shows that the States and Territories west of the Missouri River, including British Columbia and receipts by express from the west coast States of Mexico, produced as follows: Gold, $27,220,294; silver, $46,180,939; copper, $7,838,036; lead, $8,562,791; total, $90,181,260. California leads, of course, in the production of gold, the total for the year having been approximately $12,338,000. Colorado follows with $2,653,000, Dakota stands third and very close to Colorado, with $2,606,623; Montana is fourth, with $2,091,000, Nevada fifth, with $1,253,355, and Idaho sixth, with $1,105,946. No other State or Territory produced quite three-quarters of a million. Colorado stands at the head in the production of silver, with $18,713,000. Next comes Montana, $12,133,512; next Utah, $8,893,372; next Nevada, $7,959,766, next Arizona, $5,748,720. California produced $2,098,658. The largest product of gold in the territory covered by these returns since 1870 was $44,880,223 in 1877. The silver product for the same year was $45,846,109, which was exceeded only in 1882, when the product was $48,133,039.

NORTHWEST INDIANS.

MONTREAL, Can., Jan. 8.—The Government has received urgent and earnest warnings from army officers and the best-informed priests in the Northwest that another Indian outbreak is imminent; that the Blackfeet, Bloods and Crees are defiant; that they go about levying blackmail in the shape of provisions and supplies; that they believe Riel's rebellion only failed through lack of ammunition, with which they are now plentifully supplied; that the Indians are chafing at being cooped up on their reserves, and that unless the force there is largely augmented another and bloody outbreak is only a question of a short time. The special adds that the Government now realizes the gravity of the situation, and is taking measures looking to an increase of the force in the Northwest.

J. Clinkskill, a merchant of Battleford, N. W. T., has left for Ottawa to impress upon the authorities there the necessity of taking proper precautions to prevent an Indian uprising. He says that the Indians are enraged because of the execution of the eight Indians in November, and are making all sorts of threats.

The Hill-Terry Wedding.

STOCKTON, Cal., Jan. 8.—David S. Terry, ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California, and Miss Sarah Althea Hill, claiming to be the widow of ex-Senator Sharon, of Nevada, were married in the parsonage of the Catholic Church shortly before ten o'clock yesterday morning. Father O'Connor, of St. Mary's Church, performed the ceremony. The only other person present was the groomsman, State Treasurer Galahan, Miss Hill having decided to dispense with bridesmaids.

The marriage following the decision of the United States Court that Miss Hill never was the wife of Senator Sharon, has given rise to the opinion that it was planned some time ago. And so it has come about that her suit resulted in the securing of a legal husband and a comfortable home. And thus ends the story of the most romantic law-suit in the records of California.

Left Destitute and Then Murdered.

WEST SARATOGA, Ill., Jan. 8.—J. W. Wilson, a shoe-maker and a loafer, separated from his wife, leaving her with seven children in a destitute condition. Yesterday afternoon about two o'clock he reappeared, after an absence of six weeks. Three neighbors were at the house, replenishing Mrs. Wilson's wood-pile as an act of charity. Wilson knew them and spoke to all three. He then walked into the house, and without a word began shooting at his wife. She started to run, but fell dead at the threshold. Wilson was arrested.

The New French Cabinet.

PARIS, Jan. 8.—The new Cabinet was announced in the Official Gazette yesterday afternoon. It is as follows:

M. De Freycinet, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Sarrien, Minister of the Interior; M. Sadi Carnot, Minister of Finance; M. Goblet, Minister of Public Instruction; M. Demole, Minister of Justice; M. Develle, Minister of Agriculture; General Boulanger, Minister of War; M. Aube, Minister of Marine and the Colonies; M. Brabaut, Minister of Public Works; M. Granet, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs; M. Lockroy, Minister of Commerce.

Sunday Closing.

GALESBURG, Ill., Jan. 8.—This city is in the midst of a Sunday-closing excitement. The official authorities have started out by closing up all the barber-shops on Sundays, and the unwilling barbers and their friends insist that the rule must be applied to all other kinds of business, including restaurants, livery-stables, street-railways, etc.

A MIDWINTER FRESHET.

Great Damage Results from Melting Snows in the Eastern States—Pennsylvania, Maryland, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine Visited—Railway Traffic Seriously Affected—Several Lives Reported Lost.

CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 7.—A heavy rain for several days culminated Tuesday night in a destructive flood in the northern part of the State. Tuesday morning the rivers suddenly swelled and overflowed their banks, doing much damage to the railroads and highways, carrying away several bridges, many fences and some small buildings. The damage done is principally along the Ammonoosuc and Pemigewasset Rivers. Between Plymouth and Ashland a large barrier of ice was thrown up, changing the river from its regular course and overflowing the surrounding lands. Huge cakes of ice were piled upon the track of the White Mountain division of the Boston & Lowell Railroad for miles, making travel impossible. Pick-axes and all manner of implements were brought into use to cut away the thick walls, and at several points powder was necessary. Had the ground been less firmly frozen along the roadbed there would have been extensive washouts. Several barns and other buildings were moved from their foundations by the floating ice and washed away by the current. Many narrow escapes from loss of life are reported.

The momentum with which the ice floes were swept along was wonderful and frightful, and reminded the beholder of an arctic avalanche. In several places huge bowlders were torn from their resting places and rolled along like pebbles, while giant trees were swept along standing upright, their roots still imbedded in their native soil. Considerable alarm, and what nearly approached a panic, was caused in some places along the river.

At Montpelier, Vt., six weeks' good sleighing has been swept away by a sudden thaw. The snow is gone from the woods and the ice is out of all the rivers. The intervale land between Montpelier and Barre is all flooded, and presents the appearance of one vast lake. Highways are flooded and rendered impassable.

At Augusta, Me., two spans of the Maine Central Railroad's new iron bridge over the Kennebec River, each 172 feet long, were swept away by ice, with four loaded freight cars run on them for ballast. Lumbering is at a standstill, and the rivers are flooding the mills and farms.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 7.—The floods are receding. At Harrisburg the Susquehanna is falling rapidly. The mills in the lower section of the city have all shut down and can not start until a further fall takes place.

The flood in the Susquehanna did not reach Columbia until yesterday morning, and the rise is higher than for twenty years. The flood is up to the track of the Columbia & Port Deposit Railroad, and the Pennsylvania & Tidewater Canal and the river are one body of water. Fred Kellar, a young man of Columbia, fell into the river yesterday morning and was drowned.

PORT DEPOSIT, Md., Jan. 7.—The Susquehanna is higher than it has been since the great flood of 1865. All the cellars and basements in the lower section of Port Deposit are filled with several feet of water. All the wharves in town are submerged. The lumber yards are also partly inundated, and the proprietors have found it necessary to surround their yards with booms.

PRINCESS ANNE, Md., Jan. 7.—In the wind and rain storm which prevailed Monday night three men were drowned near Back Creek while trying to make shore in a small skiff from their vessel, which was anchored a few hundred yards from shore. The surf was too strong for the small boat and washed completely over it, casting the three men away.

SILVER'S FRIENDS.

A Strong Movement in Germany in Favor of Restoring the Metal at Present Under the Ban.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The agitation in favor of a bimetallic standard of currency in Germany has attained great proportions. A committee of the German Farmers' Congress has already handed to Chancellor Bismarck and to the Reichstag two hundred petitions from farmers' and peasants' unions demanding the restoration of silver. The language of the petitioners is as strong as could be used by Congressman Bland or Senator Allison. They protest against the charge that bimetalism means injustice to creditors, and they declare that, on the other hand, the enforcement of the monometallic gold standard is grossly unjust to debtors because it makes money dear. Customs duties on grain will not, they declare, suffice to save German agriculture, which is threatened with ruin unless it is rescued by silver. The petitions solemnly avow that Germany can not afford to wait upon England in this matter, but must act with bimetallic States only, and that silver must be restored. Prince Bismarck has been much impressed by the extent of the demonstration in favor of silver and is anxiously considering his action. The farmers declare that any damage which can possibly be done to commerce or the banks by a return to the double standard would be very trivial in comparison to the absolute ruin which is menacing German agriculture.

An Awful Deed.

CHESTER, Ill., Jan. 7.—Commodore Perry Flynn, who, with his wife and little child, has been a resident of this city for the last three months, murdered his wife Hattie Tuesday night by cutting her throat with a common pocket-knife, almost decapitating her head. Before he cut her he shot her in the head. After having killed her he cut his own throat and shot himself in the head. The only witness to the deed was their little daughter. Flynn claims that in a quarrel the woman attempted to draw a pistol on him, but that he whipped out his first, and, pointing it at her, merely intended to frighten her, the discharge being premature. She fell, and he concluded to finish her and then himself.

The married life of the couple has been made miserable by unfaithfulness and quarrels. He expresses sorrow at his crime, but claims justification. He is in the hands of the officers under guard, and will recover. The bullets were extracted from his head, neither of them entering the skull, and his throat was stitched up. The body of the woman was turned over to her relatives, and the little girl was given into the keeping of her father's people.

Porter to Be Restored.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—General Bragg, of Wisconsin, who will be Chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, said last night that within the next ten days a bill for the restoration of Fitz-John Porter to the army would be reported from the Military Committee to the House. It will be almost identical with the bill passed by the last Congress and vetoed by President Arthur. The House will pass it, General Bragg says, by a very large majority, and, as the five Republican Senators who voted for the measure last year are still in the Senate to vote for it again, he sees no reason why it may not be passed and signed by the President within the next thirty days.

An American Line.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—In the House of Representatives Tuesday Representative Belmont, of New York, presented the petition of Austin Corbin, setting forth that "with his associates he has formed an incorporated company under the laws of the State of New York, to be known as the American Express Steamship Company, with a capital of $10,000,000, for the purpose of constructing, purchasing and owning a fleet of first-class passenger steamships to be navigated between the city of New York or some part of Long Island and a suitable port or ports in Great Britain."

POLYGAMY MUST GO.

The Edmunds Bill for the Suppression of the Evil of Mormonism Passed by the Senate—Text of the Measure.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The Senate passed the Utah bill yesterday by a vote of 38 yeas to 7 nays and then adjourned until Monday. The Senators voting nay were Messrs. Blair, Call, Gibson, Hampton, Hoar, Morgan and Vance. The affirmative vote was as follows:

The bill provides that in any prosecution under a statute of the United States for bigamy, polygamy or unlawful cohabitation the lawful husband or wife of the accused shall be a competent witness, and may be compelled to testify; that every marriage ceremony in the Territory shall be certified in writing, the certificate to be signed by each of the parties and by the officer or priest performing the ceremony, such certificate to be prima facie evidence of the facts when produced in court, failure to furnish the certificate being made punishable by fine and imprisonment; that all records of marriages kept by officiating functionaries shall be subject to inspection by United States officials, and refusal to permit this is punishable by fine and imprisonment; that it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever; that the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah conferring jurisdiction upon Probate Courts or the Judges thereof, or any of them, in said Territory other than in respect of the estates of deceased persons and in respect of the guardianship of the persons and property of infants, and in respect of the persons and property of persons not of sound mind are disapproved and annulled; that the laws of Utah recognizing the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit a father's property are disapproved and annulled; that all acts of the Utah Legislature recognizing the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the ordinance of the so-called General Assembly of the State of Deseret incorporating this body are annulled so far as they may preclude the appointment by the President of fourteen trustees of the corporation, who shall have all the powers provided for in the laws creating the said corporation. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute and prosecute proceedings to forfeit to the United States the property of corporations obtained or held in violation of law, and all property so forfeited shall be disposed of and the proceeds applied to the common schools of the Territory, provided that no building shall be forfeited which is held and occupied exclusively for religious worship; that all laws of the Territory relating to the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company are annulled, and it shall not be lawful for the Territorial Assembly to create any corporation or association for the purpose of bringing persons into the Territory for any purpose whatsoever. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to bring suit to dissolve said corporation and wind up its affairs. The existing election districts and apportionment of representation to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory are abolished, and the Governor, Secretary and United States Judges in the Territory are ordered to redistrict the Territory at once, so as to secure an equal representation of the people. Adultery is made punishable by imprisonment for not more than three years, and in case of fornication by an unmarried man or woman such is to be punished by not more than six months' imprisonment or one hundred dollars fine.

The bill defines the powers of Territorial officials appointed by the courts, and of United States Marshals. It declares vacant the offices of Superintendent of District Schools, established by the rules of Utah, directs the Supreme Court to appoint a superintendent, and prescribes the duty of that officer. The bill also provides that marriages between persons within the fourth degree of consanguinity—but not including that degree—shall be deemed incest and punished as such.

WINTER'S ICY BREATH.

Progress of a Cold Wave in Its March Toward the Gulf—A Storm Unprecedented in Severity and Area Covered—Western Railways Blockaded—An Heroic Conductor.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9.—The storm area covers the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, Tennessee and the lower lake regions. Heavy snow fell in Southern Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Tennessee and the Ohio Valley. The area of cold lay west of the Mississippi River, ranging in intensity from 4 degrees below zero in Arkansas to 35 below in Manitoba. The center of railroad disturbance is in Iowa. The Omaha trains on all the western branches of the trunk lines were detained yesterday in that State. The heaviest snow in years has fallen there. Trains coming from points farther west are snowed in at various places in the Hawkeye State.

COUNCIL GROVE, Kan., Jan. 9.—The Missouri Pacific passenger train was wrecked by snow in the "Downing cut" about eight miles north of here, after passing this place Thursday evening. Conductor John A. Brown and Mail Messenger Pullman started to walk back to this place for assistance. In walking over a bridge near here, Pullman slipped and fell, breaking the bone of his left leg between the knee and ankle. Conductor Brown carried him to this city, a distance of several miles. The wind was blowing a blizzard and the thermometer twenty-three degrees below zero. The train was buried in a snowbank all night, and was brought back to this place yesterday morning.

NOTES OF THE STORM.

The thermometer is 38 degrees below at Devil's Lake, D. T., and all trains have been abandoned.

It is extremely cold throughout Canada, registering from 30 to 40 degrees below zero, and snowing in many parts.

The weather at Sioux City is pronounced the most severe ever experienced there. All trains are abandoned.

The crest of the cold wave seems to have been transferred from Montana to Northern Minnesota, where it is 45 degrees below zero.

The renewed storm on the Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado plains is prostrating the telegraph wires and restoring the blockade. No trains have arrived at Denver since Wednesday night. The cattle are being driven from the north in large herds by the blizzard. Great loss is feared.

Business in Central Kansas is completely suspended, and there is no telling when railroad communication will be resumed. The thermometer marks 30 below.

Friday night was the coldest ever recorded at the signal office in Mobile. Two persons were found in the streets badly frozen.

The wind is blowing at the rate of thirty miles an hour through St. Louis, the mercury stands 12 degrees below, and the snow is six inches deep and still falling. Seven car-loads of hogs arrived from the West Friday frozen to death.

It is 11 degrees below at Galveston, Tex., and blowing a veritable Dakota blizzard. The water in the bay is lower than the oldest inhabitant remembers having ever seen it before.

The mercury is above zero at the following Southern cities: Shreveport, 11; Alexandria, 9; New Iberia, 14; Franklin, 12. This is believed to be the coldest weather ever experienced throughout the sugar belt of Louisiana, and fears are expressed that the cane stubble will be killed. All these points report the mercury falling.

Death in the Flames.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 9.—The large building occupied by Trabue & Co., J. Balmforth & Co., and H. P. Forwood & Co., all cotton factors and brokers, burned at five o'clock last night. The fire was caused by the falling of the front of the building, crushing down the offices and overturning the stoves. J. Balmforth and H. M. Wright, prominent business men, were in the office, and were cut off by the fire and debris and perished in the flames. The fire at midnight was still burning, and the bodies can not be recovered until it is extinguished. Loss on building and contents, $150,000; insurance unknown.

Great Destitution in Scotland.

GLASGOW, Jan. 9.—The great and long-continued depression in trade, together with the cold weather of the past few days, is causing much suffering among the poorer classes. The charitable societies, notwithstanding extraordinary efforts, are unable to supply the wants of the great number of persons who daily apply for relief. The workhouses are overcrowded. A meeting of 6,000 unemployed persons was held here yesterday. The crowd was orderly, and no Socialistic remarks were indulged in by the speakers. It was resolved to make an appeal to the wealthier classes for assistance.

PICTURES ON THE PANES.

In cozy rooms a happy group looked at the ferns and leaves,
Those graceful traceries which the frost spun on the window eaves;
Bright faces turned toward the panes with merry childish din,
Which floated through that curtained home of luxury within.
The eyes were glad, and as the ferns and marvels slowly rise,
"How good is God to send us these! How beautiful!" they said.

High up within an attic bare, streaked by the leaking rains,
Four little children watched the frost elves' patterns on the panes.
Thin-faced and cold, with shivering forms in rags and tatters clad,
With little in that room but those four dear ones, pinched and sad,
Acquaint with hunger, grief and cold, the chilly boards their bed,
"How harsh the fingers of the frost! How merciless!" they said.

Where southern palms waved stately forms above a city's street,
Which echoes to the ceaseless tread of sad-eyed mourners' feet,
Where yellow fever worked for death, and marked its thousands slain,
A grief-crazed group looked gladly at the first frost on the pane,
Parched lips had prayed for kindly frost to slay the slayer dread,
"Now, God be thanked for this, His gift! How merciful!" they said.

Far up in frost-bound Northern lands where leaves never know
The presence of a balmy wind, the absence of the snow,
Four sailors lay, a piteous group; fire, food and hope all gone,
The last survivors of a crew who once passed proudly on.
They watched the frost-elves' dainty work o'er windows slowly spread—
And, knowing that the coming night would shroud them, still and dead—
With breaking hearts at thought of home, "How pitiless," they said.

So, lights and shadows interknit upon the frosted glass,
So, lights and shadows mark the lives which just as swiftly pass
Through pain and joys, which learn to smile, to triumph or to grieve,
Just as the messengers of fate their mystic patterns weave.

Oh, solemn thought, that joy to us is sadness unto some,
That beauteous things to some in dread and woeful aspect come.
Deep fraught with thoughts too great for words, eternal loss or gain,
May be so small a thing as frost's light pictures on the pane;
And interwoven with the ferns, their arabesques and scrolls,
A pattern just as strange which marks the destiny of souls.

JIMMY AND THE DUKE.

A Very Natural Mistake and What Came of It.

Jimmy was ragged and dirty and alone, but no scion of royalty ever carried his head higher, or wore both hands in his trousers' pockets with more unconcern than did Jimmy that day. What if everybody else was riding on the beach—guess he'd had a clam-bake of his own that morning, and could give the best of 'em pointers on the management of a sail-boat any day. As for driving—bah! hadn't he two good legs of his own, and—"whew-w! if that isn't a turn-out, now!" and Jimmy stopped stock-still to gaze.

A second look told the whole story. "It's the Duke!" he exclaimed, in that tone of awe which every sovereign citizen of America uses when speaking of rank. "I heard he'd come to the beach, and that's him, sure as fate. Well, if that ain't a clipper!"

Two coal-black horses in glittering harness danced before the natty road-cart, and were deftly driven by a rather bored-looking, blonde-whiskered young man in a cool, baggy coat and straw hat, while upon the slightly-raised seat in the rear was a most imposing elderly personage, in a spick and span suit of dark blue with gilt buttons, topped by a tall, cockaded hat. Jimmy gave but one glance at the former, then turned to the other with wide, curious eye.

"It's the Duke, sure," he muttered. "My! ain't he a swell, though! Look's as if he'd growed round a ramrod, he's so stiff. Well, I b'lieve I'm glad I ain't one—hel there'll be a bust-up, sure," and Jimmy was off like a shot.

A "bust-up" indeed, for the gay horses shied fiercely at the sudden flapping of a sail spread out to dry, dashing the off wheel against a rock, and canting the light cart over so far as to tip Jimmy's "Duke" to the ground. He came down rather heavily upon the clean sand, his gorgeous hat rolling to meet an incoming breaker, but the driver seemed too much occupied with his plunging horses to pay any attention to his aristocratic master.

A little surprised at his coolness and unconcern, Jimmy ran for the hat, and returned with his best bow, the "Duke" meanwhile brushing off the sand and muttering between his teeth:

"Deuced hunlucky! Spoilt my trousers, I'll wager. Oh, thanks, boy, is it 'urt hany?" referring to the hapless tile.

"No, sir, Mr. Duke, not at all," stammered Jimmy, rather at a loss for the proper formula to use, "was your majesty hurt?"

The Duke frowned, and muttering "Quit your chaff, now!" turned away, leaving Jimmy to feel decidedly repulsed.

The horses were quieted by this time, however, and their driver turned to ask, coolly:

"Hurt much, Millard?" (Jimmy thought he said "my lord.") "I'm afraid this wheel's disabled—what do you think?" gazing leisurely downward.

"Pretty cool!" thought Jimmy. "I s'posed these furrin servants was better trained; he acts and talks every bit as keerless as pa's hired man—didn't even jump out to help the Duke up, I swan! "Say, Mr. Coachy," he suggested here, "my pa's got a blacksmith-shop just on a ways—p'r'aps the Duke would like to go there and get that wheel mended, it's the only place anywhere within a mile, and——"

He stopped, for there was a queer expression on Coachy's face, which rather staggered him—a blank stare, succeeded by a sudden, brilliant, amused light in the handsome eyes, which was almost more than a smile.

"Thank you, my boy," he responded, pleasantly, "that's a good suggestion; if I walk the horses I think we can keep the wheel on till we get there. Jump up here, and point out the way, will you?"

Nothing loth, Jimmy started forward, with a look toward the "Duke" for approbation, but that high and mighty personage had resumed his place and position, seemingly as oblivious of everything that the boy thought:

"Spose they never trouble him with small matters, but just fix 'em up and send in the bill," and quickly mounted beside his new friend.

They rode in silence awhile; then, drawing a little closer, Jimmy whispered, confidentially:

"If 'twant for the Duke, now, I could let you into no end of fun. It'll take pa's man all the afternoon to mend that wheel, and there's goin' to be a big weddin' close to our house. It's my cousin Vine's (Malviny, you know), and she's the prettiest gal in the country, too. You see if she ain't! Wouldn't you like to go?"

Again that brilliant look.

"To be sure I would, and I will!" decidedly. "Are they going to dance?"

"Bet yer life. There's two fiddlers and a cardion man a comin', and it's goin' to be in Vine's pa's new barn. Won't that be jolly?"

"Decidedly jolly!" laughed Coachy.

"But what'll you do with the Duke?" pursued Jimmy, edging closer and dropping his voice to a whisper. "We could fix him up a sort o' throne with grandpa's chair and the buffalo robe, and let him look on, I s'pose, if he would—but, you see, 'twould spoil all the fun—they'd be so scart of him that they wouldn't half dance, nor kiss the girls—nor nothin'—don't you see?"

"Yes," said Coachy, laughing outright, but quickly checking himself, "Yes, I see—it is a dilemma!"

"Say!" with another hitch, "couldn't you get the old duffer back to the hotel, somehow, and you stay with us? These swells 'most allers can ride horseback—now, we've got an old army saddle he con'd put on one o'them hosses. You seem sort of a favorite with him. Can't you manage?"

"Well, I'll try," said Coachy, thoughtfully, in spite of the broad smile on his lips—a smile of satisfaction at the approaching pleasure, Jimmy felt sure—"I'll suggest it, at least; he's generally quite tractable."

"Do!" said the boy, "there's our shop, see?—the red one with the paint most off, and that's our house down in the hollow. Vine lives up on that hill—see the barn? Ain't it a whopper? Best barn in the county, everybody says."

"Coachy" smilingly agreed with this modest opinion, and, bringing his horses to a sudden stop, sprang lightly to the ground, the "Duke" descending with much celerity, and stepping along toward their heads.

"My boy," said "Coachy" quickly, "hold the horses, please. I wish to speak with—the Duke," adding the last words in a lower tone, and with a sudden smile.

The two men stepped aside, and Jimmy saw that "Coachy" seemed to be giving his highness some very good advice, for the latter nodded acquiescence, touching his hat in his stately, high-bred manner, and walking briskly away.

"I've fixed him," said "Coachy," turning to the boy. "He'll be only too glad to get back to the comforts of the hotel, and then, my boy, for fun."

The bored look was all gone now, while the laugh and tone which accompanied these words were as gay and boyish as Jimmy's own.

"First, we'll have dinner," said Jimmy, with a business air, "and you'll eat at the first table, too—our hired men allers do. You ain't use to that at home, be you?"

"Coachy's" lips twitched so convulsively at this that Jimmy felt afraid he had offended him, and hastened to add, frankly:

"Not much loss, either, I'll bet. I'd hate to have to sit up so solemn with that old prig, and mince and bow and chew an hour on every mouthful. No siree! Give me a plate chuck full, plenty of elbow room, and five minutes 'fore the train starts, and I don't ask no odds of any duke—do you?"

"No, I don't think I do, as hungry as I am now," was the spirited reply, and they passed into the house. Jimmy's introductions were original, at least, but he made the family understand who his new friend was, though upon asking for his name, the latter had said, hastily:

"Oh, call me Coachy, as you began; it's as good a name as any," and Coachy he was for the rest of the day.

They sat down to dinner—"pa" and the hired man in shirt sleeves, and redolent of that honest but moist accompaniment to toil promised to sinful man in the beginning; "ma," and Sallie in curl-papers and calico, but in spite of these the latter elicited more than one glance from the new-comer.

Her curl-papers were not obtrusive, but her dark, soft eyes, pale oval cheeks, and sweet, grave lips, parting too seldom over the dainty teeth, like new corn in the ear, most assuredly were.

Her sad, listless manner and sober loveliness excited a feeling of tender curiosity in her vis-a-vis, who was, however, hungry enough after his ride in the sharp, salt air to enjoy his dinner, despite his sympathetic heart-twinges, and bravely attacked the baked pork and beans, boiled potatoes and cabbage, pie, johnnycake, doughnuts and cheese, which jostled each other on his capacious plate.

"Spose that juke o' your'n hes a sep'rate dish for every one of his victuals," interpolated "Pa," giving his knife an instant's rest; "'t least I've heerd say so. Wonder if them big-bugs really thinks they hes compartments in their stummicks? 'Pears so," he added, with fine scorn at the folly of this whim; and Coachy only smiled meekly, eating the round of his trencher, and enjoying every mouthful with a zest that surprised him into silence.

In fact, no one said much—all were too busy—and in a remarkably short time the table was cleared and each left for his next affair without excuse or apology.

"Is your cousin Malvina prettier than your sister?" asked the visitor, in a careless tone as the new friends strolled toward the stables a little later.

"Prettier? You bet! She's got no end of fun in her, and the snappingest eyes you ever see. Sallie used to be pretty, too, but she's no good any more since Joe's gone away."

"Who's Joe?" asked Coachy, selecting a superb cigar from a case whose graven crest immediately caught Jimmy's quick eye.

"Hullo! What's that?" he asked, curiously.

"Oh, it's the Duke's," was the immediate answer. "I—I sometimes carry it for him, and take a cigar for my trouble; it's heavy, you see."

"Knowed he was lazy, the old coon," came the contemptuous answer. "'Who's Joe?' oh, her sweetheart—and a good feller, too, I vow! But he didn't hev a red copper to bless himself with, and pa shipped him in short order. He's gone West now—gone to the mines to make his fortin', and Sal's waitin' for him. Pa and ma don't know it. They think she'll marry that old widower Peters, that owns the next farm, and he's got two of the hatefulest, red-headed youngsters you ever see, but bet Sal won't look at him, I know. My cricky! how good that cigar smells!"

An hour later found them at the big, new barn, looking in through the wide-open doorway, the guest taking in the scene with the enjoyment both of a novice and an artist. The clean, white, pine floor, the high-ceiled walls gayly draped with festoons of arbor vitæ, caught by huge, glowing masses of blood-red or rose-pink peonies, formed a novel stage, while the musicians' stand was improvised from the walls of the horse-stalls, with a few loose boards laid across, upon which sat the two fiddlers and the 'cordion man, the latter calling off the swift changes of "money-musk," which a half-dozen sets of rustic swains and maidens, led off by the blushing bride and groom, were gayly dancing below. All this, with the gaping, laughing crowd of lookers-on without, their long, slant afternoon shadows blotting out the hazy September sunshine on the grass, formed a picture worthy of a Claude Lorraine. Coachy looked on eagerly, unmindful of Jimmy's impatient nudges and whispers, to the effect that "a bar'l of new sweet cider was bein' ladled out just 'round the corner," and at length, spying Sallie, sweeter than ever, in a simple white dress, he broke away with scant excuses, and hurried to the spot where she stood alone and self-absorbed, looking on with big, wistful eyes.

Surely no Duke of them all could have made a courtlier bow than did Coachy, doing ready homage to the everlasting sovereignty of beauty, as he begged the honor of her hand for the next dance, while she, starting from her reverie, smiled, and frankly met his eyes as he led her to their place upon the smooth floor.

The afternoon passed rapidly away, a scene of careless merry-making and gay good humor to the uninstructed eye, but pregnant with dramatic situations to the initiated. What else was the meaning of Peters' grim frown and flashing eyes as he looked gloomily on while Sallie and her new friend danced, or talked in corners, apparently engaged in a most desperate flirtation; or the evident agitation of "pa and ma," who vainly tried to recall her to duty by too transparent hints and innuendoes? Even Jimmy, having had all the cider he could swallow, was sick and sulky, and thought it "real mean o' Sal" to take up his company like that. As for the girl she had, for once, thrown off all restraint and given herself up to the impulse of the moment; for, though she could not tell how it happened, the third dance was not ended before she had poured her whole story into this stranger's ears, even treating him to a sight of Joe's last photograph, suspended in a locket about her fair neck. On his side he had volunteered the information that the Duke was expecting soon to visit the very mines in question, as he had an interest there, and wished to make a quiet trip through that country.

"And oh! if you should see Joe," cried the sweet girl, with an upward look that melted her partner's heart, "give him my love, please, and tell him I'll never marry old Peters—never!"

"I'm so glad Jimmy brought you," she said, as he held her hand longer than was exactly necessary, out under a big lilac-bush, in the gloaming. "You've brought the real comfort, somehow, and I'll not soon forget it. It's lucky the Duke didn't come, though, for he would have spoilt it all—but how will you get home to the hotel?"

"Oh, Mil—the Duke, I mean—kindly promised to send the carriage for me; I presume it's waiting now at your gate. Well, I must go. Oh! here's Jimmy. Good-bye, and may the Lord bless you."

But the young man walked very slowly away, and looked back more than once, "to see the young girl standing still," waving his hands as if to a friend and equal, while a half mournful sigh welled up from his very heart.

Jimmy heard it and frowned.

"Say, Coachy," he said, in grieved accents, "I think you've treated me mighty mean, that's all! And what's more, if I ever get a chance to tell Joe about Sal's actions I'm going to—you bet! I want you to understand that my sister ain't a-goin' to run away with no coachman, if he does belong to a Duke, and you can just put that in your pipe and smoke it!"

Coachy gave him a glance that would have annihilated anything but an American boy, burst into a curt laugh, and then bit his lips into silence. "Jimmy," he said gently, after a pause, "when you're older you'll know more. Meanwhile, here's something to help you enjoy yourself while you're young," and slipping a big round coin into the youngster's palm, he sprang into the landau, called out a gay good-bye and was driven rapidly away.

The astonished youth looked after the audacious and much-privileged servant with round eyes, which finally dropped to the piece of metal in his hand. He held it up in the waning light.

"It's gold," he whispered, excitedly, "and not a silver dollar, as I s'posed, and there's two X's on it. Jerusalem crickets! It's a twenty-dollar gold piece if it's a cent!"

* * * * *

Four months had passed away, and the farm-house in the hollow, crouched under its snowy covering, snug and safe, while away in the Western mountains men toiled as they could, and cursed the snow and the cold which lengthened and hardened their desperate task of wresting from its hiding place that gold which to them meant home and fireside, with the presence of loved ones far away. Poor Joe, undaunted by fatigues and sufferings which would have driven stronger men to the wall, still kept at work, spurred on by the thought of a pair of dark, wistful eyes which he knew were looking hopefully for him each day. But his pile was still very small, and hope seemed almost ready to desert him.

How could he be sure she was faithful, after all, he thought, gloomily trudging homeward in the cheerless twilight, with his pick-axe on his shoulder and his eyes on the ground. Such a pretty girl wouldn't wait long for suitors, and—hello! what's that?

A long cry of "Hel-p!" came faintly from the gloomy, slanting ravine at his right, but though he peered anxiously down he could see nothing. "Hello!" he cried back in a ringing voice, and the same cry, but fainter, came again: "Help! Hel-p!"

Using his clumsy pick-axe for an alpenstock, he crept cautiously down the rough declivity, calling out at intervals, and following the sound of the answering call, until he reached a clump of bushes by a narrow trail or bridle-path, in whose shadow lay a man, evidently sorely hurt.

Joe bent over him.

"Well, stranger, what is it?" he asked, in the careless tone of a man habituated to danger, but with a certain tenderness not native to the ordinary miner.

"To be brief, I fell among thieves, and am about done for," said the wounded one, faintly. "There is a stab in my side—if you don't stop the blood I—"

He ceased abruptly, overcome with faintness, while Joe with ready skill soon found and stanched the wound with a part of the stranger's own garments; then, as he looked vaguely around, wondering what he would do next, the snow-laden bushes rustled and a figure crawled cautiously out at his very feet. One movement brought Joe's pickax to a ready position, and with the next it would have descended with crushing force on the crawler's skull, when his whining voice broke in.

"Don't 'it me, don't! 'Is 'is Grace much 'urt? 'As the robbers went?"

Joe's pickax descended harmlessly.

"Who be you, you sneak? and who's 'His Grace,' I'd like to know?"

"He's the Duke of —, sir; hand I'm 'is servant. The thieves nearly killed us, sir, and ran hoff with hour 'osses, and I took shelter in a 'ollow log, sir, for the time. His 'e really much 'urt?"

"Killed, I guess," said Joe, shortly. "You coward! Why didn't you come and help him, before it was too late! Here, help me lift him—so; we'll take him to my cabin."

Fortunately it was not far away, and Joe, a few hours later, had the satisfaction of seeing his guest warmed, fed and comforted, his cut sewed up, and himself in a fair way to recovery, though still weak from the loss of blood. As, utterly weary, the miner stepped silently to the side of his bunk, to give him one last reassuring glance before seeking his own hard bed on the floor, the sufferer reached out a white, delicate hand and caught Joe's hard, brown one in a warm clasp.

"My friend, what is your name?" he asked, weakly.

"Joe Brady, Your Lordship," said the honest fellow, his heart fluttering a little at being thus addressed by a live aristocrat.

The Duke's eyes opened wide. "Is it possible? Kismet, as I live! I must be their providence if they are to be my fate,"—and they closed again, wearily. "Light-headed, I see," muttered Joe, turning away. "'Tain't much wonder, either—all he's gone through to-night. Well; he'll be all right to-morrow, I hope," and in five minutes Joe's snores mingled with the doughty Millard's on the cabin floor.

The Duke's was a mere flesh-wound, though a deep one, and a few weeks found him able to return to Denver and civilization, after tempting Providence—or, rather, two horse-thieves—by his needless winter journey over the mountains. But in the daily intercourse of that humble cabin, among those homely, big-hearted miners, in the solitude of the everlasting hills, class distinction had grown to seem a very insignificant thing. The Duke might shine in drawing-rooms and assemblies — even in Parliament, or among the first men of old-world civilization — but here his talents availed little. He was the one useless member of that small community—a mere cumberer of the ground—and yet, no. His very refinement and whole-souled gentlemanliness did them a world of good, and left the little camp the better for his visit.

Before he left he took Joe apart for a long walk, and when they parted it was like brothers, with moistened eyes and a long, close grasp of the hand, while, as Duke and servant rode slowly out of camp, they were followed by hearty "Good lucks" and "Good-byes" from the whole community, ending in three cheers and a tiger, which echoed and re-echoed from the frost-bound cliffs in wave after wave of heartiness and good cheer.

It was blossoming time when our aristocratic voyagers were again driving along the Beach road where we first beheld them—the Duke quite restored to health, while Millard, utterly unconscious of any past dereliction from duty, sat in solemn stiffness, and with folded arms, behind.

A boy, looking a bit uncomfortable in a clean face and new suit, came hesitatingly toward them.

"Jimmy, you rake, come here," he cried, reining the steeds to a standstill. "I want you to direct me to the blacksmith shop in the hollow."

"Say, you ain't mad then, sir—mister—Your Grace—be you," cried Jimmy in a relieved tone, springing into the cart. "I don't care if you be a Duke, 'stead of a coachman. You're an awful good one! Joe's here all right, and Sal's so happy she don't know whether she's a-foot or a-horseback. The house is all done and furnished, and we're a-goin' to eat the weddin' supper there. Sal's so afraid you mayn't like everything that she's most crazy—and Joe—my! he 'bout worships you! He didn't have to more'n show your letter when they took him right on at the mills, and I tell you he makes a boss overseer, too. He's put all your money that was left from the house into the bank for a nest-egg, and calls it the 'ducal fund.' Swell, ain't it? And say, you don't care, do you? but I spent half that double X you give me for a cake-basket for Sally, and she was 'most tickled to death. Here we are, and they're all awaiting on the porch. Say, Coachy—Mr. Duke—Your Lordship, I mean—Sal's goin' to kiss you! I heard Joe tell her to, myself."

FRANKLIN'S WATCH.

A Relic of Long Ago Owned by an Aged Pennsylvania Farmer.

Levi W. Groff, a typical old farmer of Lancaster, Penn., shows with pride a relic of over a century ago, in the shape of a heavy silver watch once worn by Benjamin Franklin. The watch is of silver and has an open face, while on the back is engraved the words:

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Philadelphia.

Inside the cover at the back is an old-fashioned jeweler's card showing that the watch was repaired January 24, 1817, by Thomas Parker, of Philadelphia. On the heavy gold face the words "W. Tomlinson, London, 611," show where the time-piece was made. Little of the history of the watch is known, except that after Franklin's death it was worn by his son-in-law, Richard Bache, who lost it in a Philadelphia hotel while on a visit from his homestead in Bensalem, Bucks County, Pa.

Mr. Groff purchased the watch many years ago from an aged friend, long since dead, who had owned it so long that he had forgotten how it came into his possession. It is thought that the watch was presented to Franklin when he represented the Independent Colonies in the British Court in London. Mr. Groff has a large collection of relics of the early days of Pennsylvania. The watch has been in his possession nearly thirty years, during which time it has never been repaired, and still keeps accurate time.—N. Y. World.

A HAPPY DIVERSION.

How a Rather Peculiar Man Kept Himself in Good Humor.

"I took dinner with a peculiar man the other day," said the Secretary of State. "I had known him for a long time, but had never noticed anything strange about him until the other day. When we sat down to dinner, Colonel Hackett—my friend's name—called his servant, a large negro, and said:

"'Robert, please bring us some bread, and, oh, Bob, you've forgot the soup! Bring it please, and you will place me under so many obligations. Ah, hold on, Bob. You have forgotten to give my friend a plate. Please bring him one.'

"When the servant had retired to execute the humiliated appeals to his generosity, I turned to my friend and said:

"'Colonel, you astonish me. I have ever taken you to be a man of great firmness.'

"'I am.'

"'Then why are you so servile in asking your servant to do anything?'

"'Revenge, my dear sir.'

"'Revenge!' I repeated, in astonishment. 'Why, I don't understand you.'

"'Well, I'll tell you. Do you see that club over the mantel-piece? Well, I shall be obsequious to that fellow until he owns the place, then I shall snatch down that club and knock him heels over head. Nothing like it. I do all my servants this way, and I enjoy myself better than any man in town. If I hadn't hit upon this plan I would have been dead by this time. Wait a minute—here he comes.'

"The fellow looked sullenly at us and doggedly put a plate in front of me.

"'Oh, Bobbie,' said the Colonel, 'there is no vinegar on the table. I should esteem it a great favor if you were to get some. Oh, don't frown at me that way, Bobbie.'

"The servant made a disrespectful remark. The Colonel jumped up, seized his club and struck Bob an awful blow—knocked him through a window out into the yard. The Colonel's face wore an expression of supreme happiness.

"'Now we'll eat dinner,' said he, resuming his seat. 'If I hadn't struck upon this source of innocent diversion, I might have been in my grave. You see when I cringed to him it was humiliation, but when I knocked him into a figure five it was revenge. Now, I must go out after dinner and get another man. At first he will tell me that he would rather work for me than for any man he ever saw. After awhile, when my kindness becomes more plain, he will become neglectful; and, after awhile—as you have witnessed to-day—he will become insolent. No, sir, I don't know what would have become of me had I not struck upon this happy diversion.'"—Arkansaw Traveler.

SHE DIDN'T.

But She Believed She Would Die of Mortification If Taken for a Bride.

"Now, remember, Charley, we are to do nothing bridal," said a somewhat elderly bride to her husband, as they boarded the train. "I should die of mortification if I should be taken for a bride. Te, he!"

"All right," said Charley, "I'll be careful."

Later on Charley wanted to smoke, and he entered the smoking-car for that purpose.

In the seat immediately back of the couple sat an inquisitive old lady.

"Going far?" she inquired, tickling the bride's ear with her breath.

"To Montreal. Te, he!" simpered the bride.

"Travelin' for pleasure?"

"Yes, ma'am. Te, he!"

"Is that man who has gone to smoke your husband?"

"Yes. Te, he!"

"Leave the children at home?"

"What's that?" demanded the bride.

"Didn't you bring the children?"

"We have no children, ma'am."

"No children?" repeated the old lady compassionately. "P'raps they are dead?"

"Er—we've never had—er—any children," the bride answered, beginning to get a little mad.

"Never had no children? I've had seven, an' they're all growed up an' married. Children is a great comfort when they're well brought up. But some people is unfortunate 'bout havin' children. There's my sister Jane Ann, for instance, she's been married as long as you or me, an' she ain't never had no children, an'—"

Just here the husband returned from the smoking-car, and, as he took his seat, the bride laid her head convulsively on his shoulder and whispered:

"I guess it's no use, Charley, I'm sure everybody will take us for a bridal couple, no matter what we do." And during the rest of the journey the bride took precious care that everybody did.—Traveler's Magazine.

Double Back-Action Volubility.

The San Francisco girl of 1886 is principally remarkable for her ability to express herself with a double back-action combination of conciseness and volubility. She has a clever trick of economizing time and space by running two or three words together. She never pauses for the ordinary obstructions of grammar, and when clear, comprehensive English fails her, she instantly resorts to words of her own coinage. The T. C. offers as an example the following intercepted conversation: "Lo! Whereyergoin?" "Lo! Jus downear to the dressmaker's." "Dressf'rulsh?" "Mm—noo! Not quite, 'sgointube lovely." "Howsh'smakinit?" "Oh! I dunno, little jiggers down the front and pleatinsround the bottom—sorter sprangly effect. Mustarry—goodbye."—San Francisco News-Letter.

Singular Coincidence.

In a city not more than a thousand miles from San Antonio, a local clergyman rented a house for a dwelling that had formerly been a gambling house. One night two young men of his congregation knocked at the door, and, to their horror, their pastor opened the door. They fled in dismay. And now he goes about telling everybody he has strong hopes that the two young men will yet master up courage to study for the ministry, while they take the pillars of the church aside, and whisper: "He! He! He! Where do you think we saw Parson —? Why, around at John Smith's gambling room, bucking at monte. Who would have thought it?"

ONCE TOO OFTEN.

A Too Frequent Test of the Financial Value of Tenpenny Nails.

Something clinked on the bottom of the Randolph street car, and an indifferently washed man, wearing bad clothes and a worse face, groped about despairingly.

"Oh, the poor fellow!" involuntarily murmured a pale woman with eyeglasses and sympathy, "he just looks as though it was the last nickel he had."

The other nine passengers looked excessively sorry, and the tintinnabulations of the conductor's approaching bell-punch percolated through the gloom like melancholy cadences from some distant convent tower. The indifferently washed man put on a poverty shiver as the conductor came along.

"Fare, please."

"My dime, sir, just fell through the foot-rack there on the floor."

"Where?"

"Right down there, sir; it went clean out of sight."

"Yes, indeed, Mister Conductor," interposed the little woman. "I saw him lose it."

"Never mind," said the Conductor, at length, "here's your five cents change. I'll find the dime when I take the car into the barn."

Then everybody thought what a kind man the conductor was, and the unwashed passenger debarked at the Halsted street crossing.

Not long subsequent he ascended into a Madison street transport. Something clinked on the floor soon after.

"Fare, sir," said the conductor, interrupting the frantic search which he was making among the interstices of the foot-rack.

"I've lost my dime, sir, and it——"

Biff!

"You are the——"

Bang!

"Blanked tramp who worked that——"

Biff! Biff!

A DEPOT STORY.

How a Brakeman Ditched a Train With Great Success.

"Horrible, horrible! sir; I say horrible. I never want to witness such a sight again." He was a little fat fellow buttoned up in a neat suit of clothes, that proclaimed him a drummer at first sight; his little round nose peeped over his curled lawn-tennis mustache as if to see what his mouth was saying.

"What has happened?" chimed in the usual old woman in mourning and spectacles, who is always around every depot.

"Why," said the fat man, after getting his breath, "I walked down the track to get a little fresh air, when standing watching a freight train pass, I saw a brakeman fall down between the cars and with my own eyes saw forty-seven cars pass over him. Oh, it was horrible! horrible!" Here the fat man closed his eyes as though to shut out the sight.

"And did it kill him?" broke in the old woman.

The fat man opened his eyes, and in an easy way said: "Oh, no; it didn't kill him. How could it? Only forty-seven cars, and they only loaded with pig-iron, coal, etc. Kill him, my dear madame? No, indeed; he only ditched the engine and four box-cars, nine flat-cars, after the forty-seventh car had passed over him. He jumped up—as is always the case after forty-seven cars has run over a man—and commenced to examine the track to see what damage had been done. He said to me he was glad he hadn't broken any of the rails or fractured any of the car wheels, as the company would take it out of his pay."

"Oh, I'm so glad he wasn't killed," exclaimed the usual old woman.

"And so am I," said the fat man.

The train had just come in, the old woman and her band-boxes got aboard, the fat man went forward to the smoker to smoke and think what fools some people are.—The Judge.

ITS FUTURE.--DESTINED TO BECOME ONE OF THE LEADING CITIES OF NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The following extract is from a letter written by a gentleman who has spent three resort seasons here:

. . . The Location on the shore of Lake Michigan, at the point where the waters of those most charming sheets, Pine and Round Lakes empty into it, renders it the natural headquarters for the important Shipping interests of the entire Pine Lake Region.

Other small villages may thrive and grow, but they must from the nature of things, always pay tribute and owe allegiance to Charlevoix.

At least two Railway Companies are anxiously looking towards Charlevoix as a terminus, and in my opinion the place offers inducements for the operations of Capital, second to few points. . . . I would say farther, if your patience were not exhausted, that at the store of Stockman & Iddings' there may be found one of the finest assortments of HARDWARE, IRON & NAILS, STOVES, TIN-WARE, PAINTS, OILS, BRUSHES, and everything in the line of BUILDERS MATERIALS, in Michigan. What is more, their prices are reasonable and they WILL NOT be undersold by anyone.

It Pays to Buy the

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The First of a Series of Discourses on the "Marriage Ring."

The Choice of a Wife—Some Men Who Have No Right to Marry—Moral and Spiritual Beauty More Desirable the Mere Physical.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage has begun a series of sermons on "The Marriage Ring," the first of which, covering the "Choice of Husband and Wife," we give below. The following was the text:

Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines?—Judges, xiv., 3.

Samson, the giant, is here asking consent of his father and mother to marriage with one whom they thought unfit for him. He was wise in asking their counsel, but not wise in rejecting it. Captivated with her looks, the big son wanted to marry a daughter of one of the hostile families, a deceitful, hypocritical, whining and saturnine creature, who afterward made for him a world of trouble till she quit him forever. In my text his parents forbade the banns, practically saying: "When there are so many honest and beautiful maidens of your own country, are you so hard put to for a lifetime partner that you propose conjugality with this foreign flirt? Is there such a dearth of lilies in our Israelitish gardens that you must wear on your heart a Philistine thistle? Do you take a crab-apple because there are no pomegranates? Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines?"

Excuseless was he for such a choice in a land and amid a race celebrated for female loveliness and moral worth, a land and a race of which self-denying Abigail, and heroic Deborah, and dazzling Vashti, and pious Esther, and glorious Ruth, and Mary who hugged to her heart the blessed Lord, were only magnificent specimens. The midnight folded in their hair, the lakes of liquid beauty in their eyes, the gracefulness of spring morning in their posture and gait, were only typical of the greater brilliancy and glory of their soul. Likewise excuseless is a man in our time who makes life-long alliance with any one who, because of her disposition, or heredity, or habits, or intellectual vanity, or moral twistification, may be said to be one of the Philistines.

The world never owned such opulence of [illegible] ... save the drug though it should cause the eternal damnation of the whole household; heartless and overbearing, and namby-pamby and unreasonable women, yet married; married perhaps to good men. These are the women who build the low club-houses, where the husbands and sons go because they can't stand it at home. On this sea of matrimony, where so many have wrecked, am I not right in advising Divine pilotage?

Especially is devout supplication needed because of the fact that society is so full of artificialities that men are deceived as to whom they are marrying, and no one but the Lord knows. After the dressmaker, and the milliner, and the jeweler, and the hair-adjuster, and the dancing-master, and the cosmetic art, have completed their work, how is an unsophisticated man to decipher the physiological hieroglyphics, and to make accurate judgment of who it is to whom he offers hand and heart. That is what makes so many recreant husbands. They make an honorable marriage contract, but the goods delivered are so different from the sample by which they bargained. They were simply swindled, and they backed out. They mistook Jezebel for Longfellow's Evangeline, and Lucretia Borgia for Martha Washington.

Aye; as the Indian chief boasts of the scalps he has taken, so there are in society to-day many coquettes who boast of the masculine hearts they have captured. And these women, though they may live amid richest upholstery, are not so honorable as the cyprians of the street, for these advertise their infamy, while the former profess heaven while they mean hell. There is so much counterfeit womanhood abroad it is no wonder that some can not tell the genuine coin from the base. Do you not realize you need Divine guidance when I remind you that mistake is possible in this important affair, and, if made, is irrevocable.

There is in all the world some one who was made for you, as certainly as Eve was made for Adam. All sorts of mistakes occur because Eve was made out of a rib from Adam's side. Nobody knows which of his ribs was taken for the nucleus. If you depend entirely upon yourself in the selection of a wife, there are twenty-three possibilities to one that you will select the wrong rib. By the fate of Ahab, whose wife induced him to steal; by the fate of Macbeth, whose wife pushed him into massacre; by the fate of James Ferguson, the philosopher, whose wife entered the room while he was lecturing and willfully upset his astronomical apparatus, so that he turned to the audience and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I have the misfortune ...

... Christian religion, not fully knowing what she is going to hear; but she will never go twice. A woman, not a Christian, but a respecter of religion, said to me: "I was persuaded by my husband to go and hear an infidel lecturer once, but going home, I said to him: 'My dear husband, I would not go again, though my declination should result in our divorcement forever.'" And the woman was right. If after all that Christ and Christianity have done for a woman she can go again and again to hear such assaults, she is an awful creature and you had better not come near such a reckless leprosy. She needs to be washed and for three weeks to be soaked in carbolic acid, and for a whole year fumigated, before she is fit for decent society. While it is not demanded that a woman be a Christian before marriage, she must have regard for the Christian religion or she is a bad woman and unworthy of being your companion in a life charged with such stupendous solemnity and vicissitudes.

What you want, O man! in a wife, is not a butterfly of the sunshine, not a giggling nonentity, not a painted doll, not a gossiping gad-about, not a mixture of artificialities which leave you in doubt as to where the humbug ends and the woman begins, but an earnest soul, one that can not only laugh when you laugh, but weep when you weep. There will be wide, deep graves in your path of life, and you will both want steadying when you come to the verge of them, I tell you! When your fortune fails you will want some one to talk of the treasures in heaven and not charge upon you with a bitter "I told you so." As far as I can analyze it sincerity and earnestness are the foundation of all worthy wifehood. Get that and you get all. Fail to get that and you get nothing but what you will wish you never had got.

Don't make the mistake that man of the text made in letting his eye settle the question in which coolest judgment directed by divine wisdom are all important. He who has no reason for his wifely choice except a pretty face is like a man who should buy a farm because of the daisies in the front door-yard. Beauty is a talent, and when God gives it he intends it as a benediction upon a woman's face. When the good Princess of Wales dismounted from the rail train last summer, and I saw her radiant face, I could understand what they told me the day before, that when at the great military hospital where are now the wounded and the sick from the Egyptian and other wars the Princess passed through, all the sick were cheered at her coming, and those who could be roused neither by doctor nor nurse from their stupor, would get up on their elbows to look at her, and wan and wasted ...

ENDLESS TIME.

A Faint Idea of the Antiquity of the Earth.

Geological discoveries give us a faint idea of the antiquity of this earth of ours. Mr. Laing takes the coal measures as giving the best idea of the enormous intervals of time required for geological changes. These are made up of seams of coal resting as a rule on a bed of clay known as the under-clay, and covered by a bed of sandstone or shale. From eighty to one hundred of these alternating layers have been found in South Wales and Nova Scotia. The total thickness of the coal measures is in some cases as much as 14,000 feet. Each seam means forest growth, gradual subsidence, covering with deposits, and this is traceable over and over again. Taking an actual measure-thickness of 12,000 feet, Prof. Huxley calculates that the time represented by the coal formation alone would be 6,000,000 of years. Mr. Laing says: "But this takes no account of the long periods during which no accumulation takes place at the localities in question, and of the long phases which must have ensued between each movement of elevation and submergence, and especially between the disappearance of an old and appearance of an almost entirely new epoch, with different forms of animal and vegetable life. We may be certain also that we are far from knowing the total thickness of strata which will be disclosed when the whole surface of the earth comes to be explored. All we can say is that we have fragmentary pages left in the geological record for, at the very least, 100,000,000 of years, and that probably the lost pages are quite as numerous as those of which we have an imperfect knowledge. Sir Charles Lyell, the highest authority on the subject, is inclined to estimate the minimum of geological time at 200,000,000 of years, and few geologists will say that his estimate appears excessive." But he points out that: "Long as is the record of geological time, it is only that of one short chapter in the volume of the history of the universe."—Demorest's Monthly.

PRINCE TONIC

Hamilton, Mo., Nov. 7, '84. W. C. Lewis Med. Co. Gentlemen: I have been afflicted for years with Malignant Blood Poisoning, and had given up all hope of ever being any better, until a friend advised me to try Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, which I did with the most satisfactory results. I have entirely recovered and am enjoying perfect health. I consider your remedy a very valuable preparation for all blood diseases, and general disorders. Very truly yours, Leonard Leigh.

BLOOD PURIFIER

Paris, Ky., May 29, '84. W. C. Lewis Medicine Co.:—For several years I have been tormented every spring with Malarial Fever, until life had become almost unbearable. This year I stole a march, and began early to take your preparation, Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, the result is, I have escaped entirely. I am sure too much can not be said in its favor, as a preventative for Malaria. Yours very resp., Eugene [illegible].

MR. SPARKS' RULINGS.

How the Land Commissioner's Interpretation of the Homestead Law Operates upon Western Settlers.

Mr. F. F. Smith, an old resident of Dakota, whose practice before the land office of that Territory has enabled him to become thoroughly conversant with the subject, was called on by a reporter to obtain his opinion on the rulings of Commissioner Sparks relating to Dakota.

"In the first place," said Mr. Smith, "I will call attention to his Homestead-pre-emption decision, in which he holds that a person who has taken a pre-emption can not afterwards commute a homestead. This decision has been very harmful in its effects, and if persisted in will seriously interfere with settlers and their property interests. The practice of the Land Department for more than twenty years has been to allow a settler who has pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land and paid the government price for it to take an additional one hundred and sixty acres under the Homestead law. Under an amendment of the Homestead law the settlers heretofore have been allowed, after six months' residence and improvement, to make proof of the homestead the same as under the Pre-emption law, instead of living out the required period of five years. This Mr. Sparks says can no longer be done. If his decision had reference only to the future the consequences would not be so serious. But to give it a retroactive effect works great hardship in many cases.

"Dakota has been justly styled 'the paradise of the poor'. People with ample means or with comfortable homes in the East have not as a rule cared to incur the hardships and privations of a life on the bare prairie. Dakota has been largely populated by people of small means, or by persons who have failed in business in the East and seek a new start in life by taking advantage of the Government's bounty. Many who took a homestead in good faith, intending to comply with the requirements of the Homestead law, have found by commuting their homesteads they could dispose of them, and by investing the money thus obtained in stock and necessary farming tools and then filing on pre-emptions could very materially advance their interests and develop farms ...

"What reason do you attribute to Mr. Sparks for giving such a decision?"

"If Mr. Sparks is acting in good faith then he must be misled by interested parties—I mean his special agents. If there were no frauds, real or imaginary, their occupation would soon be gone.

"If Mr. Sparks will come to Dakota and accept my hospitality for a week I will undertake to convince him that his ideas of our people, and especially of the 'land sharks', are entirely erroneous. Mr. Sparks assumes to believe that it is only the 'land sharks' that are affected by his rulings. I suppose he means attorneys. It does not affect them except as it affects the prosperity of the country. When in his indiscriminate fusillade he hits one 'land shark' he strikes down a hundred honest, hardy sons of toil."—Chicago News.

—The common catnip is one of the most valuable plants for bees. The flowers are rich in honey, and for several months, commencing with June of each year, yield it freely at all hours and during all kinds of weather.—Troy Times.

—Brown Bread: Three large cupfuls of rye meal, two of Indian meal, one-half cupful molasses, one pint sour milk, one pint cold water, one teaspoonful soda and one of salt; put it in a pail, cover tight. Steam four hours, then brown in the oven.—Toledo Blade.

—Get a good close look at the hogs at least once, and, if possible, at least twice a day. Spot and separate the first to show symptoms of weakness, loss of appetite, constipation or looseness of the bowels, or any other sign of disease, and keep separate until all danger is passed.—Toronto Globe.

—Breakfast Cakes: One cup of Indian meal, one teaspoonful of salt, and one tablespoonful of sugar. Scald the meal, then add two tablespoonfuls of milk or water, one egg and one tablespoonful of flour. Stir it well. Butter your griddle. Put on large spoonfuls of the batter and fry a light brown.—The Household.

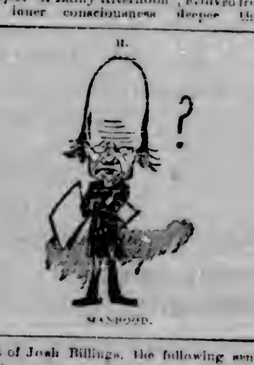
—To keep apples, says an old fruit merchant: "Let a barrel of winter apples freeze solid. Don't touch it, but let it stand just where it is and thaw out thoroughly, but gradually. Cover the apples so that they will be kept quite dark. Thus treated your barrel of apples ... [illegible]

THE OVERBALANCED BRAIN.

Three Significant Eras in the Life of Its Possessor.

[Life.]

YOUTH.



MATURITY.

OLD AGE.

The Peasant and the Serpent.

One day upon his Return from Market a Peasant found a Dangerous Serpent playing with his children. Without stopping to make Inquiries he seized a club and dealt the Reptile a Mortal blow.

"Wasn't your Action an Arbitrary Abuse of Power?" queried the Toad. "I don't think you can Prove that the Serpent had struck one of your Children."

"As to that," replied the Peasant, "the time to kill Poisonous Reptiles is before you are Bitten."

Moral. A Wolf doesn't make his Appearance among Lambs with the Intention of leading them to Sunday-school.—Detroit Free Press.

The Enfant Terrible.

"Were you born before Adam?" asked a little girl of old D'Argent, who was waiting in the parlor while his young fiancee was getting ready for the opera.

"Why, no, my dear, what makes you ask that?" responded D'Argent, benignantly.

"Well, I heard sister Fanny telling Charlie Manners that she hated to have to marry for money alone, and Charlie said: 'Yes; it's hard to be tied to a fossil older than creation.'"—The Judge.

New England Twigs.

A Malden school-mistress thinks that some of her pupils' compositions are funnier than anything of Mark Twain's. From an essay on "Fashion" written by a boy of twelve, she cites the following:

"Sensible people wear sensible fashions, and insensible people insensible fashions." ... [illegible]

OSCULATORY.

Mr. Andrews Kisses a Fair Widow and Pays Six Dollars for the Enjoyment.

[Chicago Inter Ocean.]

The market value of a kiss has been variously estimated at from ten cents to two hundred and fifty dollars, the latter figure being for the choicest article in the osculatory trade. Some youths have been heard to say they would give up their lives for one kiss of the "rosebud" lips of a fair damsel, but that is a very low price, and there is little business done on such terms. There is something peculiar in the disposal of kisses, and it has been noted that the young lady who refuses two dollars or ten dollars as the price of a kiss from some cousin or other relation, will fall gracefully into the arms of a youth who is no relative whatever, and submit to the osculatory performance very quietly and very prettily. Few cases are heard of where the contracting parties have decided on the price of a kiss before the goods are delivered. It is only when Justice is called in to determine the value of a kiss that the little affair is made public. Justice Ingersoll yesterday fixed the price for West Side consumers. He put it at six dollars; that figure, however, pays for the enjoyment of wounding the lady's nose, so that that useful and oftentimes ornamental feature bled freely. Doubtless the Court would have fixed the price at one dollar had it not been for the nose in the case. Mrs. Kate La Beauty lives at No. 361 Lincoln street, and in the same house Mr. Richard Andrews is sheltered from the winter's cold and summer's heat. After talking to her for a time, Richard, so says Mrs. La Beauty, forcibly kissed her, and did it so vehemently that her nose bled. Andrews denied the whole thing, even being so ungallant as to say he could not be hired to kiss some people. He paid what Justice Ingersoll believed to be a fair value for his enjoyment.

RARE RELICS.

[Boston Special.]

Workmen are demolishing three old wooden dwellings on Charter street, opposite the Copp's Hill burying ground, which were built in the early part of the eighteenth century and were for a hundred years the finest residences in the city. Their site is now to be utilized by a gas-light company. During the battle of Bunker Hill a large party of British officers assembled in these houses to witness the engagement, and were forced to vacate somewhat hurriedly, as three balls from Yankee cannon on the hill struck the largest house. One of the balls was imbedded in the chimney, where it remained until a few weeks ago. In demolishing these buildings the workmen have discovered a great many rare and curious coins of silver, brass and copper, some of them dating back to the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Quite a collection of silver plate, bearing a coat of arms, was found buried under the base of one of the chimneys, it having probably been hidden there by the owner during the occupation of Boston by the British troops.

Big Brain in a Little Head.

[St. Paul Globe.]

Over on Dayton's Bluff is a school-house. The school is presided over by a very pretty and interesting young lady teacher, who is a great favorite with the juveniles intrusted to her care, and the boy scholars are constantly in a turmoil as to which shall have the privilege of escorting her home after the close of school. Last week one sagacious six-year-old man determined to be ahead of his companions, and during the afternoon he raised his hand to attract the teacher's attention. When asked what he desired he arose and in a polite manner asked the teacher if "he might have the pleasure of escorting her home after school." The girls laughed, the boys looked cross and the teacher accepted the invitation.

Dazzling as a Rainbow.

[Sacramento Bee.]

This morning, when the Marysville train arrived here a number of Celestials were waiting at the depot to catch sight of an expected bride. She came in charge of an alleged father, who was beaming with pride. The groom at the depot hotel was not in sight, as he was to receive her formally in Chinatown. The woman was arrayed in a red sacque and green dress. On her head was a gold paper crown, from the rear of which fell a red paper cape, and in front her head and face were covered with a red silk handkerchief. She was evidently an aristocrat, for she had "small feet", encased in dainty gold and green slippers.

General Toombs' Dog.

[Atlanta Constitution.]

Mrs. Toombs, when living, had a pet shepherd dog named Julius. Julius went to all the funerals and became an expected participant. When his master died the dog howled pitifully, and from the house to the church kept making demonstrations around the hearse. An effort was made to keep him out of the church, but during the singing of the hymn he stepped in, and, walking down the center aisle, stood a moment in front of the coffin, and, taking his stand at the head of the coffin, kept it until the services were over.

Superstition of the Pawnshop.

[Cincinnati Inquirer.]

There is said to be a tradition that the first man who goes into a pawnshop of a Monday morning is never permitted to leave without having what he wants. Pawnbrokers have a superstition that if they don't sell to the first customer who comes in on Monday they will have bad luck all week. And this has become a rule with people who patronize pawnshops. A man got a forty-dollar overcoat last winter for six dollars, because he went into a pawnbroker's the first on Monday and asked to look at some overcoats.

How She Managed It.

[Holmes County (O.) Republican.]

It takes a schoolma'am for shrewdness. When the weather is cold, and the school-house imperfectly heated, she puts the head of the class nearest the stove, and then all the scholars work like beavers to rank high in their studies.

Two Independent Women.

[Jackson (Ga.) News.]

A lady drove into town Monday with a load of fodder for sale. She said herself and daughter were the only two persons on the farm, and that they were raised independently and asked no favors.

Proof of the Pudding is in the eating; and proof of the excellence of a medicine is its acceptance by the public. Ask your druggist, or almost any one, and they will tell you that the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla, where it has been introduced, has caused it to ride rough shod over all competitors into the very heart of public confidence, and to-day it has a record of success unequaled by any other medicine.

"I was generally run down, had no appetite, and felt the need of a good tonic. I have taken other medicines, but never used any that did me so much good as Hood's Sarsaparilla. I now have a good appetite and feel renewed all over, am better than I have been for years." E. H. Banks, 41 West 9th Street, Oswego, N. Y.

John Kelly was unanimously re-elected sachem of the Tammany society, a position he has held ever since Tweed's flight thirteen years ago. But he is in a fatal decline, and is not likely to last long. His days of political influence and power are numbered.

England is in the throes of another crisis. Under the practice which prevails there of a resignation of the Government—this is, of the Ministry or Cabinet—every time an adverse vote is given in Parliament, that country is fast coming to what her statesmen would call mobocracy or the rule of the rabble were they to see such performances in the United States. And there is now a strong probability that the Parliament may be dissolved and another heated election canvass be precipitated.

The Battle Creek Journal speaks of "the American dollar which is measured by an optional standard silver or gold." There is no such dollar. Since 1873 the dollar "unit of value" has been the gold dollar with no option about it, and since the resumption of the coinage of the silver dollar that exclusive gold standard has been adhered to. "An optional standard of silver or gold" is not practicable—the two may be alternative standards, but when the option is taken, the one chosen becomes the standard.

Some of the papers are saying that they have no objection to the silver dollar, but they want it to contain "an honest dollar's worth of silver." That is all very well. But if the silver dollar maintains its position in relation to other things, and has not depreciated in the mercantile value or purchasing power of the silver it contains, while the gold dollar by the same comparison has advanced 25 per cent., which of them is really the honest dollar? Will some gold monometalist honestly answer that question?

The Secretary of State is having manufactured, under the authority of the act passed by the last legislature for that purpose, a set of books providing for a uniform system of records and accounts for the use of Superintendents of the Poor and keepers of poorhouses throughout Michigan. These books will be ready for delivery about the middle of February. A full set of them will be exhibited and explained before the State Convention of County Superintendents of the Poor to be held in Ionia on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of February.

The prospect of obtaining home rule for Ireland is not as bright as it was immediately after the late elections in England. The feeling among the landlord and titled classed against Parnell's scheme is steadily growing in intensity and bitterness, and the ancient prejudice of the English upper classes against the Celtic race is being skillfully incited to frighten and overawe the party leader who is suspected of have any sympathy with the demands of the unhappy Emerald isle. Nearly every prominent statesman in both parties has been forced to declare against any proposition looking to home rule.

Grand Traverse Herald: The republican senators are perfectly right in asking that the reasons should be given for removal of their constituents from office. If the removals are solely on political grounds let the senate promptly confirm the new appointments, if suitable men are selected for offices; but if republican officials are removed without reasons being given, then the senate should promptly decline to confirm the new appointees. Every man has a right to know why he is removed from office. If he is a good enough republican to be removed because he is a republican there will be no grumbling on his part.

Byron M. Cutcheon, of Manistee, was weighed in the old family scales in 1836. He had arrived in Pembroke, N. H., about 50 minutes prior to that important event. He was a precocious lad, and at the expiration of 17 years had the foundation of a high-priced education. It was good enough for a school teacher, and he was swinging the birchen rod over boys twice his size while trying to initiate them into the mysteries of 'readin,' 'ritin,' 'rithmetic and other useful branches of education. He came to Michigan, and was principal of the Birmingham academy in Ypsilanti before he was of age. He went through the state university with a rush and gathered in the professorship of ancient languages without a struggle. He entered the army and piled up a record as brilliant as it was big. He started as second lieutenant of the Twentieth Michigan, and it kept the department busy making out the red tape evidences of his promotion. Through seven intervening steps of advancement he reached the rank of brevet brigadier general United States volunteers, and only stopped because the war did. He was a whopper. After helping make the war duly binding on the fire masticators of the south, the general took a law course at the university, was admitted to the bar at Ann Arbor, practiced a trial heat at Ionia, and then went to Manistee. Since then he's been busy holding office. He could have had more but there wasn't enough of him to go round. Now he's serving his second term in congress from the Ninth district, with its 18 counties, and his chief trouble will be to quit serving it should he ever desire to.—Detroit Journal.

The White Indians.

An intelligent Indian recently, in reporting the marriage of an Indian octoroon to a white man, said: "If this process goes on, we will soon have the whitest race of Indians you ever did see." The accomplished daughter of the old missionary, Dr. Robertson, married a full-blooded Creek. Her sister has secured money at the East to establish a seminary among the full bloods, and it has been a question where the seminary could be located to meet the object aimed at. Parties stepping from the train at Vinita, within the Cherokee nation, the only railroad crossing in the Indian Territory, commonly ask, "where are the Indians?" On being told that those they see about them are Indians, they reply, "No. They are not Indians; these are white men."

By marrying an Indian maiden, the white man secures all the rights of Indian citizenship. The "headright" of the girl helps the matrimonial contract. To hunters for land, those looking for wide ranges for cattle or agriculture, the temptation is very strong to take this short cut to get an extent of soil they could never hope to secure in any other way.

The encouragement given to the whites on the part of marriageable Indian females is quite observable. They think that by marrying white men they gain socially, and have a prospect for an easier and better care for life. And they think rightly. In all depressed civilizations, women have a hard time of it. The Indian men do not like this constant raiding through their land and capturing the most attractive of their race, whom they would woo and wed, but they cannot help themselves, and retaliate by stealing the affections of white girls and marrying them. White girls entering an Indian reservation are very soon picked up; not so often by full-blooded Indians, but after the process of intermarriage has commenced, not so seldom by half-breeds, quadroons and octoroons.

White persons who marry into Indian blood almost invariably remain on Indian soil. The white man, in defense of Indian ideas of communal interests and Indian questions, as related to the whites, becomes more intensely Indian than the Indians themselves. I think the fiercest defenders of the tribal system are white men who by marriage have become Indian citizens and are making money out of it. The large crops on Indian lands are invariably raised by white men. Four-fifths of the mechanics are white men, brothers-in-law to the Indians. So on both sides the process of dilution of Indian blood goes on until it becomes very thin, while Indian habits and Indian characteristics still remain.

The common notion among Indians is that Indian blood never runs out, and that wherever the slightest trace of it can be found, there the fullest rights of land and privilege follow. For a man who has one-sixteenth or one-thirty-second part of Indian blood, the claim for his right as an Indian is asserted as strongly as for the full-blood. A white man has married an Indian girl, a light blonde, of one-thirty-second Indian blood. His children will be one-sixty-fourth Indian. The family consists of five members. On account of that one-thirty-second Indian blood, that family of five, located on the border of the Indian land, is entitled, by equal division of the tribal land, to five times 995 acres, or 4,975 acres.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Pet Names.

Think of a woman trying to win independence, name and fame; to be a wise exemplar for children and youth; to achieve anything whatever, creditable, honorable or great, yet too timid to write her womanhood name!

Perhaps little girls and quite young women may be pardoned, if, at the present day, under past teaching and example, they are not always found to possess sufficient stamina to write their own names. But for persons of adult and mature age to parade under pet names, is to advertise themselves as weaklings. They are branded cowards by their own hands; they are slain by the point of their own pen.

Could the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" have attained such mighty influence, had she been determined to be known only as "Hattie" Stowe? Does not Harriet Martineau carry an influence and power which "Hattie" could never have approached? Should we have more respect for the creator of "Jane Eyre," if she had figured as "Lottie" Bronte? Would it add to the fame of one of America's foremost lecturers to be heralded as "Mamie" Livermore? Would not "Liddie" Maria Child, "Maggie" Fuller, "Lizzie" Fry, "Carrie" Herschel, "Lizzie" Cady Stanton, "Susie" Anthony, have made us weep—yea, also, and the angels with us—for want of sense and self-respect therein displayed? Can we, for a moment, conceive of women of their moral tone and calibre, writing their names other than they did. No. those real, genuine names carried an immense influence and power, and will to the end. Among lesser lights will not actual, bona fide names carry their corresponding and proportionate weight and force?

But a great many names are pet names. Harriet, for instance, is derived from Harry, Helen is a corruption of Eleanor, and so of many other names. If you are going to discard pet names, why not discard them all?

All derivative names are not necessarily pet names, and such names as are here referred to, have lost their distinctive character as pet names, even if they were ever so considered. They are not now known or assumed to be such.

But little, if any, above this practice in weakness and effeminacy, is the habit, quite too prevalent, of compromising between the real and the pet name, and substituting therefor a nickname, such as "Kate," "May," "Frank." What should we think of Rev. "Bill" White, Hon. "Joe" Black, Prof. "Pete" Gray, Colonel "Dick" Green, and so forth? Supposing we had been taught to look upon the author of "Thanatopsis" as "Bill" Bryant; upon the immortal bard as "Bill" Shakspeare; upon the author of "Evangeline" as "Hen" Longfellow, and upon the great poet-laureate as "Alf" Tennyson. Are not these as inspiring as "Kate" this, "May" that, and "Frank" something else?

If these men had been such weak saplings as to have written themselves thus for posterity, would not their honored names have been shorn of every trace and vestige of dignity and character which they now possess for us, and which they will continue to possess for coming generations? Let us hope that the writing of pet names and nicknames may soon become obsolete among women, for no woman can expect to receive the treatment due to woman, so long as she persists in writing herself a baby.—Marion E. more, in Boston Commonwealth.

THE BARTHOLDI STATUE.

Fair France's Great Statue—Its History—Other Statues.

THE STATUE'S HISTORY.

The history of the great undertaking which will give New York Harbor the largest statue in the world begins nearly ten years ago, when the first steps were taken in the matter by a body of distinguished Frenchmen, enthusiastic lovers of liberty, whom its originator had interested in his noble conception. These gentlemen formed themselves into a society called the Union Franco Americaine de France, and held a banquet Nov. 6, 1875, to inaugurate the project. M. Bartholdi's design was enthusiastically approved, and a subscription for the erection of the statue begun. The City of Paris subscribed $2,000, and in five years France had subscribed, chiefly in small sums, the $250,000 necessary for this purpose. Another banquet was then held in the French Capital, at which an address to the people of the United States was adopted, recalling the alliance of France with this Nation in the cause of liberty during the Revolutionary War, and embodying sentiments expressive of their hearty accord in the maintenance of democratic principles of government. Work on the colossal statue was promptly begun under the superintendence of its designer, who has witnessed its completion. The United States Minister to France at that time, Mr. Morton, drove the first spike, Oct 24, 1881, riveting the first of the bolts which were to join the statue to the pedestal. Only the right arm, head, and shoulders were at that time ready, but all the plaster casts were completed, and steady work was being done with the bronze of which the statue is made. The hand and wrist holding the torch had already arrived in America in time to be exhibited at the Centennial Exhibition, and were afterward temporarily placed in Madison Square, New York.

Meanwhile on this side of the Atlantic measures of co-operation with the generous French nation were taken. Jan. 2, 1877, a meeting of citizens of New York was held for the purpose of presenting the undertaking to the American people, to promote the legislation necessary for the reception and inauguration of the statue, and to create financial means for erecting a suitable foundation and pedestal. Congress passed a resolution providing for the erection of the statue on Bedloe's Island, New York Harbor, and for its maintenance in good order. Moreover, its formal reception by the President of the United States on behalf of the government was secured, and President Grant thanked the French people for the gift by autograph letter. An address to the people of this country asking subscriptions was written and circulated, but funds have come in with provoking slowness, and the statue has seen dark days when its fate trembled in the balance.

ITS SITE.

Springing up from the waters of New York Bay, near the center of the harbor, and commanding an unobstructed view out through the Narrows to the ocean, Bedloe's Island is an especially favorable site for the erection of a beacon light that shall at once guide the mariner to a safe haven and symbolize to the emigrant when he first reaches our shores the idea of liberty which has been so largely instrumental in bringing him hither. The island itself is much larger than appears either from the New York shore or from the lithographic pictures of statue and island which have recently been scattered over the country. It has an area of four or five acres, and will doubtless be a delightful breathing-place for the city resident, and a Mecca to the wonder-hunting country visitor, when it has received the last beautifying touches of the Pedestal Committee and returned to the Government.

The foundation on which the pedestal is to rest is a vast mass of gravel, and sand, and lime, ninety-one feet square at the base, sixty-seven feet square at the top, and fifty-two feet ten inches in height. It rests on a bed of gravel some twenty feet below the surface. This huge mass of what is for all practical purposes a solid block of granite represents the actual work, outside of plans and designs, which has thus far been done for the reception of the statue. Upon this will be built the granite pedestal, 117 feet high, and twenty feet square at the top. The facing of the pedestal is of Leetes Island (Conn.) granite, which is rich purple in color and of great endurance. The statue will be anchored to this pedestal by heavy iron rods passing from each corner of the statue through the pedestal to its base. The statue itself is 151 feet high, made of copper and iron, and weighs nearly 200 tons. An elevator and a stairway will ascend from the base of the pedestal up through the statue to the head, whence the stairs will continue through the uplifted arm to the torch held in the hand. Upon the small balcony beneath the torch there is standing room for fifteen persons. The height of the entire affair is reckoned as follows: Height of base of foundation above high-water mark, 8 feet; height of foundation-mass, 53 feet; height of pedestal, 117 feet; height of statue, 151 feet.

TOTAL 329 FEET.

This raises the torch several feet above the pinnacle of Trinity church spire, the loftiest edifice in the city proper, and makes it nearly as high as the water-tower on the bluff near High Bridge, which is the highest point above the sea level in the city. An incomparably beautiful view will be had of the harbor, the city, and the surrounding country from the apex of the statue.

Aside from its value as an earnest of French good will, as an artistic triumph, and as an observatory, the statue will be useful as a lighthouse. A powerful electric light will illuminate the world by night from the torch, while a coronet of lights will be placed on the spurs of the diadem. It is calculated that these lights will be visible on a clear night at a distance of eighty-eight miles at sea. This will make the statue one of the most important lighthouses on the coast.

The outer wall of the fort, which covers about half of the island, and comes down nearly to the water's edge on the southern side of it, is to be left standing, and will make a very massive and effective frame for the statue, which will be placed in its centre. From the inner or parade wall of the fort a terrace will rise to the base of the pedestal—the space beneath the terrace being utilized for the machinery for the electric lights and the elevator.

THE SCULPTOR.

The distinguished French sculptor, Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, by whose hands the famous statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" [illegible] and is about 50 years of age.

As a pupil of the famous Ary Scheffer his artistic ability was recognized in the bas-relief of "Francesca de Rimini," executed in 1852. His name was first brought into prominence, however, in the United States in 1872, when his well-known statue of Lafayette was forwarded as a gift from the people of France and placed in Union Square, New York City.

At the Centennial, where he was one of the French Commissioners, he was awarded a medal for the exhibition of the bronze statues of "Peace," "The Young Vine Grower," and "Genius in the Grasp of Misery." He is also a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in his native country.

It was his wish that France should present to the people of the United States a suitable gift commemorative of the traditional feeling of good will existing between the two Nations. He therefore volunteered his artistic services for the construction of an enormous figure representing "Liberty Enlightening the World," to be placed on Bedloe's Island in New York Harbor, and he became so enthusiastic in carrying on the project that when subscriptions lagged he pledged his own private fortune to defray the running expenses of the work.

Bartholdi has made his mark in Parisian art, and is at present engaged in the sculpture of a massive lion out of the solid rock in the side of a mountain at Belford, which will be eighty feet long and thirty feet high.

Gen. Charles P. Stone, formerly of the United States army, has been engineer-in-chief of the undertaking, and Richard M. Hunt architect-in-chief.

ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

The conception of monumental work seems to be characteristic of a certain degree in the advancement in the civilization of nations. Without mentioning monuments properly so-called—dolmens, menhirs, columns and pyramids—we generally discover in the history of all great nations mention of some one colossal statue. Its conception often marks the apogee of local progress. The ancients erected many immense works in honor of their divinities. With them the omnipotence of a god often appeared to depend on the magnitude of his image, which, however, they always try to endow with all possible force and majesty. The most imposing figures we recognize as their most powerful and most venerated gods. In ancient Egypt the colossi formed an essential decoration of the grand temples and palaces. Besides its magnificent pyramids, its obelisks 100 feet in height, its gigantic tombs, its innumerable and enormous sphinxes, Egypt was covered with statues fifty and sixty feet high, cut from single blocks of stone.

Herodotus mentions the colossus of Osiris, which was ninety-two feet high. At Memphis a few years ago there was exhumed the statue of Rameses II., which was forty-nine feet high. Before the entrance to the palace of Luxor were seated four similar colossi forty feet high. Near Gournah can still be seen the fragments of a gigantic seated statue of Ramesis the Great, cut from a single red granite stone. The two colossi of Memnon measure more than sixty-two feet each, and with their pedestal weigh more than 1,400 tons. The four seated statues which decorate the facade of the great temple of Isamboul were sixty-one feet high.

The Greeks, also, erected many statues to their divinities; they were most frequently of bronze or covered with plates of gold and ivory.

The Minerva of Phidias was thirty-nine feet high. In reality it was a wooden statue, supported on the inside by iron-work, and covered with beaten and sculptured sheets of gold and plates of ivory finely carved. This was all put together with so much nicety of handling that it was impossible to discover the joints. The celebrated Jupiter Olympus, by the same sculptor, was also of gold and ivory. The god was represented seated, and was forty-two feet high.

Phidias made several other colossal Minervas, one of which, the "Athena Promachos," was entirely of bronze, fifty to sixty feet in height. The Colossus of Rhodes, the work of Chares of Lindos, was erected 300 years B. C., in honor of Apollo. To assure its stability it was filled with large stones. Nevertheless it was overthrown by an earthquake.

Rome, especially under the Empire, erected many colossal bronze statues, most often representing Cæsars deified during their lifetime. That of Nero, by Zenodorous, was 110 feet high.

In Japan can be seen a bronze statue of the great Buddha, seated, which is fifty feet high. In China and India the greater part of the gigantic idols are of masonry or of wood roughly carved. Wood, except in rare cases, as the wooden horse of Troy, has hardly ever been employed in colossal statuary, save in the interiors of temples.

Chewing Gum Advised.

"Thinness is a physical characteristic of Americans. I account for this because of the fact that they are in a new country to whose climate they have not become used. Even the descendants of people who came to America two hundred years ago are not fully acclimated. This is true, it matters not to what country people may remove. Natural history has demonstrated that at least three hundred years are required to acclimatize a native that has taken up his abode in a new country. Now, as thinness is a characteristic of Americans, they ought to use whatever will make them fat and they ought not to use what will keep them lean. The habit of chewing gum causes certain juices which aid digestion to flow freely, unmixed with any injurious substance. The habit of chewing tobacco also causes these juices to flow freely, but the tobacco chewer either expels them from his mouth or swallows them mixed with the poisonous juice of the weed. I see you have your note book out; just jot down this fact: Twenty years ago the rule was that southern women were thin and delicate; it is not the rule now. Southern women are not physically equaled in all North America. Any physician who is as well informed as he ought to be will tell you that is true. This change is due to the habit of chewing gum. You may smile, you may even laugh, if you please, but I am telling you a plain fact. As to southern men, they are as thin and gaunt as they ever were, and so they will remain until they cease to chew tobacco and begin to chew gum.—Macon Messenger.

CHARLEVOIX, : MICHIGAN.

PENNSYLVANIANS think there is no doubt about this being a happy New Year. The Legislature will not meet at all.

THE Connecticut Supreme Court has decided that Yale students who are residents of New Haven only as students can not vote there.

THE Brooklyn (N. Y.) bridge cars carried 21,604,226 passengers in the year 1885. These passengers paid fares amounting to $626,793.85.

EX-SENATOR STEWART, of Nevada, is to put gold lightning-rods on his new house at Carson. The lightning will strike a genuine bonanza there.

THE Russian Government having decided to allow the retailing of liquor only in hotels and eating-houses, 90,000 liquor shops were closed on January 1.

PEOPLE continue to eat raw pork, at the risk of an attack of the terrible trichiniasis. No one has ever been known to have an attack of that deadly malady from eating pork that had been thoroughly cooked.

ENGLAND has annexed Burmah, and no longer will the merry Theebaw and his numerous wives wield the scepter of the white elephant. The sacred beast of Burmah has become, perforce, the British lion.

THE young lady, Miss Jones, of Hyland, Ulster County, N. Y., who recently received $50,000 for an act of kindness to an elderly lady in New York City, has already received eleven letters asking her hand in marriage.

A REVIEW of the cattle trade of Montana shows that during the past year the Territory received 100,000 head by trail from the South, and the Northern Pacific brought in 27,000 calves from the East and 38,000 from the West.

HENRY ESPOIG applied for a marriage license at Cincinnati the other day, but, being unable to give the name of the prospective bride, he was sent back to ascertain it. He returned with the necessary information, and secured his license.

THERE is an ex-Acting Vice President alive, it seems, whom everybody has forgotten for many years—David R. Atchison, of Missouri, who in 1853 was chosen by the Senate to fill the place of Vice-President William R. King, deceased.

SPEAKER HUSTED, of the New York Assembly, stated in his opening speech that, although it was only eight years since he was before elevated to the same office, not a single other member who sat in the Assembly then was a member of the present body.

HON. BENTON MCMILLIN, of Tennessee, member of Congress, and Miss Maria Brown, daughter of ex-Governor of that State, were married at Pulaski the other day. Bishop Quintard, who performed the ceremony, also joined the bride's parents many years ago.

A TEAMSTER who was accidentally killed in an Eastern city the other day was thought to be without relatives, but it got out that deceased had been left fifty thousand dollars by a Western relative, and already two alleged wives have put in an appearance, deeply bereaved.

THE recently completed census of Charleston, S. C., shows a total population of over 60,000, against about 49,000 in 1880, an increase of over twenty per cent. The white population is about 27,500 and the colored over 32,500. The colored surplus consists mainly of children.

AN audacious robbery occurred in a wholesale house in Boston the other night, where a stranger came up from the basement at the opening of business with a gripsack containing five hundred dollars' worth of silk, and escaped without being suspected. He had spent the night in the building.

THREE years ago the banking house of Charles H. Sweet & Co., at Boston, failed for $3,800,000. The creditors were some time ago paid the principal in full, and now they have been notified that the interest due on their claims is ready for them. This is a case of phenomenal honesty well worthy of record.

IN this New Year of our Lord, 1886, Washington's Birthday comes on Monday, Valentine's Day on Sunday, St. Patrick's Day on Wednesday, April Fool's Day on Thursday, Memorial Day on Sunday, Fourth of July on Sunday and Christmas on Saturday. Lent begins March 10; Easter Sunday will be the 25th of April.

THE Governor of Arizona reports that Territory as paying ten per cent. interest upon warrants for $120,948, and the indebtedness of the several counties is $1,101,625. When all the appropriations of the last Assembly are provided for, the Territorial debt will be $700,000. The insane people cost six dollars per week each at the asylum at Stockton, Cal.

A GAME of celestial hide-and-seek worth looking at now goes on every clear evening in the Southern sky. Sirius, close following young Orion, seeks night after night to catch a glimpse of Venus, but that worthy body, as if grown coy all at once, slips behind the curtain of the West. As Venus goes down Sirius comes up—the one the brightest of golden planets, the other the most brilliant of luminaries.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Interesting News Compilation.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

MONDAY, Jan. 11.—In the Senate Mr. Harrison made a favorable report on the bill to admit Dakota and organize the Territory of Lincoln. Mr. Beck's silver resolution was discussed by Mr. Pugh, and Mr. Manderson spoke on his bill for reorganization of the army. Mr. Townshend (Ill.) introduced a bill providing for the issue by the Treasury of silver certificates in denominations of $1, $2 and $5 each. Among the nominations confirmed were those of the Civil-Service Commissioners. In the House bills were introduced for the issue of small silver certificates for circulating medium, for large certificates on deposited silver bullion, for fractional paper currency, and to pay out all except $50,000,000 of the Treasury surplus in redemption of bonds; to divide Dakota and create the Territory of Lincoln, and to prohibit aliens from acquiring title to lands. The call of States brought forward 650 new measures, making the total nearly 4,000.

TUESDAY, Jan. 12.—A long debate took place in the Senate on the financial problem. Mr. Vance declared that silver could not be demonetized, and that the attempt to depreciate it was one of the grandest conspiracies ever seen. The nomination of Conrad N. Jordan as United States Treasurer was confirmed. In the House Mr. Caldwell reported favorably the Hoar Presidential Succession bill. In a debate on the President's message Mr. Reagan advocated the double standard of value, opposed the suspension of compulsory silver coinage, and proposed to charter no more National banks.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 13.—In the Senate a bill was introduced to prevent the publication of lottery advertisements, and the House amendments to the bill legalizing the Territorial Legislature of Wyoming were concurred in. In executive session a large number of Presidential nominations were confirmed. In the House a bill was passed to legalize the election of the Territorial Assembly of Wyoming. Mr. Curtin declined the Chairmanship of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and was excused from serving.

THURSDAY, Jan. 14.—A petition was presented in the Senate from commercial travelers for relief from burdensome local taxation. Bills were introduced to amend the pension laws; appropriating $10,000 for a monument in Washington to James Madison, and to fix the rate of postage on fourth-class matter at two cents for each ounce or fractional part thereof. The silver question was discussed. Adjourned to the 18th. In the House a long discussion took place on the Presidential-Succession bill. It was resolved to hold Friday night sessions for the consideration of pension bills.

EMILY BARMORE, a reputable colored woman of Anderson County, S. C., froze to death with two young children in the recent storm.

THE United States Senate was not in session on the 15th. In the House the Presidential-Succession bill was passed, precisely as it came from the Senate, by a vote of 185 to 77. This bill provides that in case of the death, removal, resignation or inability to act of both the President and Vice-President the office shall devolve upon the Secretary of State, and then upon the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War, Attorney-General, Postmaster-General, Secretary of the Navy or Secretary of the Interior, in the order named, should further vacancy occur. A rule forbidding the sale of spirituous liquors in the House restaurant was adopted.

A TALE OF WOE.

Vain Attempt of Life-Savers on the New England Coast to Rescue a Ship-Wrecked Crew—Six Sailors, a Woman and a Child Perish in Sight of Succor—Great Damage to Fruit in Florida by the Cold Snap—The Weather in Other Sections of the Country—Floods in the Balkans.

NANTUCKET, Mass., Jan. 13.—At daybreak Monday Patrolman Freeman of the United States life-saving station at the south shore of Nantucket, discovered a large three-masted schooner stranded on his beat. Boats and apparatus were immediately sent to the scene. The sea was running too high to launch a boat, and the schooner seemed logged, her own boat gone, and the crew frozen to the rigging. The howitzer was at once loaded and a ball and line shot successfully over the vessel. The line was grasped by two of the crew, who tried to pull it aboard, a hawser with running block and breeches-buoy being attached. Before it reached the vessel the line parted and the hawser was hauled ashore. When the hawser parted it broke on board the vessel, and one of the crew was drawn overboard by the weight. The poor fellow made vigorous attempts to save his life by swimming, but perished in a very few minutes in sight of the large crowd on the shore.

A second line was shot over the vessel, but parted as before. A life-raft, manned by eight men, was launched, but the sea flung it back like a feather, drenching the crew, one man being swept from the raft by one sea and swept back by another, his comrades barely clutching and saving him from instant death. A third ball was then shot out, the line breaking as before. All efforts to succor the crew now seemed vain, especially as the day was declining. Two men in the rigging had given up and fallen overboard, one of them proving to be the master. His body drifted in on a wave. Late in the evening another attempt was made with the howitzer. This time it was a success. Soon a man in a perishing condition was hauled, wrapped in blankets, and sent to the station. Then came one more, the last survivor of nine, Charles Wulff, of Boston, who reported that the one who preceded him was the chief mate, and that his wife and son were drowned in the cabin.

The vessel was the T. B. Witherspoon, of Rockland, Me., Captain Alfred A. Anderson, from Surinam for Boston, loaded with molasses, sugar, cocoa, salted hides and spice. The list of the crew and passengers is as follows: Captain Alfred R. Anderson, Rockland, Me., lost; Second Mate Maurice Ryner, Minconville, Me., lost; John Phillips, cook, West Indies, lost; Charles Wulff, Boston, saved; Nichols, Amsterdam, lost; John Mattis, Liverpool, lost; August Chase, lost, Mrs. Burdick Berry and son, lost. The remains of the Captain were taken in charge by the Freemasons of Nantucket, he belonging to that order. The body of Mrs. Berry has not yet been recovered. The cargo is about all washed out of the vessel and will be a total loss. Several comments are made on the United States life-saving station for not having a service rope strong enough to haul the hawser aboard the first time. More lives would have been saved if the break had not occurred.

JACK FROST'S RECENT TOUR.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 13.—This has been the longest and severest cold spell ever felt in Florida. The loss in oranges on the trees, according to Captain Ives, manager of the Florida Fruit Exchange, is $1,000,000. The loss to the vegetable crop is immense, some men having sixty and a hundred acres killed.

The freeze extended to the extreme southern point of the peninsula. A message from Punta Rossa says that the thermometer marked 27 degrees, freezing everything. News from New Smyrna, Dayton and other points along the Halifax and Indian Rivers says that the oranges on the trees are frozen, but the trees were damaged to no great extent.

Water plugs, tanks, etc., were frozen solid here yesterday morning. Skating was indulged in upon the ponds, a scene never before witnessed in Florida. All the growers say that the trees are in splendid condition to withstand the freeze, owing to the severe weather previous. The thawing will probably leave things in a more hopeful condition.

CHICAGO, Jan. 13.—The fatalities in the agricultural portions of southern Illinois during the late cold spell have been numerous. Two men were frozen near the little town of Flora while driving cattle from a field. An unknown man was found dead on the track not far from Odin. Two cars of hogs, part of a blockaded freight-train, were found frozen stiff Saturday morning. The trees in the southern part of the State had budded in the warm weather of the past month. These will nearly all die, and the loss will, doubtless, be large. The farmers say flocks of dead prairie chickens and coveys of frozen quail can be seen on nearly all farms. They think few wild fowl will survive the blizzard. The snow was not over three inches deep on the level, but the gale drifted it badly. The thermometer ranged from 18 to 23 degrees below zero. Some colder weather was reported, but it is thought those reports were exaggerations. The present storm is the worst one Southern Illinois has had for years.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—Reports from the interior of the State show that Monday night was the coldest of the season, the thermometer indicating from twenty-five to thirty degrees below zero.

BOSTON, Jan. 13.—From all parts of New England come reports of very cold weather. At Moretown, Vt., it is forty degrees below zero.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—Telegraphic advices state that a heavy snow-storm prevailed at Galveston, Tex., yesterday. Four inches of snow had already fallen and it was still snowing hard.

MONTREAL, CAN., Jan. 13.—The cold was intense yesterday morning, the mercury touching 26 below zero. A large part of the city is still inundated, entailing terrible suffering on poor people, whose houses, in many instances, are masses of ice. Horses and cattle have been frozen to death in the stables.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOODS IN THE BALKANS.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—A thaw accompanied by heavy rains caused much destruction in the Balkans. The Maritza, the principal river in Roumelia, has overflowed its banks, flooding the surrounding country. Bridges have been swept away and a number of villages have been destroyed.

A Rush to Death.

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., Jan. 13.—An engineer and three firemen were killed in a collision yesterday on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, two or three miles west of Alida, where the Baltimore & Ohio and Monon routes cross. The trains were very heavy freights. The west-bound train should have stopped at Alida for orders, but it is said that the engineer and fireman were both asleep, and they ran to the crossing at a high rate, and continued on a down grade to the place where the other train was met. Three engines and twenty cars of merchandise were piled together and took fire. The names of the unfortunates have not been learned.

Highwaymen Plunder a Stage-Coach.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 13.—Monday morning the stage-coach running between Chadron, on the Fremont, Elkhorn Valley & Missouri Valley Railroad and Fort Robinson, was held up near Dawes City by masked highwaymen, who carried off the treasure-box of the express company, containing $5,000 consigned to Fort Robinson to pay off troops. Detachments of cavalry from Robinson and Niobrara are now hunting for the robbers.

Forsaken in His Old Age.

LIMA, O., Jan. 13.—Jacob Troup starved to death here, and his remains were buried at public expense. He had a son in Kansas worth $50,000, who refused to recognize or aid him.

AN EARTHQUAKE.

Amatitlan, a City of Guatemala, Visited by One Hundred and Thirty-One Shocks in One Day—Many Buildings Wrecked, but No Loss of Life Reported.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Mail advices from Panama of the 5th inst. contain the following: At two o'clock on the morning of December 18 the Spanish city of Amatitlan, in Guatemala, a town of 5,000 inhabitants, situated twenty-five miles south of Guatemala City, was awakened by frequent shocks of earthquake, which continued all day. At 5:22 p. m. a very heavy shock was felt, and at 5:36 p. m. a still heavier one, which threw down many walls and houses already fissured by the early shocks. People were thrown off their feet, and the air was filled with dust from the fallen houses. Shock followed upon shock and the frightened people rushed to the large plaza in front of the Church of San Juan and dragged the image of their guardian saint outside the trembling walls of the church and erected a temporary shrine in the middle of the square, before which all prostrated themselves. One hundred and thirty-one shocks were felt the first day, the movement being principally from east to west, eighty-one of which occurred between four and 5:36 o'clock p. m. The second day was nearly as bad, and shocks continued for some days subsequently.

Amatitlan was destroyed by earthquakes in 1830, which lasted from April 21 to May 9. In 1846 it was overflowed by the rising of the waters of the lake, and again in October, 1852, the water gushed up in the middle of the streets. Eight days afterward, when the waters had subsided, dead fish were found everywhere, the water became unfit to drink, and many persons died of fevers. It was again destroyed by earthquakes in 1862. Lake Amatitlan is supposed to be the crater of an extinct volcano. An adjacent volcano, until recently quiet, seems to be seeking a new outlet through a hill lying back of the inactive volcano of Pecayo. The volcanoes of Fuego, in Guatemala, and Izalco, in Salvador, not far away, which have long served as the safety-valves of these restless regions, seem to have become stopped up, causing much alarm to the people of Salvador, who say that there was a precisely similar occurrence before their last great earthquake in 1873.

VOLCANIC MOVEMENTS IN ECUADOR.

GUAYAQUIL, Jan. 15.—There have been slight shocks of earthquakes, accompanied by loud rumblings and showers of earth and ashes, at different places in Ecuador during the last few days, and it is supposed that the volcano of Cotopaxi is in eruption. The real state of the mountain is unknown, owing to the interruption of the Government telegraphs. Slight shocks of earthquake have also been felt.

CLEVELAND'S PERIL.

"Needle" Ice Chokes Up the Outlets of the Water-Works Tunnel in the Forest City—The Water Supply Completely Shut Off—Manufacturing Establishments Compelled to Suspend Work—The City in Great Danger in Case of Fire.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 15.—There is imminent danger of a water famine here. For two or three days large quantities of fine or needle ice has been drawn into the tunnel leading from the lake crib to the pumping station. There are four pumps, with a combined daily capacity of 10,000,000 gallons. At twelve o'clock Wednesday night it was found necessary to shut down one of these pumps, and another was compelled to stop work at daylight yesterday morning because of the ice.

The two big pumps which were kept at work at intervals during the afternoon were shut down last evening, the supply of water having been cut off entirely. The cause of the stoppage, as given by the water-works officials, is that the standpipe which leads into the tunnel out at the crib, and not the tunnel itself, is choked with ice. Five men have been at work all day trying to dislodge the obstruction, but thus far without avail. The task is a difficult one for the reason that it requires the services of a diver. There is only a small amount of water in the reservoirs, and the supply is virtually exhausted. The West and South sides are without water, and this is the case with the east side, except on streets along the direct mains from the reservoirs. People who have wells are using the water therefrom, and those who are fortunate enough to possess a cistern drink rain-water. Others are compelled to melt snow.

Manufacturing establishments that depend on city water for their boilers were shut down, and to-night water is being hauled from the river and lake to supply establishments that must run at night. The city is in a perilous position. Should a fire break out in the business part the department could do nothing with it. They could get no water, and the only apparatus that could be called into service would be two or three chemical engines.

At eleven o'clock last night the water-works officials had given up all hopes of removing the ice from the stand-pipe before to-day. The pipe is ninety feet in height and nine feet in diameter and is packed full of ice. It may be necessary to wait until the weather becomes warmer and the ice thaws, for it seems almost an impossibility to remove the obstruction by any mechanical process.

CAUGHT NAPPING.

Six of the Convicts Who Escaped from an Arkansas Coal Mine Captured by an Old Farmer.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 15.—Some time ago a number of convicts employed in the mines at Coal Hill escaped by tunneling their way out. A number of officers, in the hope of obtaining the reward for their capture, went in pursuit of the prisoners, following several of them off toward Indian Territory. To their great surprise, an old farmer made his appearance at the camp Wednesday, and called for the "Captain." He gave his name as James Johnson, and had six of the refugees in tow, all standing in a row with their hands on each other's shoulders. He told how he had heard of the escape and believed that on account of the intensely cold weather the men would seek shelter instead of travelling, and decided to undertake their capture. He located ten of them and Wednesday night when they were sleeping in a hay-stack, captured their guard and five of his companions. The remainder escaped, but he believes he knows their location. He told the officer that when he left he would soon return with more of the convicts, and would then take the reward for all he obtained. The old pioneer who made the capture was armed with a double-barrel shot-gun, one of the barrels being worthless. He did not fire a shot in his capture.

Victims of the Recent Kansas Storm.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 15.—The full extent of the disastrous effects of the late storm in Western Kansas is just becoming known as reports arrive from relief parties and others. The death-roll of victims, known and unknown, numbers eighteen, while a half-dozen other persons are known to be missing.

Three deaths occurred in the sparsely settled border counties in the southwestern and western parts of the State, where oftentimes communication is difficult. It is feared that further reports will increase still more the list of fatalities. The loss on cattle is also considered very heavy.

The Tax on Commercial Travelers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The Senate Committee on Commerce gave a hearing yesterday to a delegation from the Travelers' Protective Association of the United States, consisting of prominent merchants from New York, Philadelphia, Boston and other large cities. They ask that Congress prohibit the imposition of special taxes and licenses upon commercial travelers. In the Southern States this is growing to be an outrage. Chicago merchants represent that great injustice is done in Western territories in taxes on salesmen. Montana imposes a tax of $100 a year, the City of Helena $15 extra, Butte City $10 extra, and other towns from $10 to $15 extra.

A DEADLY BLAST.

Thirteen Lives Lost by an Explosion of Fire-Damp in a Wyoming Mine—Great Destruction of Property in the Vicinity—The Disaster Due to Carelessness.

EVANSTON, Wy. T., Jan. 16.—The fire-damp explosion in Mine No. 4 at Almy, three miles northwest of this place, proves to have been one of the most serious in the history of Rocky Mountain coal mines. Occurring as it did last night, when only a light force of miners were at work, the death toll was limited to thirteen souls, but had it taken place during the day the loss of life must have run up into hundreds, for every person in the mines at the time met with instant death. The whole face of the country and that portion of the settlement fronting the slope gives evidence of the terrible force of the explosion. The weigh and fan houses were entirely demolished and the engine house wrecked, while residences and business houses lost fronts, windows, doors and chimneys. The mouth of the slope has the appearance of a huge funnel, from which fully a thousand cubic yards of rock have been torn and distributed over the adjacent country. A train of thirteen cars going down into the mine at the time of the explosion was broken into fragments and shot out as though from the mouth of a cannon. William and Joseph, passengers thereon, were most terribly mutilated, the former being blown over the engine-house and a portion of the town. The body was found seven hundred feet from the mouth of the slope minus the head and arm and the contents of the stomach. It had bounded and rolled fully thirty yards after striking the ground. Timbers and track for seventy feet inside the slope were torn up and scattered over the surrounding country, and the ground for fully half a mile from the mouth of the mine was crowded with pieces of cars, ties, timbers and other debris. Every air shaft was blown away, leaving huge pits. Many people living near the mine narrowly escaped death. Huge timbers crashed through the roof of Superintendent Faulk's residence, two hundred and fifty yards from the slope, and fell between two beds occupied at the time by himself and family. John Smith lives in a house in front of the air-shaft in the mouth of the mine. Here the force of the explosion tore a great hole in the earth twenty feet in diameter, and a rock weighing over a ton fell through the roof into the kitchen, demolishing the stove. The store of Beckwith, Quinn & Co., two hundred feet away, lost its front, and some goods were damaged. The wheel from the pit-car passed through an out-house near by, as if thrown from a catapult.

The killed number thirteen. The bodies of the last of the victims were taken out yesterday morning. The mine did not take fire as at first reported, and nothing save the destruction of the fan house and consequent trouble in getting pure air into the mine delayed the exploration and recovery of the bodies. All of the victims save two were Mormons, married, and leave large families. The most acceptable theory as to the cause of the explosion is this. Two foremen are employed to examine the mine every night for fire-damp to see that it is clear before the day shift goes on. These men carry both open and safety lamps, and it is believed one of them ventured into some room with the former where an unusual quantity of gas had accumulated. An explosion occurred here in mine No. 3 in March, 1883, by which thirty-two Chinamen and six white men lost their lives. Mine No. 4, however, was considered the model of the camp, and extreme carelessness is the only reasonable explanation of the explosion.

THE VOICE OF TRADE.

A Forecast of the Resolutions Likely to Be Adopted by the National Board of Trade at Its Coming Meeting in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The National Board of Trade will hold its annual convention here in a few days. The resolutions which will be adopted have been prepared and sent here by Secretary Hamilton K. Hill, of Boston. The resolutions urge Congress to provide for a National Board of Railroad Commissioners; that a mail subsidy not greater than thirty cents per ton gross register be paid for every 1,000 miles of actual voyage to American vessels over 1,000 tons actually engaged in foreign commerce; that retaliatory legislation be enacted upon foreign Governments which have laws against American pork; favor reciprocity treaties with Canada and Mexico, favor suspension of silver coinage; urge provision for ample sea-coast defenses, ask that Congress define the jurisdiction of the United States over the navigable waters of the country; demand that the bonded period of three years, except for perishable fruits, etc., be abolished; denounce the tax on commercial travelers; favor a National Bankrupt law as set forth in the Lowell bill; ask the abolishment of taxes on alcohol used in the arts and manufactures, favor a postal telegraph system; urge an amendment to the Constitution so that the President can veto separate items in appropriation bills; ask the abolition of certificates of United States Consuls in relation to importations; say the Presidential term should be extended to six years, and that no President should be eligible for a second term.

Unhappy Ireland.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The Earl of Carnarvon, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, declares that Parliament will not help to relieve the dreadful distress prevailing among the inhabitants of Achill and Eagle Island. Lord Carnarvon adds that his sole reliance for affording relief to the starving people is the limited means at his disposal of sending the poor unfortunates to the workhouse. He, however, hopes that private contributions for the relief of the sufferers will enable the poor people to remain in their houses instead of being compelled to seek shelter in the already much overcrowded workhouses.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—An Irish High Sheriff has written to the Times that, pending the discussion of politics by Parliament, a famine is approaching Ireland, and with it will come acts of lawlessness. Violent men, he says, determined not to starve, will seize the necessaries of life even at the risk of doing bodily harm to others.

Frozen to Death on the Plains.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 16.—Two men named Fuhr and Burns, who left Benkelman, Neb., a week ago Monday, on a hunting trip, were found yesterday frozen to death under a snowdrift eight miles from town. They had evidently lost their way in the recent storm on their return home. A teamster and a herder were found frozen near the same place yesterday. Akron, on the eastern line of Colorado, reports several persons frozen in the same storm. They are supposed to have been homesteaders, living a great way apart, who settled on land late last fall and were wholly unprepared for severe weather. Some of them perished in attempting to reach a neighboring ranch.

Corn and Hogs.

CHICAGO, Jan. 16.—The Times publishes reports from nearly five hundred points as to the crop of corn and hogs in the Northwest and Southwest. It appears that the yield of corn has been over-estimated and its quality ranked too high. Ohio and Indiana farmers have sold more freely than those in other States. The hog-cholera has made its appearance in every State of the corn-belt, forcing hogs upon the market much more rapidly than is usual, and it is probable that the receipts at the chief packing points for the remainder of the season will be less than last year.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Second Discourse of the Series on "The Marriage Ring."

Pointed Suggestions as to What a Woman Should Avoid in Choosing a Husband —None But God a Safe Guide in Deciding the Question.

We give below Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's second sermon of his course on "The Marriage Ring," delivered recently in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The text for this discourse was:

The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you, in the house of her husband.

Dr. Talmage said:

This was the prayer of the pious Naomi for Ruth and Orpah, and is an appropriate prayer now in behalf of unmarried womanhood. Naomi, the good old soul, knew that the devil would take their cases in hand if God did not, so she prays: "The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you, in the house of her husband."

In this series of sermons on "The Marriage Ring," I last Sabbath gave prayerful and Christian advice to men in regard to the selection of a wife, and to-day I give the same prayerful and Christian advice to women in regard to the selection of a husband, but in all these sermons saying much that I hope will be appropriate for all ages and all classes.

I applaud the celibacy of a multitude of women who, rather than make unfit selection, have made none at all. It has not been a lack of opportunity for marital contract on their part, but their own culture and refinement and their exalted idea as to what a husband ought to be, have caused their declinature. They have seen so many women marry imbeciles, or ruffians, or incipient sots, or life-long incapables, or magnificent nothings, or men who before marriage were angelic and afterward diabolic, that they have been alarmed and stood back. They saw so many boats go into the maelstrom that they steered into other waters. Better for a woman to live alone, though she live a thousand years, than to be annexed to one of these masculine failures with which society is surfeited. The patron saint of almost every family circle is some such unmarried woman, and among all the families of cousins she moves around, and her coming is each house is the morning, and her going away is the night.

In my large circle of kindred, perhaps twenty families in all, it was an Aunt Phebe. Paul give a letter of introduction to one whom he calls "Phebe, our sister," as she went up from Cenchrea to Rome, commending her for her kindness and Christian service, and imploring for her all courtesies. I think Aunt Phoebe was named after her. Was there a sickness in any of the households, she was there ready to sit up and count out the drops of medicine. Was there a marriage, she helped deck the bride for the altar. Was there a new soul incarnated, she was there to rejoice at the nativity. Was there a sore bereavement, she was there to console. The children rushed out at her first appearance crying, "Here comes Aunt Phebe," and but for parental interference they would have pulled her down with their caresses, for she was not very strong, and many severe illnesses had given her enough glimpses of the next world to make her heavenly-minded. Her table was loaded up with Baxter's "Saints' Rest," Doddridge's "Rise and Progress," and Jay's "Morning and Evening Exercises," and John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and like books, which have fitted out whole generations for the heaven upon which they have already entered.

"De Witt," she said to me one day, "twice in my life I have been so overwhelmed with the love of God that I fainted away and could hardly be resuscitated. Don't tell me there is no heaven. I have seen it twice." If you would know how her presence would soothe an anxiety, or lift a burden, or cheer a sorrow, or leave a blessing on every room in the house, ask any of the Talmages. She had tarried at her early home, taking care of an invalid father, until the bloom of life had somewhat faded, but she could interest the young folks with some three or four tender passages in her own history, so that we all knew it was not through lack of opportunity that she was not the queen of one household, instead of being a benediction on a whole circle of households. At about seventy years of age she made her last visit to my house, and when she sat in my Philadelphia Church, I was more embarrassed at her presence than by all the audience, because I felt that in religion I had got no further than the a. b. c., while she had learned the whole alphabet, and for many years had finished the y and z. When she went out of this life into the next, what a shout there must have been in Heaven, from the front door clear to the back seat in the highest gallery! I saw the other day in the village cemetery of Somerville, N. J., her resting place, the tombstone having on it the words which, thirty years ago, she told me she would like to have inscribed there, namely, "The Morning Cometh."

Had she a mission in the world? Certainly. As much as Caroline Herschel, first amanuensis for her illustrious brother, and then his assistant in astronomical calculations, and then discovering worlds for herself, dying at ninety-eight years of age, still busy with the stars till she sped beyond them; as much as had Florence Nightingale, the nurse of the Crimea; or Grace Darling, the oarswoman of the Long Stone Light-house; or Mary Lyon, the teacher of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary; or Hannah Moore, the Christian authoress of England; or Dorothea Dix, the angel of mercy for the insane; or Anna Etheridge, among the wounded of Blackburn's Fort; or Margaret Breckenridge, at Vicksburg; or Mary Shelton, distributing roses and grapes and cologne in Western hospitals; or thousands of other glorious women like them, who never took the marriage sacrament. Appreciate all this, my sister, and it will make you deliberate before you rush out of the single state into another, unless you are sure of betterment.

Deliberate and pray. Pray and deliberate. As I showed you in my former sermon, a man ought to supplicate divine guidance in such a crisis: how much more important that you solicit it! It is easier for a man to find an appropriate wife than a woman to find a good husband. This is a matter of arithmetic, as I showed in a former discourse. Statistics show that in Massachusetts and New York States women have a majority of hundreds of thousands. Why this is we leave others to surmise. It would seem that woman is a favorite with the Lord, and that therefore he has made more of this kind. From the order of the creation in Paradise, it is evident that woman is an improved edition of man. But whatever be the reason ...

... self to cigars. If a woman make a bad job of marital selection, the probability is that nothing but a funeral can relieve it. Divorce cases in court may interest the public, but the love letters of a married couple are poor reading except for those who write them. Pray that you be delivered from irrevocable mistake.

Avoid alliance with a despiser of the Christian religion, whatever else he may have or may not have. I do not say he must needs be a religious man, for Paul says the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife; but marriage with a man who hates the Christian religion will insure you a life of wretchedness. He will caricature your habit of kneeling in prayer. He will speak depreciatingly of Christ. He will wound all the most sacred feelings of your soul. He will put your home under the anathema of the Lord God Almighty. In addition to the anguish with which he will fill your life, there is great danger that he will despoil your hope of Heaven, and make your marriage relation an infinite and eternal disaster. If you have made such an engagement, your first duty is to break it. My word may come just in time to save your soul.

Further, do not unite in marriage with a man of bad habits, in the idea of reforming him. If now, under the restraint of your present acquaintance, he will not give up his bad habits, after he has won the prize you can not expect him to do so. You might as well plant a violet in the face of a northeast storm, with the idea of appeasing it. You might as well run a schooner alongside of a burning ship, with the idea of saving the ship. The consequence will be, schooner and ship will be destroyed together. The alms-house could tell the story of a hundred women who married men to reform them. If by twenty-five years of age a man has been grappled by intoxicants, he is under such headway that your attempt to stop him would be very much like running up the track with a wheelbarrow to stop a Hudson River express train. What you call an inebriate nowadays is not a victim to wine or whisky, but to logwood and strychnine and nux vomica. All these poisons have kindled their fires in his tongue and brain, and all the tears of a wife weeping can not extinguish the flames. Instead of marrying a man to reform him let him reform first and then give him time to see whether the reform is to be permanent. Let him understand that if he can not do without his bad habits for two years he must do without you forever.

Avoid union with one supremely selfish or so wound up in his occupation that he has no room for another. You occasionally find a man who spreads himself so widely over the path of life that there is no room for any one to walk beside him. He is not the one blade of a scissors incomplete without the other blade, but he is a chisel made to cut his way through life alone, or a file full of roughness, made to be drawn across society without any affinity for other files. His disposition is a lifelong protest against marriage. Others are so married to their occupation or profession that the taking of any other bride is a case of bigamy. There are men so severely tied to their literary work, as was Chatterton, whose essay was not printed because of the death of the Lord Mayor. Chatterton made out the following account: "Lost by the Lord Mayor's death in this essay, £1 11s 6d. Gained in elegies and essays, £5 5s." Then he put what he had gained by the Lord Mayor's death opposite to what he had lost, and wrote under it: "And glad he is dead by £3 13s 6d."

When a man is as hopelessly literary as that, he ought to be a perpetual celibate; his library, his laboratory, his books are all the companionship needed. Indeed, some of the mightiest men this world ever saw have not patronized matrimony. Cowper, Pope, Newton, Swift, Locke, Walpole, Gibbon, Hume, Arbuthnot were single. Some of these marriage would have helped. The right kind of a wife would have cured Cowper's gloom, and given to Newton more practicability, and been a relief to Locke's overtaxed brain. A Christian wife might have converted Hume and Gibbon to a belief in Christianity. But Dean Swift did not deserve a wife, from the way in which he broke the heart of Jane Waring first, and Esther Johnson afterward, and last of all "Vanessa." The great wit of his day, he was outwitted by his own cruelties.

Amid so many possibilities of fatal mistake, am I not right in urging you to seek the unerring wisdom of God, and before you are infatuated? Because most marriages are fit to be made convinces us that they are divinely arranged. Almost every cradle has an affinity toward some other cradle. They may be on the opposite sides of the earth, but one child gets out of this cradle and another child gets out of that cradle, and with their first steps they start for each other. They may diverge from the straight path going toward the north, or south, or east, or west. They may fall down, but the two rise facing each other. They are approaching all through infancy. The one all through the years of boyhood is going to meet the one who is coming through all the years of girlhood to meet him. The decision of parents as to what is best concerning them and the changes of fortune may for a time seem to arrest the two journeys, but on they go. They may never have seen each other. They may never have heard of each other. But the two pilgrims who started at the two cradles, are nearing. After eighteen, twenty or thirty years, the two come come within sight. At the first glance they may feel a dislike, and they may slacken their step; yet something that the world calls fate, and that religion calls providence, urges them on. They must meet. They come near enough to join hands in social acquaintance, after awhile to join hands in friendship, after awhile to join hearts. The delegate from the one cradle comes up the east side of the church with her father. The delegate from the other cradle comes up the west aisle of the church. The two long journeys end at the snowdrift of the bridal veil. The two chains made out of many years are forged together by the golden link which the groom puts upon the third finger of the left hand. One on earth, may they be one in heaven!

But there are so many exceptions to the general rule of natural affinity, that only those are safe who pray for a heavenly hand to lead them. Because they depended on themselves and not on God there are thousands of women every year going to slaughter. In India women leap on the funeral pyre of a dead husband. We have a worse spectacle than that in America—women innumerable leaping on the funeral pyre of a living husband.

Avoid all proposed alliances through newspaper advertisements. Many women, just for fun, have answered such advertisements, and have been led on from step to step to catastrophe infinite. All the men who write such advertisements are villains and lepers—all, without a single exception. All! All!! Do you answer them just for fun? I will tell you a safer and healthier fun. Thrust your ...

... the wheel of fortune turns so rapidly that through some investment all these in a few years may be gone. There are some things, however, that are a perpetual fortune—good manners, geniality of soul, kindness, intelligence, sympathy, courage, perseverance, industry and wholeheartedness. Marry such a one and you have married a fortune, whether he have an income now of $50,000 a year or an income of $500. A bank is secure according to its capital stock, and not to be judged by the deposits for a day or a week. A man is rich according to his sterling qualities, and not according to the vacillation of circumstances, which may leave with him a large amount of resources to-day, and withdraw them to-morrow. If a man is worth nothing but money he is poor indeed. If a man have upright character he is rich. Property may come and go; he is independent of the markets. Nothing can buy him out. He may have more money one year than another, but his better fortunes never vacillate.

Yet, do not expect to find a perfect man. If you find one without any faults, incapable of mistakes, never having guessed wrongly, his patience never having been disturbed, immaculate in speech, in temper, in habits, do not marry him. Why? Because you would enact a swindle. What would you do with a perfect man who are not perfect yourself? And how dare you hitch your imperfection fast on such supernatural excellence? What a companion you would make for an angel! In other words, there are no perfect men. There never was but one perfect pair, and they slipped down the banks of Paradise together. We occasionally find a man who says he never sins. We know he lies when he says it. We have had financial dealings with two or three perfect men, and they cheated us woefully. Do not, therefore, look for an immaculate husband, for you will not find him.

But do not become cynical on this subject. Society has a great multitude of grand men, who know how to make home happy. When they come to be husbands they evince a nobility of nature and a self-sacrificing spirit that surprise even the wife. Those are the men who cheerfully sit in dark and dirty business offices, ten feet by twelve, in summer time, hard at work, while the wives and daughters are off at Saratoga, Mount Desert, or at the White Sulphur. These are the men who, never having had much education themselves, have their sons at Yale and Harvard and Virginia University. These are the men who work themselves to death by fifty years of age, and go out to Greenwood, leaving large estate and generous life insurance provision for their families. There are husbands and fathers here by the hundreds who would die for their households. If outlawry should ever become dominant in our cities they would stand in their doorway, and with their own arm would cleave down, one by one, their invaders, face to face, foot to foot, and every stroke a demolition. This is what makes an army in defense of a country fight more desperately than an army of conquest. It is not so much the abstract sentiment of a flag as it is the wife and children at home that turns enthusiasm into a fury. The world has such men by the million, and the homunculi that infest all our communities must not hinder women from appreciating the glory of true manhood.

I was reading of a bridal reception. The young man had brought home the choice of his heart, in her elaborate and exquisite apparel. As she stood in the gay drawing room and amid the gay group, the young man's eyes filled with tears of joy as he thought that she was his. Years passed by, and they stood at the same parlor on another festal occasion. She wore the same dress, for business had not opened as brightly to the young husband as he had expected, and he had never been able to purchase for her another dress. Her face was not as bright and smooth as it had been years before, and a careworn look had made its signature on her countenance. As the husband looked at her he saw the difference between this occasion and the former, and he went over where she sat and said: "You remember the time when we were here before. You have the same dress on. Circumstances have somewhat changed, but you look to me far more beautiful than you did then." There is such a thing as conjugal fidelity, and many of you know it in your own homes.

But, after all the advice we may give you, we come back to the golden pillar from which we started, the tremendous truth that no one but God can guide you in safety about this matter, that may decide your happiness for two worlds, this and the next. So, my sister, I put your case where Naomi put that of Ruth and Orpah when she said: "The Lord grant that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband."

I imagine the hour for which you pledged your troth has arrived. There is much merrymaking among your young friends, but there is an undertone of sadness in all the house. Your choice may have been the gladdest and the best, and the joy of the whole round of relatives, but when a young eaglet is about to leave the old nest and is preparing to put out into sunshine and storm for itself, it feels its wings tremble somewhat. She has a good cry before leaving home, and at the marriage father and mother always cry, or feel like it. If you think it is easy to give up a daughter in marriage, though it be with brightest prospects, you will think differently when the day comes. To have all along watched her from infancy to girlhood, and from girlhood to womanhood, studious of her welfare, her slightest illness an anxiety, and her presence in your home an ever increasing joy, and then have her go away to some other home—aye, all the redolence of orange blossoms, and all the chime of marriage bells, and all the rolling of wedding march in full diapason, and all the hilarious congratulations of your friends, can not make you forget that you are suffering a loss irreparable. But you know it is all right and you have a remembrance of an embarkation just like it twenty-five or thirty years ago, in which you were one of the parties, and, suppressing as far as possible your sadness, you say: "Good-bye."

I hope that you, the departing daughter, will not forget to write often home; for whatever betide you, the old folk will never lose their interest in your welfare. Make visits to them also as often and as long as you can, for there will be changes at the old place after awhile. Every time you go, you will find more gray hairs on father's head, and more wrinkles on mother's brow, and, after awhile you will notice that the elastic step has become decrepitude. And some day one of the two pillars of your early home will fall, and after awhile the other pillar of that home will fall, and it will be a comfort to yourself if, when they are gone, you can feel that while you are faithful in your new home, you never forgot your old home, and the first friends you ever had, and those to whom you are more indebted than you ever can ...

A Novel Stove.

W. L. Swan, of Lansing, is the exultant inventor of a novel stove with which he is now heating his office, and which causes him to see visions of prospective fame and shekels. The stove is a half-cylinder in form, and rests on a hollow cast-iron base. A six-inch stove pipe runs through the floor from this base and into the open air. Three two-inch pipes extend upward through the stove from the base on either side, and open into a four-inch pipe that runs horizontally the whole length of the stove near the top. The air comes in cold and pure from the outside, is heated by passing through the pipes, and passes out in a strong, steady current at either end of the four-inch tube. The current is so strong that a match lights instantly six inches from the stove. It supplies the room with a steady draft.

GOVERNOR HILL'S MESSAGE.

He Serves Notice upon President Cleveland and the Country That He is in the Race for 1888.

The attempt of Governor Hill to pose as a Civil-Service reformer is simply absurd. His position is very well understood. He was nominated last fall by the spoils clique of the party, and his triumph in convention was heralded as a rebuke of the Mugwump tendency, real or supposed, of President Cleveland. But upon analyzing his message it will be seen that he admits himself to nothing in particular. He indulges in a few platitudes, and that is all. His words have no ring of genuineness. His predecessor made the public believe that he meant something when he discoursed of Civil-Service reform, and perhaps he did, albeit the greater part of his professions have already oozed out, leaving his air balloon in a state bordering closely upon absolute collapse. The fact, however, that the Governor in his talk dilutes the reform medicine much more than the President is in the habit of doing can not fail to attract the attention of impatient Democratic office-seekers, who will, it is evidently hoped, regret that the Gubernatorial ticket of 1882 in New York had not been reversed, with all the probable consequences of such reversal.

So long as Thomas A. Hendricks lived he was the natural representative and leader of the spoils wing of his party, and now the question is who shall inherit that distinction. The situation is best expressed in the language of the turf, as being Hill against the field. Thus far no definite rivalry has developed. Mr. Randall was put out of the race apparently by the signal defeat experienced in the revision of the rules of the House. Mr. Beck made a good deal of capital out of assailing the Administration, but he is a Scotchman, and it is written in the Constitution that no foreigner shall inherit the Presidency. Thus far it is a walk-away for Hill.

But even if he should hold the leadership of that wing of the party it would by no means follow that the Governor will supplant the President in 1888. He might find his very strength to be his fatal weakness, especially as the President is steadily convincing everybody, even the Mugwumps, that he is partisan enough to meet the most exacting demand. From the slow progress made by his appointees in getting through the Senate it may yet be found that he was a little too previous in making changes. There is such a thing as haste that makes delay, and if his course in the Streator post-office matter is a fair specimen of the kind of faith he proposes to keep with Senators, then the proverbial ...

REPUBLICAN ITEMS.

The Northwest expected nothing of consequence from Speaker Carlisle, and is not disappointed. This is a Democratic year, and the South has most of the important chairmanships. —Minneapolis Tribune.

If the newspapers are as iniquitous and graceless as Mr. Cleveland asserts or implies, the fact is hardly calculated to reflect credit for exactly the opposite qualities in one whose promotion to the highest official position has been so largely, as in his case, the work of the newspapers.—Galveston News.

In the recent debate on the rules of the House Mr. Randall said: "Since the House has been under Democratic control, there has not been an acre of land or a dollar of subsidy appropriated." So far so good. But Mr Randall might have added that it has also been impossible to carry out any beneficent legislation, however much needed. —Boston Herald.

As was predicted, the hand of Secretary Bayard made itself felt in the selection of the head of the Foreign Affairs Committee. Pennsylvania's old war Governor, Andrew G. Curtin, was sacrificed to the enmity of the Secretary of State, and, as if to add weight to the insult, that absurd and hickory-nut-headed dude, Perry Belmont, was given his place.—Detroit Tribune.

Instead of providing a firm and practical basis of Democratic conduct, Mr. Cleveland has simply furnished grounds of excuse for all sorts of internal dissension. It is as if the commander of an army, in default of a cautious and comprehensive plan of battle, should authorize each of his subordinates to fight on his own hook, careless of general consequences.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Has the demoralization resulting from the spoils system been checked? Has there been an honest effort to enforce the law which forbids the distribution of offices as rewards for partisan services? Let the records of removals from and appointments to office before the Senate furnish the answer. If the President goes on as he has been going, the whole country will soon be in a "tumult of discontent" at his mockery of Civil-Service reform.—Pittsburgh Commercial-Gazette.

The best—and the worst—that can be said of Mr. Carlisle's committee is that they fairly represent the Democratic majority. As Mr. Carlisle himself is considerably above the average of his party in ability and character, it was hoped that he would so organize the House that the majority would have the benefit of leaders of his own sort, and be able to do as good work as its general composition would admit. But Mr. Carlisle, though better in many re- ...

ALASKAN LEGENDS.

The Story of the Creation as Told by the Alaskans.

In his report of the Point Barrow Expedition, Lieutenant Ray devotes some attention to the Alaskans and their legends. During the long winters nights, when food is plenty, he says the natives delight to meet at the council house, or at different igloos (huts), and over their work repeat the legends of their race, which have been handed down from father to son. These legends go back to the origin of man, and they tell with careful detail of a time when there were no men in all the land, but a spirit called "A-se-lu" dwelt here alone. He made the image of a man in clay, set it up on the shore of the sea to dry and, after it was dry he breathed upon it, and gave it life, and sent it out into the world. And he called the dog from a long way off to go with the man, that he might help in travelling. After a time the spirit made the tuktu (reindeer), and sent him out into the land, and the teeth of the deer were like the teeth of the dog; and after many days man came to the spirit and said: "The deer is bad; he devours man." Whereupon the spirit called in all the deer, and removed all the front teeth from their upper jaws, since which time men have lived on deer, and the deer have lived on moss and grass. Then the man asked the spirit that there might be fish in the rivers and sea. And the spirit took a piece of pine and a piece of balsam, and sat by the river where it emptied into the sea, and whittled long shavings from the pieces of wood, and the shavings fell into the water, and the shavings from the yellow wood became salmon, and those from the white wood became whitefish, and swam away.

Their faith in these legends is very strong, and they are extremely opposed to any expressions of doubt or ridicule. It is only by gaining their confidence and abstaining from any expressions of doubt in their presence that they can be induced to talk about their people or repeat their legends. We heard but one legend that referred in any way to the regions of the northward. It was said that many years ago a man from Nuwuk was caught in the moving pack that was setting to the northward so rapidly that he was unable to return to the land. After a great many days, more than he could count, he came to a land where dwelt a strange people; they spoke a strange language and dressed in deerskins like the Inyn. He remained with them a long time, but, wishing to return to his people, he left them one winter and started south over the ice, living upon the seals he caught by the way, and renewing his boots with their skins ...

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Pointed Suggestions as to What a Woman Should Avoid in Choosing a Husband—None But God a Safe Guide in Deciding the Question.

We give below Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's second sermon of his course on "The Marriage Ring," delivered recently in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The text for this discourse was:

The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you, in the house of her husband.

Dr. Talmage said:

This was the prayer of the pious Naomi for Ruth and Orpah, and is an appropriate prayer now in behalf of unmarried womanhood. Naomi, the good old soul, knew that the devil would take their cases in hand if God did not, so she prays: "The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you, in the house of her husband."

In this series of sermons on "The Marriage Ring," I last Sabbath gave prayerful and Christian advice to men in regard to the selection of a wife, and to-day I give the same prayerful and Christian advice to women in regard to the selection of a husband, but in all these sermons saying much that I hope will be appropriate for all ages and all classes.

I applaud the celibacy of a multitude of women who, rather than make unfit selection, have made none at all. It has not been a lack of opportunity for marital contract on their part, but their own culture and refinement and their exalted idea as to what [illegible]

[illegible] self to cigars. If a woman make a bad job of marital selection, the probability is that nothing but a funeral can relieve it. Divorce cases in court may interest the public, but the love letters of a married couple are poor reading, except for those who write them. Pray that you be delivered from irrevocable mistake.

Avoid alliance with a despiser of the Christian religion, whatever else he may have or may not have. I do not say he must needs be a religious man, for Paul says the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife; but marriage with a man who hates the Christian religion will insure you a life of wretchedness. He will caricature your habit of kneeling in prayer. He will speak depreciatingly of Christ. He will wound all the most sacred feelings of your soul. He will put your home under the anathema of the Lord God Almighty. In addition to the anguish with which he will fill your life, there is great danger that he will despoil your hope of Heaven, and make your marriage relation an infinite and eternal disaster. If you have made such an engagement, your first duty is to break it. My word may come just in time to save your soul.

Further, do not unite in marriage with a man of bad habits, in the idea of reforming him. If now, under the restraint of your present acquaintance, he will not give up his bad habits, after he has won the prize you can not expect him to do so. You might as well plant a violet in the face of a northeast storm, with the idea of appeasing it. You might as well run a schooner alongside of a burning ship, with the idea of saving the ship. The consequence will be, schooner and ship will be destroyed together. The alms-house could tell the story of a hundred women who married men to reform them. [illegible]

[illegible] the wheel of fortune turns so rapidly that through some investment all these in a few years may be gone. There are some things, however, that are a perpetual fortune—good manners, geniality of soul, kindness, intelligence, sympathy, courage, perseverance, industry and whole heartedness. Marry such a one and you have married a fortune, whether he have an income now of $50,000 a year or an income of [illegible]. A bank is secure according to its capital stock, and not to be judged by the deposits for a day or a week. A man is rich according to his sterling qualities, and not according to the vacillation of circumstances, which may leave with him a large amount of resources to-day, and withdraw them to-morrow. If a man is worth nothing but money he is poor indeed. If a man have upright character he is rich. Property may come and go; he is independent of the markets. Nothing can buy him out. He may have more money one year than another, but his better fortunes never vacillate.

Yet, do not expect to find a perfect man. If you find one without any faults, incapable of mistakes, never having guessed wrongly, his patience never having been disturbed, immaculate in speech, in temper, in habits, do not marry him. Why? Because you would enact a swindle. What would you do with a perfect man who are not perfect yourself? And how dare you hitch your imperfection fast on such supernatural excellence? What a companion you would make for an angel! In other words, there are no perfect men. There never was but one perfect pair, and they slipped down the banks of Paradise together. We occasionally find a man who says he never [illegible]

GOVERNOR HILL'S MESSAGE.

He Serves Notice upon President Cleveland and the Country That He Is in the Race for 1888.

The attempt of Governor Hill to pose as a Civil-Service reformer is simply absurd. His position is very well understood. He was nominated last fall by the spoils element of the party, and his triumph in convention was heralded as a rebuke of the Mugwump tendency, real or supposed, of President Cleveland. But upon analyzing his message it will be seen that he admits himself to nothing in particular. He indulges in a few platitudes, and that is all. His words have no ring of genuineness. His predecessor made the public believe that he meant something when he discoursed of Civil-Service reform, and perhaps he did, albeit the greater part of his professions have already oozed out, leaving his air balloon in a state bordering closely upon absolute collapse. The fact, however, that the Governor in his talk dilutes the reform medicine much more than the President is in the habit of doing can not fail to attract the attention of impatient Democratic office-seekers, who will, it is evidently hoped, regret that the Gubernatorial ticket of 1882 in New York had not been reversed, with all the probable consequences of such reversal.

So long as Thomas A. Hendricks lived he was the natural representative and leader of the spoils wing of his party, and now the question is who shall inherit that distinction. The situation is best expressed in the language [illegible]

REPUBLICAN ITEMS.

The Northwest expected nothing of consequence from Speaker Carlisle, and is not disappointed. This is a Democratic year, and the South has most of the important chairmanships.—Minneapolis Tribune.

If the newspapers are as iniquitous and graceless as Mr. Cleveland asserts or implies, the fact is hardly calculated to reflect credit for exactly the opposite qualities in one whose promotion to the highest official position has been so largely, as in his case, the work of the newspapers.—Galveston News.

In the recent debate on the rules of the House Mr. Randall said: "Since the House has been under Democratic control, there has not been an acre of land or a dollar of subsidy appropriated." So far so good. But Mr. Randall might have added that it has also been impossible to carry out any beneficent legislation, however much needed.—Boston Herald.

As was predicted, the hand of Secretary Bayard made itself felt in the selection of the head of the Foreign Affairs Committee. Pennsylvania's old war Governor, Andrew G. Curtin, was sacrificed to the enmity of the Secretary of State, and, as if to add weight to the insult, that absurd and hickory-nut-headed dude, Perry Belmont, was given his place.—Detroit Tribune.

Instead of providing a firm and practical basis of Democratic conduct, Mr. Cleveland has simply furnished grounds of excuse for all sorts of internal dissension. It is as if the [illegible]

ALASKAN LEGENDS.

The Story of the Creation as Told by the Alaskans.

In his report of the Point Barrow Expedition, Lieutenant Ray devotes some attention to the Alaskans and their legends. During the long winters nights, when food is plenty, he says the natives delight to meet in the council house, or at different igloos (huts), and over their work repeat the legends of their race, which have been handed down from father to son. These legends go back to the origin of man, and they tell with careful detail of a time when there were no men in all the land, but a spirit called "A-se-lu" dwelt here alone. He made the image of a man in clay, set it up on the shore of the sea to dry, and, after it was dry he breathed upon it, and gave it life, and sent it out into the world. And he called the dog from a long way off to go with the man, that he might help in travelling. After a time the spirit made the suktu (reindeer), and sent him out into the land, and the teeth of the deer were like the teeth of the dog; and after many days man came to the spirit and said: "The deer is bad; he devours man." Whereupon the spirit called in all the deer, and removed all the front teeth from their upper jaws, since which time men have lived on deer, and the deer have lived on moss and grass. Then the man asked the spirit that there might be fish in the rivers and sea. And the spirit took a piece of pine and a piece of balsam, and sat by the [illegible]

CHARLEVOIX, FEB. 18, 1886.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor.

Queen Victoria is not particularly fond of Mr. Gladstone, but the grand old man doesn't mind that. No man who believes in the people is ever popular at court.

General Sheridan's gavel to be used by him at coming Grand Army Reunions, is made of wood from Chickamauga, with a handle from Missionary Ridge, and a rifle bullet is embedded in the head. It was presented to him by Gen. J. H. Wilder, of Chattanooga.

Spearing fish through the ice is the favorite pastime of Bronson sportsmen this winter. A large clear bottle, partly filled with water, into which is put some live minnows, is let down into the water. The large fish are attracted toward it, and when they come near enough the operator pins them through the body with a spear.

Mr. Justin McCarthy says the English people do not "care a fig" for Dukes nowadays. They pay them a pretty sum of money, all the same. According to that shrewd statistician, Mr. Labouchere, Dukes and their relatives have taken from the English taxpayers, through the medium of the Public Treasury, between 1850 and 1881, the sum of $58,800,000! The Earls, for whom, perhaps, the English people would not give a straw, drew $240,906,019 during the same time! The Marquises were modest and drew but $41,500,000.

Horace Greeley.

"Well, well, here is a volume that is becoming quite rare these days," exclaimed a book-worm in a second-hand book store the other day as his eye fell on a worn and musty tome. "What I Know About Farming." "Well everybody knows this is the book written by Horace Greeley way back in the '60's. Perhaps the rising generation may be excepted, as the book is now out of print and will be a curiosity in a half score years hence. At one time it was pretty extensively read. It is difficult to say, however, that much or any benefit was derived from its perusal." "Yes," retorted the party addressed, "Horace was a great man in his time. It is not so very long since he has entered eternity, yet his name is now hardly ever mentioned. It was ever thus. Man's deeds, be they good or bad, they do not remain long fresh after the author is gone. Occasionally a flash of his wit is repeated, a line from his sayings is borrowed, but it does not induce posterity in the least in remembering, much less in revering his memory. During the forty odd years that Horace edited the Tribune every editorial, every farm article, every news item, every commercial paragraph, and every advertisement which appeared in the paper was credited to him by many of his readers and admirers. People forgot, or did not take the time to think, that it was a physical impossibility for the prolific and versatile Horace to write even half of the editorials that appeared, while his disquisitions on 'How to Plant Squashes,' 'How to Raise Cucumbers,' or 'How to Destroy the Festive Beetle,' were not so very numerous. Greeley, when writing about agriculture, always gave the 'How' part much prominence."

"You seem to be well posted on Horace," remarked the book-worm by way of comment to the second gentleman. "Why, yes; I must confess that I know a great deal about the philosopher. Before and during the best part of the war I labored at the case of the Tribune office, and on several occasions 'set up' his copy. If you have [illegible]

ADULTERATED SPICES.

Pepper, Cloves, Ginger, and Mustard All Doctored for Sale.

The greater part of the spices sold in this city are adulterated. Adulteration has become an art in which the knowledge of science and the ingenuity of trade are freely exercised. Pure spices are debased for pecuniary profit by adding to them inferior or spurious articles, or by taking from them one or more of their constituents. The objects of adulteration are to increase the bulk or weight of the article, to improve its appearance, to give it a false strength, and to rob it of its most valuable constituents. The practice has grown with the competition of trade, and in spite of severe laws prohibiting it.

People know so little about spice that it can be adulterated with very slight chance of discovery. An expert, however, can tell it at once. The head of the spice department of a grocery firm in this city, says the New York Sun, said:

"To be sure of adulteration, one needs only to look at the price-lists issued by firms which sell spices. The price of a ground spice is often less than that of the unground article, which is absurd on its face. Unground pepper can not be sold for less than 14 cents a pound, and yet we find ground pepper offered for 5 and 6 cents a pound. Ground ginger is offered at 5 cents a pound, while the unground is 8 cents. This means that the ground spice has been heavily adulterated with some cheap material. Some firms go so far as to advertise adulterated goods, and evade the law by calling them compounds.

"Black pepper is adulterated with a substance called pepper dust, made from cocoanut shells, and also with buckwheat hulls, charcoal, white meal, and mustard bran. Cocoanut shells, when ground up very fine, are used very generally as an adulterant of spices, as there is no taste to interfere with the flavor of the spice. Buckwheat hulls, otherwise worthless, are a source of profit to millers, as they are worth 2½ cents a pound for adulterating [illegible]

An Iron-Clad Contract.

The actor's lot is not a happy one, especially if he be a star actor, responsible for salaries to the usual gigantic dramatic combination which supports him at an average of $20 a week per individual. It is not long since a scrimmage between the deputy sheriff and the front of the Grand opera house made quite a stir, and the matter is still somewhere about the courts. The courts resemble a trunkmaker's yard—they are full of cases, and a great many rot before they are called into action. I should not wonder if that one went the same way. There is a moral in this story. A noted star, having failed to draw at $1.50, made up his mind to try a week at "popular prices" before leaving town, and he thought he would secure himself. The theatre he selected had been a prey to sheriffs' officers. So at some expense he hired a lawyer to draw up an iron-clad, riveted contract, which should prevent the ubiquitous deputy sheriff from grabbing the receipts for what debts were outstanding. This contract was indeed an iron-clad one. It gave him charge of the box-office, charge of the ticket entrance, charge of all the money that came in, and charge of all the property within a four-mile radius. This document he posted up in a prominent place, and then he began to sell tickets. The orchestra was playing its wild, independent music, each instrument having chance. The trombone is not allowed there to blow louder than the flute, unless the man with the flute can blow as hard as the trombone. The violinists are at liberty to play what they darn please as long as they don't drown the 'cello. It is a go-as-you-please orchestra and gives an enormous variety of music at the same moment.

Well, this match among the instruments was about through on the first night when three deputy sheriffs danced up to the box office window, singing "Three Little Deputies Are We." As they prepared to grab their six eyes fell on the iron-clad contract. It was too much for them. They stood dumb. Just then a man came up to buy [illegible]

Interesting News Compilation.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

MONDAY, Jan 18.—In the Senate the Judiciary Salary bill, giving United States Judges $5,000 a year, and prohibiting them from appointing their relatives to office in their courts, was passed. Mr. Cullom submitted a bill regulating Inter-State commerce, which provides for the appointment of five commissioners. Mr. Frye offered a resolution to provide for a commission to settle the fisheries question. Mr. Voorhees introduced a bill for the admission of Montana into the Union. In the House bills were introduced: To pension Mrs. Meiklebam, the only surviving granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson, to confer on Lieutenant Greely the rank of Colonel, for the admission of Montana as a State, to reduce the fee for money orders for sums not exceeding five dollars; granting pensions to the survivors of the Mexican and Indian wars, and to worthy applicants of the late war and their widows or minor children who are unable under existing laws to furnish the evidence required to connect their disability with the service.

TUESDAY, Jan. 19.—The Senate adopted a resolution extending the privileges of the floor to Mr. Moody, of Dakota. A joint resolution was passed to appoint General John F. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, a manager of the National Soldiers' Home in place of General McClellan. A long argument on the financial question took place. In the House bills were reported back to place Fitz John Porter on the retired list as a Colonel and to increase the pensions of widows from eight to twelve dollars per month. A resolution was adopted accepting the statue of James A. Garfield presented by the State of Ohio.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 20.—Bills were introduced in the Senate to facilitate the business of the Supreme Court, the Circuit Court and the Court of Claims, and to provide for the coinage of half dollars, quarter dollars and dimes, to contain, respectively, one-half, one-quarter and one-tenth the amount of silver contained in the standard silver dollars. The silver question was further debated. In executive session a large number of Presidential nominations were confirmed. In the House a bill was passed authorizing the voluntary [illegible]

LATER.

IN the Ohio Senate on the 22d General Kennedy, the President, ruled that the four members from Hamilton County, whose seats are in dispute, were not entitled to vote, thereby placing the Senate in control of the Republicans, who caused an adjournment to the 23d under the President's ruling. The Democrats remained in the hall, organized another Senate, and passed a motion of adjournment until the evening of the 25th. A long fight for possession of the Senate chamber was anticipated. There are twenty Democratic Senators (counting the four from Hamilton County), and seventeen Republicans.

THE total number of business failures in the United States and Canada during the seven days ended on the 22d was [illegible], against [illegible] for the previous seven days.

HENRY JACKSON (colored) was executed in Webster Parish, La., on the 22d for the murder of a grocer named R. A. Britton.

DENNIS JACKSON, a farmer living at Pilot Grove, Mo., was shot dead on the 22d by his fourteen-year-old son because he had severely whipped the boy.

THE damage to property in the city and county of Los Angeles, Cal., by the recent floods was on the 22d estimated at $500,000. Over six persons are known to have lost their lives.

THE weather throughout the Northwest on the 22d was the most severe thus far this winter. In Chicago and other portions of Illinois the mercury fell to twenty-three degrees below zero, in Iowa it ranged from twelve to twenty-six below, in Wisconsin twenty-five below was reported, and in Minnesota thirty below. Railway travel was suspended at many points, owing to the drifting snow.

At the evening session sixteen pension bills were passed. Adjourned to the 25th.

LABOR TROUBLES.

Fears of Bloodshed in the Pennsylvania Coke Regions—The Governor Asked to Send Troops—The Hungarians, Men and Women, Inaugurate a Reign of Terror by Their Riotous Actions.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 20.—Last evening a car load of uniformed police was dispatched from this city to the scenes of the riotous disturbances in the coke region. The police were sent in response to a telegram from Colonel Frick, of the Morewood and Standard coke works, asking for aid. The officers will be sworn in by Sheriff Stewart, of Westmoreland County, as deputies. It is thought that the small body of uniformed men will have better effect upon the riotous Hungarians than five times as many officers in citizens' dress. Governor Pattison has also been called upon for military aid, but has not as yet responded.

In the Connellsville, Mount Pleasant, Stonerville, Scottdale and Broadford districts a total of 2,772 ovens, or about one-third of the ovens in the region, are idle. The Hungarians, numbering about eight hundred in the Mount Pleasant district, are hard to handle, the women being worse than the men. They are very revengeful, and will fight to the death before they will be captured.

Yesterday morning the strikers proceeded in a body of about two hundred and drove the men from the yards of the Alice mines. They blew up the tipple with dynamite and drove White, the superintendent, from the grounds, threatening his life. Wherever the fiery Hungarians go they carry a reign of terror with them.

COLORADO SNOW-SLIDES.

A Number of Places in the Mining District Visited by Avalanches and Several Lives Lost.

ASPEN, Col., Jan. 20.—The shaft and engine houses of the Aspen mine were demolished by a snow-slide, and John Rose, a mine carpenter, was killed yesterday afternoon. The night shift were just about to go on. Hearing the noise of the slide they ran under the dump and saved their lives. John Leonard, one of the owners of the Emma mine, and several others who were near the shaft house miraculously escaped with bruises. Later in the afternoon another avalanche buried two mule drivers, with their teams and wagons under fifteen feet of snow near Acquisition mine. [illegible]

Noted Cracksmen Captured.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—William Porter, a noted cracksman, made a haul of thirty thousand dollars worth of valuables from the safe of E. Marks & Sons, Troy, N. Y., February 24, 1884. He went to Europe and lived like a Prince. Thinking the danger of punishment was past he returned to New York, January 8, penniless. He was arrested and taken to Troy for trial Monday night. Later Mike Kurtz, "Sheeny Mike," Porter's accomplice, was arrested at Jacksonville, Fla. Twenty minutes too late he received a telegram from this city warning him of his danger. He swallowed a lot of diamonds that he had in his pocket.

Swindling Wholesale Merchants.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Jan. 20.—A firm doing business under the name of George Howard & Co., has been exposed as swindlers of the worst kind. The firm used stationery handsomely engraved, claiming to be newly-started wholesale dealers in groceries and fruits, and gave as references several well-known firms and banks here without their knowledge. Goods were ordered in great quantities from New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. These goods were disposed of at a sacrifice, and the proceeds pocketed. The alleged firm had no store or office, and it is estimated that they received and disposed of from $15,000 to $20,000 worth of goods.

Niagara in Winter.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 20.—The late snow-fall and intensely cold weather has transformed the scenery of Niagara Falls into a vision of wondrous beauty. Frozen spray has given a silver coating to every object in the neighborhood of the falls, and this is capped with pure, white snow. In the immediate vicinity of the falls and along the banks, the icy stalactites and stalagmites have assumed enormous lengths, and the ice cones at the foot of both falls now reach nearly half way up to the top of the falls. The ice mountain is daily growing in magnitude.

Ex-President Arthur's Poor Health the Cause of Some Anxiety.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—The Tribune says: "Ex-President Arthur's health has caused some anxiety during the last few weeks. He has been under treatment for severe indigestion, and his diet has been restricted to the simplest articles of food, principally milk and pepsin. He has suffered much from insomnia and the attendant nervous excitement and depression. Dr. George C. Peters, who has been his physician for many years, said to a reporter that there was nothing in the ex-President's condition to occasion alarm."

A BATTLE.

Desperate Conflict Between Officials and Strikers in the Coke Regions of Pennsylvania—Over One Hundred Shots Fired—One Hungarian Reported Killed and a Number Badly Injured—Further Trouble Imminent.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Pa., Jan. 21.—Sheriff Stewart, forty deputies, Detective Brophy and twenty armed police from Pittsburgh had a desperate conflict with two hundred and fifty strikers yesterday afternoon. They were the attacking men at the Alice works in the morning. The rioters rested for dinner. Then they massed at the Mutual works near Stonerville. At this point a negro, without provocation, fired at the Hungarians with a shot gun, but failed to hit any of them. They surrounded his house, dragged him out, beat him fearfully and left him for dead, with his skull fractured. He will probably die.

At three o'clock the strikers passed up toward Morewood, flourishing every manner of weapon, from revolvers to case-scrapers. They were headed by Steven Simmix, the main agitator of the strike. When they reached shaft "A," of the Morewood mines, they encountered sixty-two Deputy Sheriffs and policemen drawn up for battle. Detective Brophy talked to the foreigners, telling them that it was useless to resist and that the officers would arrest the ringleaders. Brophy arrested one of the strikers, which opened the ball. The combat was almost hand-to-hand, and the officers won, arresting thirteen men and one woman, all of whom were sent to the Greenville jail. The others retreated.

Over one hundred shots were fired, and several of the Hungarians were injured; how many is not known, as they were carried away by companions. Only one officer was slightly hurt. The authorities, it is stated, telegraphed to Pittsburgh for more officers. The strike is only begun, and more bloodshed is feared.

Three hundred strikers, armed with bars, coke forks and revolvers, started on the march at Stonerville yesterday morning. They drove the men from work and charged Warden's coke-yard. Then the Mayfield and Donnelly mines were visited. A mile west of here a boy named Mentzer was terribly beaten and the yard boss, McCabe, was clubbed and hammered. Every oven-front was crushed in. The rioters have gone across the country toward the Rising Sun works.

The greatest trouble is yet to come. Saturday will be pay-day and on Monday the ten days will have expired since notice to quit was given to the strikers in the company's houses. There will likely be serious trouble when ejectment is attempted.

A Connellsville dispatch says the Dexter, Clinton, and Franklin works are idle, the workmen having joined the strikers. At Fort Hill the advance has been granted and the men are at work. Over four thousand men are now out and the strike is spreading throughout the region.

This strike is undoubtedly the most dangerous in the history of the coke industry. The operators have an entirely new and desperate class of men to deal with, as the Hungarians, when drunk, are unmanageable, and more like fiends than men. In the former strikes this element was not in the field. A feeling of insecurity prevails, and the citizens near the various threatened districts are arming themselves and otherwise preparing to defend their homes.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 21.—The members of the Fourteenth and Eighteenth Regiments, N. G. P., of this city, have been ordered by commanding officers to hold themselves in readiness to go to the coke regions at short notice. No orders have been received from the Governor, but the officers thought best to be prepared in the event of a call for troops.

STATE FAIRS.

The "Middle States Fair Circuit" Organized—Dates Fixed.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 21.—Representatives from the Ohio State Fair, the tri-State Fair embracing Michigan, Ohio and Indiana, the Michigan State Fair, the Northern Indiana, the Southern Michigan, the Indiana State Fair and the St. Louis Fair met at South Bend, Ind., last Saturday and formed an association to be known as the "Middle States Fair Circuit." The following dates for holding fairs this year were arranged:

Ohio State Fair—August 30 to September 3; tri-State Fair September 6 to 11.
Michigan State Fair—September 13 to 18.
Northern and Southern Michigan Fair—September 20 to 25.
Indiana State Fair—September 27 to October 2.
St. Louis Fair—October 4 to 9.

R. M. Lockhart, of Waterloo, Ind., was elected President of the association and J. W. Fleming, of Columbus, O., Secretary. The meeting indorsed the International Association of Fairs and Expositions and recommended that all fair associations join that organization.

Opposed to Porter's Reinstatement.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The minority report of the House Committee on Military Affairs on the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter was laid before the House yesterday. It says:

"The only tenable ground upon which the report can be sustained and the finding of the court-martial reversed is that the court wickedly, corruptly and maliciously conspired to sacrifice Porter to save Pope from the odium of defeat, and it would be a bold man who affirms that proposition."

The minority argue that the bill is unconstitutional inasmuch as it is a usurpation by Congress of the functions of the co-ordinate branches of the Government. They say that if the bill does not nominate Porter to office it is an absolute nullity. If it does nominate him it is an invasion of the Executive prerogative. It is advice or law. If advice it is useless, and if law it is usurpation. If the court-martial erred there is no appeal. The minority respected Porter for his persistence, but still it could not but believe that his disobedience and inaction cast a shroud of woe over thousands at home and brought disaster to the National cause.

Punctuality a Test of Love.

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga., Jan. 21.—Miss Octavia Nash, of this place, engaged to marry Dr. A. D. Revere and Mr. John Jackson, appointing the same day and hour for each to appear as groom. Neither knew that the other had also been accepted until they met in procuring licenses. The doctor was the first to mount a horse, riding out to the lady's house at breakneck speed. Jackson gave hot pursuit, but upon arriving he found the prize wedded to his rival. The young lady had decided that punctuality was the best evidence of true love, and made her plans accordingly.

—A small whitefish, seemingly a new variety of the ichthyological species, is visiting Oregon rivers in large numbers, the annual run commencing with the first fall rains and continuing two or three months. It resembles the smelt in its pearl-like whiteness, but there the resemblance ends, as it has well defined scales, and a single specimen sometimes weighs a pound or more. As far as can be ascertained it has never been found excepting in the waters of the Willamette and its tributaries, and only within four or five years.—Chicago Times.

—The death of Dr. F. Helen Prideaux has called forth many expressions of regret in England. She was one of the most distinguished of the women graduates in London University. In her examination in 1882 she held the first honors in anatomy and took the gold medal in scholarship. In 1884 she was accorded honors in each subject. Her death was due to diphtheria, contracted while at her post of house-surgeon in the Paddington Hospital for children.

DISASTERS OF A DAY.

Terrible Explosion in a West Virginia Mine—Thirty-Seven Men Buried—Little Hope of Their Rescue—Lives Lost by Snow-Slides in Colorado and Utah—Hurricane in San Francisco—Four Men Killed by a Boiler Explosion at Terre Haute, Ind.—Fatal Railway Accident.

WHEELING, W. Va., Jan. 22.—An explosion of fire-damp occurred in the shaft of the Newburg Oriel Coal Company, Newburg, W. Va., yesterday afternoon. Immediately following the sound of the explosion a flame of fire arose far above the mouth of the shaft, and debris of all kinds was strewn around. Great excitement ensued, and crowds of people hurried to the spot.

The shaft in which the explosion occurred was sunk about two years ago, and has reached a depth of three hundred and fifty feet. From the base of the shaft the main heading runs out about half a mile. The theory advanced as to the cause of the explosion is that fire-damp had accumulated in one of the rooms and was accidentally ignited by a miner's lamp, but nothing positive has yet been learned. The force of the explosion blocked the air so close that no one would venture into the main heading to ascertain the fate of the imprisoned men until an air passage could be established. The work is being pushed vigorously.

Up to midnight no bodies had been recovered. It is supposed that thirty-seven men are imprisoned. The prevailing opinion is that all are dead, although a few express the hope that some of them escaped the effect of the explosion, and have been able to reach a place free from the [illegible] black-damp, which always follows an explosion of this kind.

The scenes at the shaft were heartrending. Fathers, mothers, wives and children linger in groups with pallid faces anxiously waiting some tidings from their loved ones which will either bring them hope or end their suspension. Every effort is being made to rescue the unfortunates, but it is thought that there is no prospect of reaching them soon.

DEATH IN THE AVALANCHE.

ASPEN, Col., Jan. 22.—Freighters who arrived yesterday state that twenty-seven snow-slides occurred in the neighborhood of Maroon Pass during the past three days. On Tuesday a party of men with eighteen mules started from Aspen to clear out the pass, since which nothing had been heard from them until yesterday morning, when news was brought here that an avalanche three days ago had buried the men and mules at the mouth of the canyon. Two Hoskins boys, Marion Stewart and Charles Miller rescued themselves. Their clothing was torn from their bodies, and they were terribly bruised. After a night's struggling in the snow they reached Speller's ranch, and gave the alarm. A party started to the scene immediately and succeeded in rescuing twelve of the eighteen mules, but at last accounts had not found the remains of the men. The victims are Albert Sloper, Ira Hall, James Hungerford, David Pattenhall, and two others unknown. A six-mule team and driver went over Independence Pass, between Leadville and Aspen, yesterday afternoon, rolling and sliding nearly a thousand feet. The driver was uninjured, but the mules were killed.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Jan. 22.—The first fatal snow-slide in Utah this year took place at Park City Wednesday night about eight o'clock. A small slide, not over fifty feet wide, caught a miner named Thorstrom, who was passing, and buried him under six feet of snow. The body was recovered.

At 5:30 yesterday morning another slide, higher up the gulch, caught up an empty cabin on the side of the mountain, and hurled it down on the cabin of A. O. Patterson. Patterson and wife were asleep. Logs, debris and snow rushed through the roof, burying them ten feet deep. They were dug out later, both dead. This is the first slide that ever took place in that gulch. The families are all moving out.

HURRICANE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 22.—One of the severest storms that has ever occurred on this coast began Sunday, and reached its height shortly after noon Wednesday. It extended from the northern boundary of Washington Territory to the southern boundary of California, and from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean. An almost continuous fall of rain and snow was accompanied by wind, which, from five miles an hour, gradually increased, until it blew a hurricane of eighty-two miles an hour. The bay inside the harbor was very rough, and passengers on the ferry-boats were made seasick. Considerable damage was done throughout the city. Houses were unroofed, sheds, fences, trees, awnings, signs, church spires and numerous smoke-stacks were blown down. Huge plate windows were crushed, basements flooded, sewers broken, cars lifted from the track and covered wagons flooded away.

When the wind was at its height the west wall of Mechanics' Pavilion was blown in, and a few minutes later about eighty feet of the roof was carried away. The damage done the pavilion amounts to several thousand dollars. One of the most unfortunate disasters was the collapse of a two-story building corner of Mission and Thirtieth streets. Mrs. Annie Humbert, Mrs. Coyle and John Carroll were in the building. The last named rushed out in time to escape harm, but both the women were buried and severely, perhaps fatally, injured.

The most serious result of the storm was to cut off San Francisco entirely, for the first time in its history, from telegraphic communication with the outside world. It was resumed yesterday.

DOWN TO DEATH.

ALBANY, Mo., Jan. 22.—The Des Moines and St. Joseph express on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad was derailed about six miles from here at 5:40 o'clock Wednesday morning. Two coaches and a sleeper went down a twenty-foot embankment and were piled up in an indescribable mass. One person was killed and twelve badly wounded.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 22.—At Terre Haute, Ind., at 8:50 o'clock yesterday morning a terrific boiler explosion occurred at the distillery of Fairbanks & Dunnweg. Frank McNeills and George Otterson were killed. Their bodies have been recovered from under a heap of debris frightfully mangled. The entire engine house is torn down. The damage is not estimated. The cause of the explosion is not known.

Frank Buckingham and Charles Welker died last night, making four deaths in all from the explosion.

A Noted Forger Arrested.

CHICAGO, Jan. 22.—A bank forger using the name of J. F. Hale was captured in this city yesterday. In his valise were found drafts on sixty-five different banks, printed on special paper. He proved to be Robert Bowman, who has served two terms in the Clinton Prison of New York.

Among his most noted exploits are said to be the successful forgery of drafts for $2,700 on a bank at Catskill, and $7,000 on one at Troy, N. Y. He has also, it is said, victimized several banks, including the St. Joe County National, of South Bend, Ind., and banks at Hillsdale, Mich., Elmore, O., and Lima, O.

Light Damages Awarded.

DECATUR, Ill., Jan. 22.—The Pullman Company and the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburgh Road are defendants here, in a suit for $50,000 damages instituted by George Brown. The latter's wife died last May and the remains were taken to Ohio for interment. For some reason the casket was removed from the train at Indianapolis, and Brown and his friends, who occupied the sleeping-car, kept on their way ignorant of the fact that the remains had been taken from the train. A delay of twelve hours was occasioned, and the body had to be hurriedly interred, being in no condition to be viewed by relatives. Hence the above suit.

The jury Thursday returned a verdict against the Pullman Company for $1.80.

THE BLIZZARD'S REIGN.

The Northwest Swept by Another Wave from the Arctic Regions—Many Trains Stuck in the Snow-Drifts—Much Suffering Feared—Disastrous Flood at Los Angeles, Cal.

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—Last night was the coldest one of the present winter. At five o'clock this morning the thermometer indicated 23½ degrees below zero. At four o'clock yesterday afternoon the weather was more severe to the pedestrian than later in the day, for the wind at that hour had a velocity of twenty-seven miles per hour and the mercury was down to 7 degrees below zero. At the same hour throughout the Northwest the thermometer registered from 4 to 30 degrees below zero. At Dodge City, Ia., it was 4 below; throughout Nebraska, 1° below, at La Crosse, Wis., 15 below, at St. Paul, 19 below; at Moorhead, 26 below, and at Fort Garry, Manitoba, 30 below.

The blizzard of yesterday extended nearly throughout the Northwest, and many points in Iowa, Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin report intense cold and railroad blockades. A passenger train on the Illinois Central, which left Sioux City last Thursday evening, is stuck near Remsen in a drift three thousand feet long and twenty feet deep. No provisions are obtainable; the thermometer is 22 to 26 degrees below and it will take three to four days to open the road. On the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Road the St. Paul train is stuck near Winona, with three freights. West of McGregor, Ia., no trains are moving.

All through trains west from Kansas City over the Santa Fe, Kansas Pacific, Burlington & Missouri River Roads have been abandoned. The Missouri Pacific is reported to be blockaded above Atchison. The Santa Fe Road has been cleared five times during the month and as often blockaded.

Trains have been abandoned on the Southern Minnesota division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Road, and trains going into St. Paul over the Iowa & Minnesota Road are all late. A heavy freight is stuck in a drift near Lake City, Minn. The second division of the St. Louis Road, south of Albert Lea, is abandoned.

Several passenger trains are lost in drifts at various points along the lines entering Milwaukee. No effort is being made to run freight trains, those out having been side-tracked and all others abandoned. The thermometer ranged from 15 to 30 degrees below zero throughout Wisconsin last night.

Reports from different parts of Michigan indicate that yesterday's storm was general in that State.

DEVASTATED BY FLOOD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 23.—The rains of Sunday, Monday and Tuesday were reinforced at Los Angeles on Tuesday by a cloud burst, which swelled the Los Angeles River to a raging torrent. The town and two thousand acres of orchards and vineyards were flooded. Over fifty houses were washed away or completely wrecked. Every bridge across the Los Angeles River was swept away and also hundreds of feet of the tracks of the Southern Pacific and local railroads. For three days Los Angeles was cut off from telegraphic and railroad communication with the world. Mrs. Kate Lyttle and Theresa Whitney, daughter of Thomas Whitney, a carpenter, were drowned while being rescued from their houses. A number of other lives are believed to have been lost. A large quantity of stock perished. The damage to property in the city and county of Los Angeles is estimated at $500,000.

A CRISIS IN OHIO.

A Disruption of the Senate Caused by the Hamilton County Contests—Republicans, Under Lieutenant-Governor Kennedy, Declare the Body Adjourned, and Democrats Reorganize Under the President Pro Tem—Each Claims to Be the Legal Senate.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 23.—The expected crisis of revolution came in the State Senate yesterday, and last night there were reports that the police and militia will have to be called out. Investigation shows, however, that all the reports about Lieutenant-Governor Kennedy consulting with Governor Foraker and Adjutant-General Axline, or with Mayor Walcott, to secure support are entirely without foundation. The fact, however, that the Senate chamber was the scene of a disgraceful row yesterday can not be contradicted.

Lieutenant-Governor Kennedy, the presiding officer, is a Republican. There are seventeen Republican Senators and twenty Democratic Senators. The pending question was on the contests of four of the Democratic Senators from Hamilton, and the issue was on the ruling of Kennedy that the four could not vote on questions involving the investigation into their title to seats. This would leave the Senate stand seventeen Republicans to sixteen Democrats. A motion had been made to discharge the committee investigating the Hamilton County cases, and hear the contests in open Senate. This was carried by a vote of 17 to 16, or rather by a vote of 17 to 0, as the Democrats refused to vote. When the Chair held that the Cincinnati Senators could not vote on their own cases, the last movement of the Democrats, after the motion discharging the committee had been carried, was to demand a call of the Senate, and when all the members had answered to their names the Chair declared that, the object having been secured, further proceedings under the call would be dispensed with. He ordered the clerk to note that certain Senators who previously responded had been present and refused to vote.

Then followed such tumult that the lobby took as much part as the Senators, and finally a Senator on the Republican side moved to adjourn. The motion was put and carried on a viva voce vote. Lieutenant-Governor Kennedy accordingly declared the Senate adjourned till this morning. He had no sooner left the chair than Hon. John O'Neil, the President pro tem., took it and the gavel fell. The other nineteen Democratic Senators, who were about to leave, resumed their seats and proceeded to the routine business. After going through the form of getting out from under the call, by a motion the rump Senate adjourned till Monday afternoon at four p. m. Both sides now claim to be the true Senate of Ohio.

A Deranged Mother Drowns Herself and Baby.

COVINGTON, Ky., Jan. 22.—Mrs. Georgie Gravener, wife of M. R. Gravener, tobacconist, was found yesterday morning drowned in the cistern at her home, and holding in her arm the dead body of her daughter Eva, aged three months. Mrs. Gravener was about thirty-six years old and the mother of five children. For some time past she has shown signs of loss of mind, but no such calamity as this was apprehended by the family. No one knows when she threw herself into the water but it is supposed it was done before daylight.

The Polish Riot Trials.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 23.—The first of the Polish church-riot trials ended yesterday in the conviction of Stephen Courtney of manslaughter. He was indicted for murder in the second degree. The trial grows out of the riot of Sunday, June 28, in which two men were killed and five badly wounded by a mob and two buildings were gutted. This was the result of a church dissension in the Polish settlement, one man having been killed and two wounded some time previous. Thirty of the rioters were arrested and ninety indictments found for murder in the first and second degrees, and on other charges. The cases are being tried before two Judges and will last four months.

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL.
SMITH & PARMELEE, EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.
CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

THE ABANDONED HORSE.

[Adapted from prose version in N. Y. Sun.]

"Off with the saddle and shoot him!" Ten miles from the camp he fell lame,
And the whip and the spur were both useless, and master's voice calling his name.
'Twas a cavalry scout just returning to camp from a rough ride of more
Than a hundred miles' wearisome journey, a party that numbered a score.

No further the horse could be driven; he must be abandoned, his lot,
To hinder the enemy's profit, was to be dispatched by a shot.
His master dismounted in silence, revolver drew tremblingly forth.
Put it back, loosed the bridle and saddle, and turned to the south, to the north.

"Poor Jim!" as the horse softly whinnied, relaxed for a moment from pain,
And he patted the drooping head gently, and smoothed down the long, tangled mane,
"Old Jim! we have roughed it together, together braved sun-stroke and cold;
We have feasted and fasted together, been comrades where cannons' booms tolled.

"If a cut from a saber would save you, I'd bow my bare face to the blow, I'd lose a leg, Jim, or my right arm, to save your life, gladly let go!"
He had taken the trappings off gently, and the horse brightened up in relief.
"Good-bye, Jim, old fellow! It's orders. I feel like a murdering thief!"

He dashed with his coat-sleeve the moisture that was blinding his sight;
The troop were far off in the distance, and swiftly was gathering the night.
Once more he raised the revolver—"God, pardon me! It must be done."
A flash—a report—and his comrade he saw drop to earth like a stone.

He turned and fled camp-ward in anguish He could not look back to the spot
Where the one who had borne him so often lay dying from his final shot.
The poor beast lay stunned a few moments, then raised his head tortured with pain.
What means it? Alone and unsaddled. He struggled his feet to regain.

And gazing about him, he wondered who is it has done him this harm—
Shook his head, from his nostrils all bleeding blew forth a wild note of alarm,
In the enemy's country, abandoned! Ah, now he remembers it all!
He was lame, and his rider dismounted, caressed him—What then? Did he fall?

Shot down by some hidden guerilla? With eyes flashing wildly with pain,
He seeks by the road for his master. Abandoned! The search was in vain.
But he knows this road well, for so often each bridge and each turn he has seen!
He will back to the camp ere death takes him, that long, darkened miles intervene.

He nerves for one last, freshened effort. "Halt!" calls out the sentry, "Who's there?"
At last! Jim stood still for a moment, then down the hill swiftly did bear;
And ere they could stop him, he entered once more within pale of the lines,
And was welcomed, when passing the boundary, with shots from a dozen carbines.

Dead now. The men gaze at him silent. "It seems like a murder," one says.
While his master kneels rev'rent beside him, the faithful head once more to raise.
"Too bad!" mutters one grim old sergeant. Then back to their posts the men go.
And a distant cock heralds the morning, with misty call, fading and slow.

IN THE SNOW.

How Margaret's Cold Resolve Was Completely Thawed.

I was hanging clothes on the line. I detested it, and I was getting furiously angry. It was intensely cold, my fingers, bundled up in great white mittens, were like lumps of ice, my feet sympathized strongly. The wind blew and flapped the frozen clothes into my face, when my shawl was not flying round my head. I knew by former trials how blue my nose was, and how purple my cheeks. If I had been a man I should have said something very strong, and dashed away at the pins and the clothes in a manner that would have demolished both. But I was only a woman. I only thought the expressive phrases and fumbled carefully with my mittened icicles.

The porch door opened.

"Margaret! Margaret!"

I turned round on the slippery snow, and holding by the rope to steady myself, I screamed:

"What!"

"Come in, right away."

"But the clothes aren't half out," I cried, in return.

"Come in. Somebody wants to see you."

Aunt Margaret had hardly shut the door before I was on the step. I went into the kitchen, half dizzy with the cold and the heat of the room and the pain of my fingers. I didn't expect to find any company there, but the fire had got low in the sitting-room, and Aunt Margaret had invited them to the kitchen fire.

Close by the stove sat two people, a young lady and gentleman, but at that moment I saw only the lady—though I had not seen her before since she was grown. I knew her instantly—my cousin Charlotte Leigh, from Boston. My first sight of her gave me a confused idea of velvet and fur, and of the handsomest face I had ever seen, all mingled with an exasperating consciousness of the state of my own complexion and habiliments.

"Your Cousin Charlotte, Margaret," my aunt said.

Having managed to get one mitten off, I advanced and put my hand in hers.

"You will excuse the coolness of my greeting," I said, alluding rather more to my fingers than my manner, for she could not restrain a slight shudder as our hands met. "But I am not at present in my natural condition. I'm more than half frozen."

I took off my ungainly hood and shawl, while Charlotte laughed gayly, with a certain childish manner that quite enchanted me.

During the process of thawing, Charlotte watched me with some interest. In a moment she bent forward and took my hand, saying:

"Now that the purple is fading from your face, you begin to look like the Margaret I remember. Let me present my cousin, Reede Staniels."

If almost any other person had spoken like that, I should have been annoyed, but in her voice I was not. Reede Staniels bowed gracefully to me, and I looked at him for the first time.

He was a slender, haughty looking young man, but when he smiled or wished to please his face softened and glowed. I had heard Charlotte speak of Reede when we were children together, and a year or two ago she had written that he was in Europe. I had always had an idea that Charlotte would marry her Cousin Reede, though she had never said so, and her flirting proclivities were alarmingly developed; but Reede enjoyed the privilege of first flirter.

As I became warmer I talked faster, slightly annoyed all the time by the presence of the young man, who had risen and sauntered to the window. He suddenly turned and asked:

"Is this the village hotel opposite?"

Charlotte laughed.

"Do you intend to engage a suite there?" she asked.

"That depends," he replied, assuming his indolent air.

"Is it a call or a visit?" I asked Charlotte; tell me the latter, and I shall be forever grateful."

"The latter, then," said Charlotte, with an enchanting smile.

"And your balls and operas—think of the sacrifice," I said.

Reede turned again from the window.

"Then I shall not escort you home to-morrow?"

"No; you will return alone and report at my father's house."

"Will return? You are imperative; you do not know but I have decided to stay."

"Stay here!" exclaimed Charlotte, who stood before the little mirror arranging her hair. "Tell it in Gath! Publish it in Askelon! The daughters of Boston will mourn, for Reede Staniels has taken flight."

"In that case," said Reede, with his hand on the door, "in that case it follows that the daughters of this village will rejoice."

He bowed to me with a rare, impudent grace, and went out.

Charlotte had seen the look and the bow, and glanced at me to see its effect. I could not help smiling as our eyes met.

"What do you think of him?" she asked.

"Very handsome and quite killing—in his own estimation."

"Oh, you'll like him; everybody does," she said.

"Then it will be wise in me to submit to his attractions gracefully," I responded. "Shall I hold out my hands for the fetters, Charlotte?"

"Not till you hold your hand for the ring," she replied, and I thought I detected a warning in her voice.

Somehow I resented that tone; I had no idea of being fascinated by my cousin's cousin, and I said with emphasis:

"Then you'll see me forever free."

"Amen to that," was her response.

Charlotte was inducted into our best chamber, which room, at her special request, I shared with her. I expected every day for a week that she would announce her intention of returning home, but she did not; and after a few days more I ceased to expect it.

Contrary to our expectations, Reede Staniels returned immediately to Boston. Charlotte said she thought a sojourn in the country too much for his temperament to endure. But Charlotte had not been a fortnight with us, when, one afternoon, a light, brilliant cutter suddenly whirled up at the gate, and Reede, looking up at our faces at the window, lifted his hat and bowed low.

"We'll have a splendid ride!" cried Charlotte.

"Doubtless," I said, settling back to my sewing.

"You look as if you were not going," said Charlotte, in a surprised tone.

Reede opened the door as she was speaking, coming in with two little boxes in his hand.

"You see I couldn't help coming back, Lottie. Your father says you may stay as long as you like. But you must hear the other side of the case—half a dozen exquisites are dying because of your absence, as many bouquets were doing the same thing in your parlors last night, wasting their sweetness under the hands of the housekeeper. But I mustn't tell you any more, or you'll be wanting to go back, which desire I should veto, for I've brought my turnout, as you see."

Charlotte stood with amused face listening to his talk. The glow over her face was one of real pleasure. He sat down as he ceased speaking, putting his two packages on the table and commencing to open them.

"You'll perceive I am more fortunate than the forsaken gentlemen in the city, for I can bring my offerings directly to their shrine."

He took from their warmly-lined hiding-places two little clusters of flowers. He laid one in Lottie's hand, then advanced to my side, saying, with more deference in his tone:

"Will Miss Ware accept these? Not for their rarity, but because it is winter-time."

Fragrant, warm-looking honey-suckles and deep blue violets dropped softly on my work.

I looked up into his face; he seemed to have been willing to meet my eyes. He saw my thanks there before I could speak them.

"I am glad that you like them," he said, and turned away, leaving me slightly annoyed that I had gratified him by giving him the glance he had so evidently wished for.

I had at our first meeting felt vexed at his thoroughly at home air, here in the house of strangers, but that feeling passed away and gave place to a little amused surprise that he could be so. His manner was somewhat boyish, but the decided, proud cast of his features when in repose was so opposite to that appearance, that it gave one the idea that his real character did not lie on the surface.

"I came particularly to take you two to ride," he said, after a moment's silence, during which we had been admiring our flowers, and he had been turning over the books on the table. "Will you go?"

For some reason I imagined that Charlotte would prefer to go alone with him, and I did not doubt that he would like that arrangement better. He had just come from her home, and they would have a thousand things to talk of, about which I should know nothing.

"Nothing would be pleasanter. Come, Margaret," said Charlotte, rising to go to her room.

"I really should like to go, but it is very inconvenient for me to go to-day," I said, determined now that I would not be teased into it.

Charlotte cast a deprecating glance at me and closed the door.

"It is impolite to urge you, I know, Miss Ware," said Reede, "but I wish you would go."

"My excuse is true," I said.

"Then some other day you must make amends," he said, stooping to inhale the perfume of the flowers I still held in my hand.

Charlotte had said truly when she had told me that no one could help liking Reede. There was something about him very attractive, for that reason I did not wish to like him. I never cared to like those to whom all paid tribute.

"Thank you, I certainly will," I replied to his last sentence.

I feared I might be considered affected in refusing to go now, but in truth I would much rather remain, and I was prone to do as inclination prompted.

Charlotte came down ready for her ride.

"It's no use urging her," she said, looking at me. "My compliments to Mr. Marsden, if he comes."

"Who is Mr. Marsden?" asked Reede, with exaggerated interest, pausing with his hand on the door. "I must discover before I go."

"Oh, he calls here," replied Charlotte, with a glance at me.

"Oh!" with prolonged reflection, came from Reede's lips.

The inflection told me that he thought he had discovered why I staid at home, and I was provoked with myself that I was provoked. Still more irritated was I when Mr. Marsden, the lawyer, happened to call that very afternoon, and was diligently chatting with me when Reede and Lottie returned. They expatiated so much on the sleighing that Mr. Marsden invited me to try it with him the next day, and I graciously accepted his invitation, to the apparent amusement of Charlotte.

Reede had taken up his abode in the hotel opposite. He drove us on many rides, he took us to the country amusements, he sauntered in at all hours of the day and evening. A great deal of the time I was busy with some household duties, and many other times I left to Charlotte the pleasure of entertaining or being entertained by him.

A fortnight he had been with us. Charlotte began to ask me to go home with her, but I did not wish to go. Since my last term in a city school, I had felt that if I were not to live in town, I must not allow myself to be so attracted by its gayeties, its concerts, its paintings, its innumerable beauties.

At last, after many declarations, she asserted, if I would not return with her, she would go in a week. I trusted something would detain her.

It was a clear, moonlight night, with cold, still air lying over snowy roads and fields. Sleigh after sleigh dashed merrily away on the road to the neighboring town, where one of the wealthy gentlemen was to give a party in honor of his entrance to his new house. A stamping of feet on the doorstep, and a moment later Reede entered with radiant face and eager eyes. I was alone in the sitting-room.

"What! Are you not ready?" he exclaimed. "All the rest have gone. Where is Lottie?"

I felt unaccountably nervous.

"She has a severe cold and is in her room. She is very much disappointed that she can not go."

"Is her illness serious?" he asked.

"Oh, no, I think not," I said, and resumed the seat from which I had risen.

"It is late, now; why don't you put on your cloak?" he asked.

"But I thought I would not go, as Lottie could not be one of the party," I said.

"But I have thought of it all day. I insist upon your going; you must go."

He bent down with one hand on the arm of my chair, his impetuous spirit shining in his eyes and penetrating to my heart.

Why was I so interested in him? The tone in which he said: "I have thought of it all day," thrilled through me, his eyes melted my resolution not to go.

"Come."

He took my hand and raised me from my chair. I went and donned wraps and furs.

When we were fairly on our way, he said, looking down at me with that irresistible glance of his:

"And you were intending to disappoint me? But now I will take care of you to-night; I have you; you are in my power."

It was an instant before I could trust myself to answer words spoken in such a voice as that. I wondered if he had ever spoken like that to Charlotte—to any one. That thought gave me a reply in indifferent tones:

"Then be lenient, be generous to your prisoner——"

"Or she may repent having placed herself in my hands," he interrupted. "Were you not going to say that?"

"You have said that," I replied. "There is no need of my repeating it."

"But you will not repent, you will trust me to-night—Margaret?"

That name in such a manner was a caress. His face was absolutely luminous. I dared not look at it. He seemed yielding to some powerful impulse, now that for the first time he saw me unrestrained by another's presence.

A thought of Charlotte came coldly across me; then I remembered certain things she had said that had given me the idea that Reede Staniels was one of that detestable species, a male flirt. I recalled that suave distance of manner which I generally employed with him. It seemed to freeze him instantly. He became deferential and polite, and almost silent.

A light, filmy haze was spreading over the sky; it softened the moonlight and obscured the stars.

"Is this the turn, Mr. Staniels?" I asked, as he took the right of four corners.

"Yes, this leads to R——, doesn't it? That sleigh ahead is one of our party, I believe."

"Then we are right," I said. "I'm not familiar with this locality at all."

"And you must not be lost with me," he said in such icy tones that I repented my coldness; but it appeared the only safe way for me.

The swift going horse sped like the wind over the road, it was a lonely, winding way, over the hills and into valleys. The haze thickened over the sky, flakes of snow fell softly on my face, and flecked with white the furry robe round me. It was a deceitful storm, for it came gently at first, luring us on, for we thought it would not storm much.

We rode on, turning corners by guess now, for I became convinced that we had lost our way, and there were no houses where we could inquire. The snow came thicker, clogging the horse's feet and impeding his speed. We could not see anything before or around us but the silent fall of whiteness. At last the horse dropped into a slow, toilsome walk up a hill. The reins hung loose in Reede's hand.

"Truly, I did not mean to get lost," he said, in an apologetic tone.

"No, I had not thought you did," I replied.

He put his disengaged arm round me, drawing me closer, and stooping his face nearer mine.

"And truly, I am not sorry," he said. "Do not require me to feel sorrow for anything that gives me your presence without chance of interruption."

I laughed.

"You need not fear intrusion here, certainly," I said.

"Do not torment me!" he cried, with sudden and overpowering impetuosity. "I will not bear it. You have been repellant to me to a degree that would have cured a passion less strong than mine; but I ask now to know if I am very disagreeable to you. Margaret, be kind."

His hair swept over my cheek, his hot breath sighed across my lips. For my life I could not at that moment command my voice. And I firmly believed him to be engaged to my Cousin Charlotte. Was it possible he was playing with me? I asked myself.

"You do not reply," he said, in a low, passionate voice; "you are colder than this snow, but I love you, oh, I love you!"

Suddenly and powerfully he drew me to him, prisoning my lips with a fiery, penetrating kiss.

He released me and gathered the lines hurriedly in both hands. It was time he did so, for the horse had reached the top of the hill, and was plunging down in such a zigzag course as at any other time would have made me half afraid; but I felt willing to die—to die by the side of the man I loved. I feared terror and pain would come if Charlotte knew of this. I could see nothing but trouble for a lover like this.

The horse stopped short, so abruptly that I was almost thrown from the sleigh. Reede sprang out and went to the horse's head. I imagined something was wrong about the harness. Reede had hardly reached his head before the horse dashed aside, throwing out his front feet, and hitting Reede a blow which sent him prostrate. Though I could not see distinctly, I knew from the horse's appearance. The horse reared and danced. I held the reins, but he did not seem to feel the strength—it was all I had—with which I sawed at his mouth. A deadly, horrible feeling was at my heart. Reede did not rise. At last the horse stood still a moment. I dropped the lines and slid from the cutter, staggering through the snow till I reached the spot where Reede had fallen. I forgot that the horse might run away.

I brushed the thick falling snow from his face. He was stunned, but I did not know whether he was otherwise injured. My love rose and overcame all the barriers I had placed about it. If he would look into my eyes again, I would not refuse him what he sought there.

Finally consciousness returned. He tried to rise, and at last stood with trembling hand on my arm.

The horse stood quiet.

"Can you walk to him, or shall I bring him here?" I asked.

He tried to walk, but could not.

"I've hurt me here," he said, putting his hand to his side; then, impatiently: "I am helpless."

Fortunately my country life had taught me how to drive. Reede sat down powerless, suffering, I knew, more than he had told. I turned the horse, not because I knew the way, but because I hoped the horse might know it. A long ride of silence. I turned to Reede who sat quietly, his handkerchief to his face. I bent nearer.

"What is it?" I said in sudden fear.

I touched his handkerchief. In the dim light I could see dark spots upon it.

"Only blood," he said.

"My God!" I cried in agony. "You bleed; how much are you hurt?"

"To death, I hope," he said, in a low, weak tone.

My suffering seemed more than I could bear.

"Live, oh live!" I murmured close to his cheek, "or my love will kill me."

Even in that gloom I saw the lightning-like flash of his eyes; I felt the sweet smile that curved his lips.

"God has not forgotten me," he said, his forehead bending to my shoulder. "In my despair a few minutes ago, I almost thought so. I must live now."

He did live, but it was after much suffering and danger. The hurt he received was internal, and long in healing. The long distance we were obliged to ride before reaching assistance, made the wound worse. The horse, true to his instinct, carried us to the hotel where Reede staid.

"How was the party?" asked Charlotte, when I entered her room.

"I didn't go," I said.

She sat up in bed, rubbing her eyes to look at me. She saw something on my face, for she exclaimed:

"What have you been doing, then?"

I sat down on the side of the bed.

"Were you ever engaged to your Cousin Reede?" I asked.

A look of pain or something akin to it passed over her face.

"A sort of tacit engagement," she said, slowly, "a kind of agreement our fathers made, for us to ratify if we would."

"And you have never done it?" I inquired.

"No," after a pause, "he loves you."

"It is very strange he should," I said, beginning to wonder that he did—"I, a country girl, when he knew so many polished belles of the city."

"Strange!" cried Charlotte. "Have you never known that you are magnificent? No, you have not known it. Therein lies the charm."

"Are you sorry he loves me?"

"A little."

She said afterward, a year after, when she was dressing me for my marriage:

"Had I known a year ago that you had grown to such a face and form, I should not have brought Reede Staniels into the country with me."

"Why?" I said.

"Because I wanted him to love me."

"And now?" with a smile.

"Now I would rather be loved by Marston Hunt, you know. So put forever at rest those conscientious compunctions that revealed themselves that night you so suddenly asked if I were engaged to my Cousin Reede. But 'tis the truth, he did used to flirt. Don't be annoyed, he never looked at anybody as he does at you. You will be happy—he is good, he is noble."—Catherine Earnshaw, in Ballou's Magazine.

BETRAYED HIS TRUST.

A Mother Who Lacks All Knowledge of Boyish Nature.

Close by the center of attraction in the Polish troubles was a cottage occupied by people speaking English. The father was across the street leaning on the fence, the mother was at the gate with a shawl over her head, and a boy, about ten years of age, stood in the door holding a baby nine or ten months old in his arms. By and by the baby began to kick and squall, and the boy called out:

"Say! mam! Jim's a-howlin'!"

"Yes, I know," she replied, "but I want to see these policemen knock somebody."

"He's gettin' red in the face and holdin' his breath!" shouted the boy, as he tossed the kid up and down.

"Blow in his mouth," advised the mother without turning her head.

"It don't do any good, and he's kickin' me all to death!" howled the nurse after a minute.

"Wait a minit — they're going to move! Take care o' him five minits and I'll give you a cent."

"A cent!" exclaimed the lad in deep disgust. "A cent fur holdin' this young 'un when six thousand fellers are a goin' to jump on each other with clubs! Never! Not for a nickel!"

And he laid the howling baby on the door-step and ran to secure a position on the roof of a cow-shed.—Detroit Free Press.

ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING.

A Texas Darky Explains the Advantages of His System of Defense.

The frequency with which unloaded guns and pistols are discharged with fatal results is suggestive of the suspicion that some of the alleged deplorable accidents are the result of deep design.

These peculiar accidents remind one of a conversation that occurred between two negroes.

"What has yer got wrapped up in dat paper?"

"Dat's a pistil, one ob dis heah pistils what's easy on de trigger, what cocks hitself and shoots hitself off."

"Whafter does yer want a pistil? Can't yer 'fend yersel wid a knife?"

The other negro, who was a very hard case, shut one eye, and with a smile that was calculated to produce a shudder, replied:

"Do you really think so?"

"Why, it is so grand, so perfectly magnificent, that you deserve an audience composed entirely of musicians like Beethoven."

"That's the highest compliment a musician can receive."

"Yes, but you deserve every bit of it. Yes, sir, an audience composed of musicians like Beethoven would appreciate your piano recitals."

After the performer had gone away a gentleman asked Pennybunker what he meant by such extravagant praise of such poor music.

"I beg your pardon, I didn't praise his music," replied Pennybunker.

"You said he deserved an audience comprised entirely of musicians like Beethoven."

"And so he does. Don't you know that Beethoven was so deaf that he could not hear a single note of the loudest orchestra? That's the kind of an audience he deserves."—Texas Siftings.

A Nice Old Police Force.

was the reply, and that ended the conversation for that time.

In about an hour the old man came rushing up in an excited state of mind and cried out:

"Some infernal skunk has picked my pocket of twenty-two dollars!"

"Well, I cautioned you."

"You're a liar! You told me to look out for confidence men, and never said a word about pick-pockets! While I was a-telling one chap that I was no greenhorn, and that nobody could confidence me, his partner got into my pocket. You're a nice old police force, you are!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Tale of the Trousers.

A Gardiner man brought a pair of pants of a trader recently, giving an order on a [illegible] for payment. The pants didn't fit, and he wished to exchange them, but this the dealer refused to do, as they were slightly soiled. The man was indignant and sought the advice of a lawyer. The lawyer went to the dealer and persuaded him to take the pants back and return the order. The man who returned the clothing was delighted and didn't think it at all exorbitant when the lawyer demanded the order in payment for his services. The dealer got the pants, the lawyer got the order, and the purchaser got left.—Augusta Journal.

Married Men as Duelists.

Here is a good story apropos of dueling. Two frequenters of the principal cafe at Arles quarreled, with the result that two friends of the one who considered himself the affronted party waited on the other, a corn merchant in the town. The latter received them courteously, but after hearing their message sent them back to his antagonist with the reply. "Tell M. Carjuza," he said, "that it would give me great pleasure to fight him were we on an equality as adversaries. But M. Carjuza is a bachelor and I am a married man and the father of three children. Tell him that when he, too, is a married man and the father of three children I will seriously consider his challenge."—London Figaro.

V.

The Bad Little Girl.

She was in the parlor entertaining Dr. Pillgarlic while her big sister was putting the finishing touches to her toilet up-stairs. While she was munching the candy he had given her, she suddenly put her hand to her cheek.

"Oh, dear, I've got tooth-ache!"

"That's too bad," he said sympathetically.

"I wish my teef was like Sister Lillie's," she said, artlessly.

"Why?" he asked.

"Then, when they ached, I could take 'em out an' put 'em in a mug till they got through."

And then Sister Lillie, who had entered, led her out with the remark that "little girls should have been in bed long ago."—Sam, the Scaramouch.

Where He Was Struck.

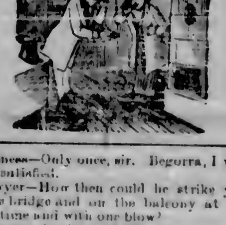
Witness—Yes, sir. He struck me on the bridge——

Lawyer (sharply interrupting)—How is that? You said awhile ago that he struck you on the balcony?

Witness—So he did, sir. I'm tellin' you no lie.

Lawyer—Did he strike you more than once?

VI.



Witness—Only once, sir. Begorra, I was quite satisfied.

Lawyer—How then could he strike you on the bridge and on the balcony at the same time and with one blow?

Witness—Anyhow, he did, sir.

Judge (interfering)—On what balcony?

Witness—The balcony of the hotel, your Honor.

Judge—And on what bridge?

Witness—The bridge of my nose, sir. Had the spalpeen waited, I'd a told him.—Philadelphia Call.

A Child's Definition.

"Mother," said a little Rockland girl looking up from her book, "what does transatlantic mean?"

"Oh, across the Atlantic, of course. Don't bother me; you make me forget my count."

"Does trans always mean across?"

"I suppose it does. If you don't stop bothering me with your questions you'll go to bed."

"Then does transparent mean a cross parent?"

Getting Used to the Public.

Young Pianist (downhearted)—Oh, it's no use, I don't seem to have any luck. The people are continually telling me I can't play, and have no talent whatever.

VII.

Veteran Pianist—Don't be so downcast, my boy. You'll soon get used to the ways of the public. Why I've had the same thing said to me a great many times, only yesterday, in fact, and by a man whom I esteem highly.—N. Y. Star.

Objected to Being Tipped.

De Guy—I heard you were arrested the other day on account of a beastly row with a waiter.

Allensh—So I was. He had me arrested for giving him a tip.

De Guy—Impossible! Who ever heard of such a thing?

Allensh—True as shooting, though. He was deuced insolent, and I just tipped him over the table with my boot.—Philadelphia Call.

Anxious Judge Peterby.

Mrs. Judge Peterby is a very spare woman. She is excessively thin. A few days ago her husband said:

"I don't really think that you ought to go out on the street, Mariah."

"Why not?" she asked.

"Well, you know there is so much danger just now from mad dogs. They will bite at almost anything."

"But I don't think I am in any more danger than anybody else."

"O, yes you are. Dogs love to gnaw bones."—Texas Siftings.

Silver-Tongued.

"Say, pa, is speech silver?"

"Yes, my son, the proverb says: 'Speech is silver, silence is gold.'"

"Well, I just saw a couple of Dutchmen on the corner, but I couldn't understand a word they said—must have been talking German silver."—N. Y. Herald.

PITH AND POINT.

—It is a curious fact that rich relatives are apt to be distant ones.—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

—When you see a woman meekly obey her husband you can be sure of one or two things—she is either afraid of him or is working him for a new bonnet.

—An employer who had been annoyed by the tardy habits of one of his workmen greeted him one morning with the salutation: "Good evening, sir; where have you been at work to-day?"—N. Y. Herald.

—"I like smart women well enough," said Fenderson, "but I wouldn't care to marry a woman who knew more than I did." "And so," suggested Fogg, "you have been forced to remain single."—Boston Transcript.

—Bagley—"I can not buy this cook-book. It is not practical enough." Agent—"Not practical?" "No, sir. I observe that it gives no less than sixteen different ways to cook beefsteak." "A very good feature." "I don't agree with you. I would much prefer one way to get a beefsteak."—Philadelphia Call.

—New Yorker (to Boston young woman)—"Shall we take a bobtail car, Miss Penelope?" Miss Penelope—"What is a 'bobtail' car, Mr. Smith?" New Yorker—"One drawn with a single horse and without a conductor. Don't you have them in Boston?" Miss Penelope—"O, yes, but we call them Darwinian cars."—N. Y. Times.

—"It is a curious custom the Japanese have, my dear," remarked a husband, "of taking their shoes off when entering a house." "The custom is curious," replied the lady, "in the fact that it is practiced at all hours instead of at night only," and her husband said, "Yes?" with a rising inflection, which was about all that he could say.—Texas Siftings.

CHRISTMAS IN NORWAY.

How the Descendants of the Norsemen Celebrate the Great Christian Holiday.

On the morning of the festal day the roads are thronged with sledges conveying visitors to their destinations, the brass bells which decorate the hardy little Norwegian horses making a merry tinkling in the frosty air. The very air itself seems to palpitate with the sweet chimes of the bell melodies; and is not a sleigh ride one of those delights that defy rivalry? The day begins with divine service. The churches are very plain, and the worship simple; and whenever the service is over relatives and friends assemble at different houses according to invitation, where a preliminary repast, consisting of a variety of viands, liquors and sweets, is partaken of before dinner, which (woe to the dyspeptic!) follows immediately after. The first courtesy, however, shewn to a male guest on entering a Norwegian house, no matter at what hour of the day, is a pipe of tobacco. The dinner is a lengthy affair; fish, poultry, meat, entrees, cakes and preserves go round and round again and again. Between the courses intervals are allowed for the singing of national songs, the giving of standard toasts, and the drinking of healths. To the Norwegian the words Gamle Norge ("Old Norway") have a powerful spell in them, and on festive occasions like the present they can not be resisted. In an instant Gamle Norge is repeated by every voice; the glasses are filled and drained, and then bursts forth in a simultaneous chorus the national song of Norway, "For Norge." There is no nation in the world that can surpass Norway in this enthusiastic love of country. When the dinner is over the chief guest rises, saying, Tak for maden (thanks for the meal or entertainment), which is responded to by all present, who bow to the host and hostess at each end of the table. At seven o'clock tea is handed round, then a little later in the evening comes a knock at the door, and some four or five boys enter dressed in white mantles, the tallest of these holds a large colored lantern shaped like a star, while another bears a small illuminated glass box containing two little wax Dutch dolls, one of which represents the Virgin Mary sitting in a chair and the other the infant Jesus lying in a cradle. A bit of handle is moved by a wire from side to side of the lantern, making it appear as if the doll mother was rocking the cradle at her feet, and the lantern is meant to represent the star in the East which guided the Magi to the lowly manger. These mysteries are all explained during the exhibition in the words of a carol chanted by the boys. After these lads are dismissed with some slight refreshment or bonbons and a little money, another band of masked performers, rather older than the last, make their appearance. They are dressed in military fashion, with cocked hats on the head, tattered-looking uniforms, purposely decked with tinsel, and wooden swords suspended at their sides. (They are very like our own November Guys, only much more interesting.) These maskers perform all kinds of fantastic tricks for the amusement of the spectators, conspicuous among them being a pantomimic military review. No one in Norway ever refuses to admit these performers of their annual mummeries, or sends them away empty-handed. Numerous diversions and games now follow among the household; supper is announced and partaken of, the gentlemen settle down for a general smoking, and the ladies disappear up-stairs, where an eager talking and clatter of tongues goes on as they put on their wraps. Then come the sledges to the door; hearty shakings of the hand, with loudly expressed good wishes, are exchanged all round, and the happy guests are borne swiftly over the snow, glittering in the moonlight, to their respective homes.—Chambers' Journal.

HUMAN LIFE.

The Average Length of Life at Various Ages.

The following is one of the well-authenticated tables in use among London assurance companies, showing the average length of life at various ages. In the first column we have the present ages of persons of average health, and in the second column we are enabled to look, as it were, behind the scenes of an assurance office, and gather from their table the number of years they will give us to live. This table has been the result of careful calculation, and seldom proves misleading. Of course sudden and premature deaths, as well as lives unusually extended, occasionally occur, but this is a table of the average expectancy of life of an ordinary man or woman:

CHARLEVOIX!

ITS FUTURE.--DESTINED TO BECOME ONE OF THE LEADING CITIES OF NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The following extract is from a letter written by a gentleman who has spent three resort seasons here:

. . . The Location on the shore of Lake Michigan, at the point where the waters of those most charming sheets, Pine and Round Lakes empty into it, renders it the natural headquarters for the important Shipping interests of the entire Pine Lake Region.

Other small villages may thrive and grow, but they must from the nature of things, always pay tribute and owe allegiance to Charlevoix.

At least two Railway Companies are anxiously looking towards Charlevoix as a terminus, and in my opinion the place offers inducements for the operations of Capital, second to few points. . . I would say farther, if your patience were not exhausted, that at the store of Stockman & Iddings' there may be found one of the finest assortments of HARDWARE, IRON & NAILS, STOVES, TIN-WARE, PAINTS, OILS, BRUSHES, and everything in the line of BUILDERS MATERIALS, in Michigan. What is more, their prices are reasonable and they WILL NOT be undersold by anyone.

Local News.

—The Detroit Evening News is a disgrace to Michigan journalism.

—Right, not spite, should actuate voters in the coming county seat contest.

—Put it down in your memories that there was a thaw every day last week.

—C. R. Bellinger has just received a handsome line of fine clocks. Call in and see them.

—Wm. Gibson, formerly editor of the Petoskey Record, is on the staff of the East Jordan Enterprise.

—Heath & Francis have just constructed for the jewelry store of C. R. Bellinger a handsome silver-ware case that is a daisy.

—Cadillac parties have bought the "Dodge pine", near Summit City, Grand Traverse county, Mich., and intend to ship 5,000,000 feet of logs from that point within 30 days.

—Charlevoix's new grist mill is a first-class one in every respect. The writer of the descriptive article which appeared in last week's Sentinel, evidently has made a study of the roller system. It was well written.—Progress.

—Dr. Crouter left Sunday to be absent a week.

—Thomas Book is to receive a back pension.

—Thomas Kelley returned from the Grand Rapids Soldiers' Home yesterday.

—L. D. Bartholomew & Co. have a new ad calling attention to their stock of sugar makers' supplies.

—The North Star mills have disposed of nearly one hundred barrels of flour already, and wheat is coming in rapidly.

—An entertaining Florida letter from Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew will be one of the interesting features of next week's SENTINEL.

—Major Green, assisted by several members of Baxter Post, last night instituted Ironton Post No. 340, G. A. R., with ten members.

—Lieut. Gov. Buttars and Hon. F. J. Meech, members of the State Central Committee, left yesterday to attend the Detroit meeting of the Michigan Club.

—Edward Slocum of New Richmond, Allegan county, owns the first Greenback issued. It is a dollar bill, bears date August 1st, 1862, is marked series A No. 1, and was paid to him as a union soldier.

—In Col. C. F. Leidy, that peerless Detroit evening paper, the Journal, possesses a state editor that looms head and shoulders above any other state news architect in the metropolis. A man who takes the Evening News certainly evinces the fact that he never saw a copy of the Evening Journal.

—Prof. Allen has a Normal class, consisting of Misses Cooper, Goss, O'Neill and Metcalf, that meets daily. By the way Prof. Allen is competent to teach anything under the sun excepting Chinese and he is devoting a few hours each day toward the mastery of that rough-on-rats tongue. Prof Allen can talk you blind in seven different languages.

—The silver wedding surprise upon Hon. F. J. Meech and wife last Saturday evening, referred to in our Norwood correspondence was one of the happiest events of the kind ever occurring in Northern Michigan. The hospitality of the Meeches is proverbial, and it was never exhibited more bounteously than on the occasion of their twenty-fifth anniversary.

—The railroad ferry Algomah continues to make daily trips between Mackinaw City and St. Ignace and Mackinac island, and there is every reason to suppose she will continue all winter. The ice is very thin in places, owing the amount of snow on top and the constant wearing away by the current beneath. No teams have crossed the straits this winter nor would it be safe to attempt it. Fishermen are spearing a large number of fine Mackinaw trout.

—D. Sherwood & Co., the boot and shoe dealers have a new ad noting special reductions, next week.

—Another interesting communication from Florida from the pen of M. J. Stockman is found in this issue.

—Rev. C. F. VanAuken and wife left Monday for Potterville, to attend the sick bed of Mr. VanAuken's sister.

—A "cap social" will be held at the Barnard school house on Saturday, Feb. 20th, for the benefit of Rev. G. W. Howe.

—Mr. M. Scott of Harbor Springs has leased the blacksmith shop adjoining the foundry, and is prepared to do all work in his line.

—Married, at the M. E. parsonage, Feb. 15, by Rev. J. T. Iddings, Mr. John McIntosh, and Miss Serepta Cooper, both of Marion.

—The Charlevoix circulation of that sterling sheet, the Detroit Tribune, has more than doubled since the new management took control.

—The first flour from the new Charlevoix mills was manufactured into biscuit Thursday evening for the families of H. V. Ritenburg and W. H. Harris.

—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. Scott, the new blacksmith, this week. Mr. Scott comes well recommended as a first-class workman. Give him a trial.

—The last weeks Detroit Tribune with characteristic energy gives an exhaustive accurate record of the lumbering operations of Michigan during the past year. Speaking of Charlevoix, it says as preface to its Charlevoix correspondence:—"The cut in Charlevoix and inland waters tributary to that thriving city averages up nearly twelve and one-half million. Advices show that these figures are entirely reliable. The shingle crop amounts to 2,725,000, but, strange to say, the natural refuse from the large number of logs cut would seem to have been wasted, or at all events, not consigned to its natural destination, viz: lath, as advices state that the manufacture of those articles amounts to nothing. Careful estimates place the cut of logs for 1886 at 18,000,000."

—In this issue appears a lengthy Grand Rapids Democrat interview with the notorious Gilbert Smith. The language is rather too classical for Smith, but so far as the details of his escape and wanderings are concerned may be true, but that he is a martyr not even the marines here will believe. Smith, in the opinion of most people here, justly met his Nemesis, but that the goddess of rewards and punishments fell short of doing full duty in the premises. Smith threatens to sue the county for damages. If successful in his suit, that court which sits in judgment over all earthly tribunals will reverse the decree with costs.

—The Kalamazoo Daily Telegraph says: "Charlevoix is not unhappy. The county seat gone and her enterprise demonstrating that such honors are not necessary to lively existence in this world and serene joy in the next, she sits on the fence in the sunshine of permanent prosperity and smiles at the bitter war waging between East Jordan and Boyne City for the possession of the "plum" she has lost. It is unknown which of the contestants she favors, but it is presumed she is a bit happy over East Jordan's travail and occasionally feels like putting her keen blade through that burg's evident seat of pain, and gives it, by way of a reminder, a you-know-how-it-is-yourself now turn. The road to East Jordan's turn, was not a long one, and she feels sensitively the shadows that hover over her."

—The enormous extent, value and importance of the lumber interests of Michigan far exceed the belief of persons who have not carefully investigated them. Not only is Michigan the greatest lumbering state in the union; its lumber products exceed in value those of any other two states, and the men who are engaged in preparing them for the world's markets have brought to their aid an organization, efficiency and system unequalled in any other line of business. In 1880 the value of Michigan's lumber products was $52,449,928; those of Pennsylvania $22,457,359; of Wisconsin, $17,952,347; of New York, $14,356,910; of Indiana, $14,260,826; of Ohio, $13,364,160; of Minnesota, $7,366,038; of Maine, 7,933,863. Michigan contains one region, the Saginaw Valley, in which more lumber is cut, more capital employed, and more wealth, represented by products, sent forth than in any other similar region in the world. The story of the growth and development of these interests from their insignificant and trifling beginning to their present enormous proportions is among the most interesting chapters in the history of human achievements. The total lumber cut of Michigan is now annually in the neighborhood of 4,000,000,000 feet, and in the various ramifications of the work of preparing this enormous amount for the market—the felling of the trees in the forest, the cutting of roads, skidding, hauling, banking, and running logs, rafting and towing—$40,000,000 are expended.—Detroit Tribune.

—The contemptible Evening News' wholesale lying against the Detroit Tribune will lose it as many readers, we trust, as did its disgraceful course in the Dr. McLean case.

—Those who intend to build this spring or summer will do well to remember that the Charlevoix Manufacturing Company are making arrangements to stock their mill with double the usual amount of material.

—The Baptist denomination of Charlevoix, have sent an invitation to Rev. Mr. Parker of Cheboygan, to come and look over the field here with a view of becoming their pastor. Mr. Parker is highly spoken of.

—The Newman House has recently undergone change in the way of improvement. Mr. Newman has finished up the lower rooms, made possible by the recent elevation of the building, and a fine dining room and kitchen below releases rooms above which greatly improves the house.

—The idea has occurred to those interested in school matters, that the second story of the village hall could be transformed at a trifling expense into handsome quarters for a high school room, the present room in the school building proper being already inadequate. The nearness of this room to the school building, its offices adapted to recitation rooms, its central location and its proximity to the public library and reading rooms all favor the idea.

—The Detroit Evening Journal says: "Petoskey is the scene of a new edition of the war of the Roses. The Emmet County Democrat is claimed by Rosell Rose, as his individual property, while Mrs. Rose, who is arranging for a divorce, maintains that she owns the plant, "and don't you forget it." Recently Rose visited the shop and found it held by Mrs. R's next best friend, Bruce Handall. The two glared at each other but didn't shoot. Later Mrs. Rose replevined the outfit, which is now in the hands of the sheriff."

—The Petoskey Record speaking of the Democrat civil war says: "Since our last issue and up to the present writing Mrs. Rozelle Rose has remained in possession of the Democrat office well guarded by muscular friends. Mr. Rose returned last night, but has not yet indicated what course he will pursue. Last week Newberry tried to arrange with Mrs. Rose and buy the paper, but her attorneys advised her to decline for the present. The proposition of Judge Newberry created a considerable stir among the old line democrats, and $500 was pledged as a starter to establish a new paper if the Democrat passed into the hands of the hermaphrodites. Another week will probably make the situation more clear.

—The Detroit Evening Journal of the 9th says: "Archibald Buttars is a thoroughbred American of English origin. He entered this world of sin by way of Manchester, England, but remained there only long enough to get over the inevitable ailments of babyhood, when he girded up his loins and headed for America. He struck Michigan soil in 1852 and squared himself for a rough and tumble fight for fame and fortune. He sailed in like a Tipperary slugger at a free-for-all shindy. He didn't have much of an education, but dead loads of horse sense and clear grit proved an excellent substitute. He joined the red sash brigade, chopped wood, rafted lumber, made a [illegible] and met the hardships of a frontier life with a bold front. He struck out on his own hook, got along first rate with the fickle dame and finally became a prosperous merchant, with a good record to look back over and a pleasant prospect ahead. He was elected state senator in 1880, responded to an encore in 1882, and was speaker pro tem of that body in 1883. Several gentlemen wanted to be the Republican nominee for lieutenant governor in 1884, but Archie had the pole and took the race. He was elected by a close shave and has held down the position with the ease and grace rendered so easy in an office that is principally honorary.

Banks.

Mr. Simeon Wood, whose demise was noted last week, was buried last week Thursday, with Masonic honors. Sermon by Rev. G. W. Howe, of Norwood, supported by Rev. W. H. McCartney. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the community.

The very pleasant and warm weather of last week, threatened a general break-up. A moderate change of temperature and light fall of snow checked proceedings. The roads are fairly good again, and the bare spots of ground are securely sheltered.

An interesting literary society at the Ingalls school house every Tuesday eve.

The North Star Mills.

Upon a subject which lies so close to the material interests of our people we are loth to believe that too much can be said.

The Rifenburg flouring mill is now an active industry in our village, and it's hum and rumble can be plainly heard from any part of town.

Friday was the first full day that the mill was in uninterrupted operation and that day it was put upon trial to its fullest capacity. It is now running ten hours per day in a most satisfactory manner, and with gratifying results.

The several grades of flour have been critically examined in comparison with all other brands in the local market, and pronounced by competent judges to be equal to the best. Their "Iron Duke" patent is perfect in quality.

There is no doubt that the product of the North Star mills will readily find its way to the market as standard goods.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Petoskey Record, viewing with solicitude the loss of Charlevoix as a market for Petoskey flour, promulgates the doctrine that no mill can sell its flour in its own town, we regard the situation here as an emphatic contradiction of this theory.

The business men of Charlevoix are too sensible not to realize the importance and justice of patronizing an institution which brings to them what they have for many years lacked—a reliable grain market—and, all other things being equal, their interests are identical with those of the North Star mills. This is not only true of Charlevoix, but of all trading points in its vicinity.

We predict a popularity for the North Star flour, and, in behalf of a Charlevoix enterprise, appeal to business men to give their support to an institution which of its kind is of the best, and a true promoter of the material interests of our town and region.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Third Discourse of the Series on "The Marriage Ring."

Clandestine Marriages, Elopements and Other Matrimonial Escapades Considered By the Light of Scripture and Common Sense.

Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage delivered the third of his series of discourses before a large congregation at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, the interest in the series having become quite marked. In prosecuting the division of his subject under the heading of "Clandestine Marriages and Escapades," Mr. Talmage took the following text:

Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant. But he knoweth not that the dead are there.—Proverbs ix., 17-18.

The preacher said:

The garden of Eden was a great orchard of fruit-bearing trees, bushels and bushels of round, ripe, glorious fruit, but the horticulturist and his wife having it in charge, hankered for one special tree, simply because it was forbidden, starting a bad streak in human nature, so that children will now sometimes do something simply because they are forbidden to do it. This kink in the human race is not easily unsnarled. Tell a company that they may look into any twenty rooms of a large house except one, and their chief desire is to see that one, though all the others were picture galleries and that a garret. If there were in a region of mineral springs twenty fountains, but the proprietor had fenced in one well against the public, the one fenced in would be the chief temptation to the visitors, and they would rather taste of that than of the other nineteen. Solomon recognized this principle in the text, and also the disaster that follows forbidden conduct...

...marital candidate has been debauched, if he has no visible means of support, and poverty and abandonment seem only a little way ahead; if the twain seem entirely unmatched in disposition, protest and forbid and re-enforce your opinion by that of others, and put all lawful obstacles in the way; but do not join that company of parents who have ruined their children by a plutocracy of domestic crankiness which has caused more than one elopement. I know of a few cases where marriage has been under the red-hot anathema of parents and all the neighbors but God approved, and the homes established have been beautiful and positively Edenic.

But while we have admitted there are real cases of justifiable rebellion, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, yea, in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand, these unlicensed departures and decampments by moonlight are ruin, temporal and eternal. It is safer for a woman to jump off the docks of the East River and depend on being able to swim to the other shore or get picked up by a ferry-boat. The possibilities are that she may be rescued, but the probability is that she will not.

Read the story of the escapades in the newspapers for the last ten years, and find me a half dozen that do not mean poverty, disgrace, abandonment, police court, divorce, death and hell. "Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant. But he knoweth not that the dead are there." Satan presides over the escapade. He introduces the two parties to each other. He gets them to pledge their truth. He appoints where they shall meet. He shows them where they can find officiating minister or squire. He points out to them the ticket office of the rail train. He puts them aboard, and when they are going at forty miles the hour, he jumps off and leaves them in the lurch; for, while Satan has a genius in getting people into trouble, he has no genius for getting people out. He induced Jonah to ...

Gen. Hancock's Death.

A special of the 9th says:—In front of No. 8 Governor's Island an orderly was this afternoon pacing to and fro. It was the residence of Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock who died there at 2:31 o'clock. If the general had lived until the 14th day of this month he would have completed his 62d year, having been born in Norristown, Feb. 14, 1824. In the second story of the front room, furnished with soldier-like simplicity, lay the remains of the general who, as the great is remarked, led his troops to more battles than any of his military cotemporaries. The death of Gen. Hancock was not merely a surprise to his family. It was a shock to them as well as to his friends. Twenty days ago he started on business connected with the department of the Atlantic to Philadelphia, where he remained two days. He then proceeded to Washington, where he had business. In Washington a boil developed itself on the back of his neck. It was lanced Jan 30, and as the general was much inconvenienced by its presence he returned to New York several days sooner than he designed. During the first week of February the boil developed into a malignant carbuncle, which separated constantly and prevented rest and sleep.

Dr Janeway was called, and it was not until marked weakness had resulted from the presence of the carbuncle that the surgeon discovered that Gen. Hancock was suffering from diabetes and kidney trouble. Dr. Janeway called a consultation of Dr Sutherland, medical director of the department, and Dr. H. M. Simmons of New York. The medical men concluded that the case was assuming a very serious form on Monday. At 10 o'clock Monday night, before going away, [illegible]

GAMBLING IN STOCKS.

Operations of Bucket Shops and How the Dear Public [illegible] on Stocks.

The real business of the New York Stock Exchange is unquestionably as legitimate as that of the Produce Exchange, or of any intermediary between the seller and the buyer. That there are grave evils incident to its operation is equally unquestionable. The war for the preservation of the national Union largely converted the American people into a nation of speculators. The rage for sudden wealth was further intensified by the discoveries of mineral oil and the precious metals. These created innumerable companies for the exploitation of mines, the construction of railroads, and other objects. Sudden and violent fluctuations in the price of stocks, and the daily report thereof in the newspapers, aggravate the speculative spirit. Considerations of morality and prudence are set at naught by those who will be rich, and who dream of opulence by other methods than the slow and steady measures of their fathers. Professional men, merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, farmers, widows, and spinsters, blinded by the glare of success, and hoping to strengthen their slender income, have adventured their savings upon the treacherous sea of Wall street, and lost them all. To them the exchange building is a whited sepulchre in which fortunes lie entombed, a sea in which voracious sharks rend or swallow the little fish who dare to enter its troubled waters, a gambling saloon where deceit and desperation wait upon the players. It may have been such to them, simply because they made it such, not because they availed themselves of its real functions.

An immense amount of gambling is done in piratical relation to it, and in spite of the strenuous exertions of the stock-brokers to prevent it. The "bucket shops" situated in the large towns and cities of the country are the instruments by which it is carried on. The proprietors of these nefarious establishments surreptitiously obtain quotations from the Stock Exchange. Tickets are refused to them by the Western Union unless four members of the board vouch for the worthiness of each applicant. The quotations desired are furnished by persons who have bound themselves to that telegraph company not to do so, and who have obtained injunctions from the courts restraining the corporation from [illegible]

HOW NOT TO DROWN.

Keep Cool and Don't Struggle.

Four years ago I was floating in the surf at Atlantic City, gazing up into the sky and thinking only of its beauties. When, feeling somewhat tired, I essayed to stand up, but failed for the very excellent reason that I had nothing to stand on. I had, without noticing it, floated out beyond my depth. I am a very indifferent swimmer, and make it a rule not to venture into the water when I cannot secure a foothold when I need one. Yet I found myself, not through any foolish venturesomeness, beyond the furthest line of bathers. Of course I immediately struck out for shore. After swimming until I felt thoroughly exhausted I found that I had made very little progress, and I also discovered that the bottom of the ocean was too far beneath me to be of any practical benefit as a basis of traveling. Now what would you do under such circumstances? Shout for help, you say. Exactly! That, I suppose, is what any well-conditioned, sensible human being would do, and yet I found myself actually ashamed to do it. I was positively morally weak enough to permit a consideration of what my fellow-men would think of me to overpower the natural sense of self-preservation. I fancied that I might be laughed at for crying for assistance before I was actually sinking beneath the waves, and so I struggled on until a sudden convulsive twitching in the calf of my leg told me that I had a cramp. Then I shouted "Help!" quite lustily, and shouted thrice. Nobody heard me, and nobody paid any attention to me. Thanks to my good fortune, however, I remained perfectly cool, else I would not be talking to you now. I was able to recognize on the shore the faces of people I knew, and, although I experienced no sense of fear, I felt fully satisfied that I would never see them again.

Now, by all recognized rules and regulations in such cases made and provided, the events of my entire life should have passed before me in instantaneous review. I'll guarantee that you never read a novel but that, when the hero or villain was sinking beneath the waves, he thinks, with lightning-like rapidity, of every act in his career. "And, as Reginald felt the cruel waters closing above him, all the deeds of his life, both good and bad, [illegible]

JIM, the oldest and largest tiger in the United States, died at the Zoological Gardens in Philadelphia the other morning, at the age of twenty-five years.

THE Duke of Abricorn characterizes the Irish problem as "the one cloud which hangs over the Empire and casts its shadows on Tories and Liberals alike."

A SNOW-MELTING machine, which, it is claimed, will melt the snow as fast as fifteen men can shovel it in, was tried with success in New York the other day.

ONE day recently it was twenty degrees above zero in New York, and at the same hour, twenty miles away in the Passaic Valley, it was twenty degrees below.

MR. JOHN RUSKIN, the art critic, in writing of the Irish question, says that the Celts are witty and affectionate and that the witless and heartless can not govern them.

ORANGES that are or have been frozen are poisonous. Florida shippers are accused of sending their frozen stuff to the North. They might as well send dynamite lozenges.

A VERMONTER recently sold his wife for six dollars. What caused the boom in the market is unexplained, as a man in Akron, O., sold his wife a few days previous for five cents.

DURING the recent session of the South Carolina Legislature ten new railway companies were incorporated. These have all received liberal charters and are preparing to begin work.

A PROPOSED railway from Zanesville to Marion, O., ninety miles in length, for which papers of incorporation have been secured, will, it is claimed, make the shortest line to Chicago by forty miles.

IN the Wyoming Valley coal district of Pennsylvania last year 115 men lost their lives in the mines, leaving sixty-six widows and 190 orphans. In the Lackawanna district seventy-one men were killed.

REPRESENTATIVE COLE, of Maryland, proposes to push in Congress a bill appropriating $50,000 to build in Patterson Park, Baltimore, a monument to Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

A GREAT many cattle are reported to have been frozen to death in Western Kansas during the recent cold weather, and the severity of the winter is said to have done a good deal of damage among the flocks and herds of Texas.

THE Treasury authorities at Washington have come to the conclusion that when an individual does not present a claim he may have on the Government for twenty-four years, his executors have no right to initiate proceedings for its collection.

A MAN in Cleveland, O., was recently before the courts charged with stealing his own sister. There have been cases where some other fellow's sister was stolen, but this is a much rarer happening. The judge was reported as "puzzled." One would think he would be.

THE United States Circuit Court for the second circuit, including New York City, has decided that beans are seeds and not vegetables. New York has been slow in reaching this conclusion. Boston has always understood that the bean is a seed—the seed of brains and culture.

IN the United States Supreme Court at Washington the other day, in a case regarding a patent for a woman's dress-protector, General B. F. Butler created amusement among the auditors by a peculiar manipulation of elegantly dressed dolls, which were attired in a manner to show the disadvantage of the protector.

WHEN your hair begins to turn white and your eyes to weaken, you may conclude that you are gradually getting to be an old man. But don't worry. "Never say die," even to your white hairs, and as for your eyes, glasses will "lend enchantment" to their view for many years, if you will confine yourself to eye-glasses only.

SENATOR CULLEN, of the New York Legislature, draws his salary daily. Last winter on one occasion he did not receive the amount asked for at the specified time, and now, to get even with the disbursing officer and insure himself against financial embarrassment, he insists that his daily salary of fifteen dollars be paid him at the conclusion of every session.

JUST at a time when California began to make faces at the frozen regions and "region of cyclones," old Boreas stepped down and gave her a little touch of his icy fingers. Until the North Pole gets righted, no country this side of the equator is wise to do much bragging. There are changes going on among the elements that scientists can neither understand nor explain.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Interesting News Compilation.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

MONDAY, Jan. 25.—In the Senate C. E. Walthall was sworn in as Senator from Mississippi. Senator Cullom introduced a bill to pay a pension of one hundred dollars per month to all soldiers and sailors who are totally disabled and who have been receiving a less amount. Senator Brown offered a bill which provides that no action shall be begun by the United States to cancel a land patent after three years from date of entry. Senator Morgan introduced a bill providing that members of any tribe or nation under the jurisdiction of the United States shall be eligible to appointment to office. The House met and adjourned in respect to the memory of the late Joseph Rankin, of Wisconsin.

TUESDAY, Jan. 26.—The session of the Senate was devoted exclusively to tributes to the memory of Vice-President Hendricks by Messrs. Voorhees, Hampton, Sherman, Saulsbury, Evarts, Ransom, Spooner, Vest and Harrison. In the House bills were introduced: For the relief of railway mail clerks who have been in the service twenty years; to authorize the payment of postal-notes at any money-order office; to limit the capital of any National bank to $3,000,000; to prohibit the importation of pauper labor; to give preference to American citizens in employing laborers on public works; to pension survivors of the Mexican war, and to declare the silver dollar a legal tender.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 27.—In the Senate a bill was introduced to reimburse the survivors of the Jeannette Arctic expedition. Mr. Harrison made a speech favoring the admission of Dakota to the Union. In the House a bill was passed forfeiting certain lands granted to the States of Missouri, Alabama and Louisiana to aid in the construction of railroads. The Senate resolutions touching the death of Vice-President Hendricks were presented.

THURSDAY, Jan. 28.—Mr. Morrill offered a resolution in the Senate setting apart sites in Washington for statues of Columbus and Lafayette. Mr. Ingalls presented a petition from colored citizens of Washington, complaining of discriminations at theaters and other public places. Mr. Dawes made a favorable report on a bill for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, and to extend the protection of the laws over the red man. Mr. Sherman introduced a bill to discontinue the coinage of the silver dollar, and to issue coin certificates for silver bullion purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill for the admission of Dakota was discussed. In the House Mr. Weaver introduced a bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and to allot homesteads to Indians. A bill authorizing the President to restore officers to the army in certain cases, intended to apply especially to Fitz John Porter, was reported favorably by Mr. Wheeler. Eulogies on the career of the late Reuben Ellwood, of Illinois, closed the proceedings.

CABINET RESIGNS.

The British Cabinet Held a Meeting and Tender Their Resignations to the Queen.

Their Retirement Causes but Little Excitement—Believed That a New General Election will be Ordered Soon.

TENDERED THEIR RESIGNATIONS.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Lord Salisbury had an interview with Mr. William Henry Smith, the new Chief Secretary for Ireland, yesterday morning, that gentleman having just returned from Dublin, where he was sworn in Tuesday. Subsequently a meeting of the Ministers was held, and then a Cabinet council, at which, it is said, a decision was reached that the members of the Cabinet would at once proceed to Osborne and tender their resignations to the Queen.

The crisis excites but little interest. Everything is quiet, and the only noticeable effect is a slight weakening of the markets.

The Boston Globe's representative cabled last night as follows: The fall of the Salisbury government was so entirely a foregone conclusion that it causes little excitement. Probably no Ministry ever retired with so little humiliation. Its attitude toward the Irish question represents the real sentiments of a vast majority of the English people and defeat under these circumstances is recognized as merely the result of party exigencies of a temporary nature. Mr. Gladstone and his friends evidently appreciate this, for the Liberals exhibit no enthusiasm over the arrival of the long foreseen moment of responsibility. Salisbury, as leader of an opposition united as one man, is in a position to greatly harass Mr. Gladstone, striving to harmonize a party differing among themselves and seemingly committed to an Irish policy which England will accept only under protest and temporarily if at all.

The probabilities increase that a new general election will be found necessary. The rumors that the Queen will refuse to accept Salisbury's resignation; that she will order a new election at once; that she will send for Hartington instead of Gladstone, etc., are all discredited in the best informed quarters. But even if Gladstone is called upon to form a Ministry, and does form one, it remains very doubtful in the face of the defection of some of his strongest supporters (including Hartington, Goschen, Lubbock and others equally prominent) that he can command a majority for such measures as will be necessary to retain the support of the Home Rulers.

Viewing Tuesday night's crisis in the light of a probable new election in the near future, it is significant that the vote adverse to the government was not a Home Rule question, but on one of the land reform. As you have been constantly informed in these dispatches this is the real Irish question. Though Home Rule has been pushed to the front, what the Irish people really have at heart is land reform, and it is to this question that any practical Irish policy must sooner or later revert.

Mr. Collings' amendment, which the House adopted, expressed regret that Her Majesty had proposed in her speech from the throne no measure to facilitate the acquirement, by agricultural laborers and others, of small holdings on equitable terms as to rent and security of tenure.

Mr. Gladstone would be very apt, in the event of a new election, to be upheld in a policy based on the lines indicated in this amendment. He carried measures of Irish land reform in 1881 which were a long step toward the very end aimed at, and there is no reason to doubt his ability to repeat that triumph. He was weakened in the recent campaign by the impression among the English masses that he was committed to Home Rule. The latter issue was forced to the front in Ireland to the exclusion of everything else, and was naturally taken by outsiders to represent the overmastering desire of the Irish people. But the practical evidence since obtained that a Home Rule policy, pure and simple, can not enable the Irish members to gain the balance of power in the House, together with the development of a considerable opposition to such an exclusive policy among the Irish people themselves, has given an altered aspect to the situation.

With a new election, and perhaps even without it, the land question is likely to resume its leading position in Irish politics, and in that event Mr. Gladstone's ascendency is assured. It was stated last evening that emissaries of Mr. Gladstone are at work among the Irish members endeavoring to convince them that the Home Rule demand has had a fair trial and has proved itself to be impossible of realization at this time, and that by supporting Mr. Gladstone in a policy of Irish concession on the general principles indicated by the Collings' amendment, they will be acting justly toward their constituents, and will enable the Liberals to form a strong government, supported by English sentiment, and from which Ireland may obtain valuable legislation.

Mr. Chamberlain, who was visibly delighted by Mr. Gladstone's remarks on the Collings's amendment, was seen to engage Mr. Parnell in an earnest conversation soon afterward, and it is said that his devotion to Liberalism has been suddenly ripened to enthusiasm by the prospect of his favorite land theories being allowed a chance of incorporation in the Gladstone platform and that he is doing his utmost to bring Parnell into the attitude referred to. It is thought by some that Mr. Parnell will let the Home Rule question take a secondary place for the time being, at least, and support Gladstone in a policy of general Irish reform, by which he will command the support of all his former Whig and Radical allies and gain a sufficient number of moderate Tory converts to give him a majority of the present House, without recourse to another popular vote.

The shuffling and mean party tactics of the Tories have disgusted even many Whigs, who, until recently, have been loud in the support of the strong measures for Ireland. Promises made before and during the election by the Tory leaders have been completely ignored, and the amount of political dishonesty displayed has hardly had its parallel in the past fifty years. Mr. Parnell's election circular in favor of the Conservatives is bitterly remembered and the severance between the Nationalist and their Tory allies is most complete.

—India rubber is menaced with a rival. The rubber dealers of Eastern Nicaragua think they have discovered a tree whose gum will give as much satisfaction as rubber, and will, in fact, take its place. They say that the milk of the tuno furnishes a most excellent gutta percha, equal to the best found in the Eastern tropics, while the number of trees is virtually inexhaustible, and the gum can be produced with profit at twelve cents a pound.—Chicago Tribune.

—The Lyon County Times tells of a peculiar breed of fish at Hind's Springs which are all covered with a beautiful little shaggy coat of hair instead of scales. That, however, is nothing strange. The writer of this has seen suckers in Reese River with fine white wool all over them, except in spots along the sides where the wool was rubbed off by contact with the river banks or with each other in passing up and down the narrow stream.—*Virginia (Nev.) CRY OF THE FORESTS.

Save us! O, save us from the ruthless hands
That fain would lay us low!
Dry up our wholesome moisture from the lands,
And stop our streamlets' flow!

Save us! Ye know not what ye do, to kill
The life from which ye drink
Your health, your wealth, your soil spring showers that fill
The thirst of hill and plain.

Ye know not, while with murderous hand our ranks
Are hewn and thinned away,
How soon your rivers with their flowery banks
Will shrink to miry clay.

Save us! Our unsunned virgin solitudes
Have saved you from decay.
Behold, the dryads of the ancient woods
Lift up their hands and pray.

Would ye behold your fields to deserts turned,
Kissed by no winding river?
In the fierce August sun your meadows burned
To arid sands forever?

O, save us! We your saviors fain would be;
For in our forests old,
Mid murmuring boughs we hold a treasury
More rich than gems and gold.

Here in our mountain wilderness we keep
Our unregarded state,
With ministries as soft as love and sleep,
Early we watch and wait,

To send from granite [illegible] and eaves the drops
Of heaven in fountain rills
Through avenues of pines and beechen copse
And gorges in our hills.

Save us! We dryads of the western world,
We naiads of the streams,
From our abodes amid ferns and mosses curled,
Wake from our summer dreams,

And start to hear the woodman's echoing axe
Far through our cloistered shades;
And weep to see the scathed and blighted tracks
Far down the forest glades.

We lift our hands, and pray to mortal men,
We bodiless, woodland elves,
To spare the all saving forests, for ye then
Will save us—and yourselves!

IT WAS EXPLODED.

Mr. Windsor's Theory That "A Man Is a Fool to Marry."

"A man is a fool to marry."

"Yes?"

"Beg your pardon, Brigham, I had forgotten you are so recent a Benedick."

"Yes?" again with an upward inflection.

"You see, I was thinking of St. Leger. A man of his years, his absolute freedom—rich, handsome, gay—to tie himself down to the caprices of a woman! Of course, I don't expect you to pass an opinion, but can you explain it?"

"I will answer your question by asking another. Have you seen the woman?"

"Yes; she is everywhere, is she not?"

"She is pretty," said Brigham.

"Y-e-s. Yes, no doubt she is very pretty. That's but a small reason, however, for a very great—sacrifice."

"Marriage is one of the things inexplicable to all except the married."

"But St. Leger didn't need a wife. No man ever needed one less. She is pretty, but there is a perceptible shade of provincialism about her—don't you think so? She is too happy; enjoys her carriage too much; smiles too readily; and blushes—heavens, such a color! I believe that can be done to order, though, like stage tears."

"You are a cynic, Windsor, the worst of cynics. You go so far in it that you destroy your influence."

"Well," leaning back, and languidly resuming his cigar, "perhaps I do." Then suddenly rising, as if impelled by a new idea, Windsor burst out:

"Yes, and already the country relations have begun to visit Bob. I presume the young madame has as many sisters as Tommy Traddles' wife—as Sophy. I thought Bob looked very like Traddles this morning when he announced to me that he was going to the train to meet his wife's sister. He was quite eager about it, and felt called upon to say: 'She's a sister worth having, Adolphus.' H-m-m! He's bewitched—a positive dotard."

"You miss Bob, Windsor?"

"Yes, I miss him. I never supposed he would serve me this way. I believed him a fellow of sense—good, hard sense. But it sometimes seems as if those were the very ones to fall most headlong into the trap—positively to go out of their way to put a noose about their own necks that, soon or late, is sure to strangle all good-fellowship in them."

"You were born for an orator, Windsor," said Brigham, dryly. "Have another cigar?"

"No," rising to go. "I see I haven't the sympathies of my audience. You barely tolerate my opinions nowadays."

"Don't go," protested Brigham, suppressing a smile. "I enjoy what you say. It is—it is really very amusing."

"You are sneering inwardly. You don't indorse me. You are also married and—incredulous. Good morning."

"Wait a minute, Windsor," said Brigham, laying a detaining hand on his arm; "my wife is going to have a few friends to-night—wholly informal, you know—and she wants you to join us. It is high tea, or something of that sort; only about twenty. St. Leger and his wife will be there, and perhaps this new sister-in-law, if she comes as expected. Mrs. Brigham is very fond of Mrs. St. Leger."

"Thank you—but——"

"There, you are not ready-witted, old fellow. It takes too long for you to invent an excuse. Say you'll come. We shall expect you."

"But really, Brigham——"

"We shall expect you," said Brigham, peremptorily, as he turned to his desk, virtually dismissing his visitor.

This conversation took place in Tom Brigham's down-town office. He was a hard worker in a way—quite the only one in his set who found it necessary to look sharply after the dollars and cents. The bulk of his patrimony had vanished round a "corner" just after his marriage to the lovely and merry Diana Smith. Since neither of them had practiced economy before marriage they made a double failure of it afterward. And Brigham was working all the more strenuously now to keep his small but sumptuous establishment going. His friend Windsor chose to ignore the hard deal as a factor in this domestic problem, and persistently recurred to Tom's marriage as the beginning of adversity.

The other mutual friend, St. Leger, who had followed Tom's famous example by marrying, was the gayest of bachelors until a shy, gray-eyed, coun-

Bacteria as a Means of Determining Impurities in Water—A Display of Bacilli Eating Chicken Slaw and Gelatine.

Prof. Henry F. Formad, of the University of Pennsylvania, in his lecture last evening at the Franklin Institute on "Germs and Their Influence on Health," developed an entirely new system of water analysis by which the precise nature of organic impurities can be determined. The plan is the capture of bacilli in water.

A FUGITIVE.

The Wanderings of Gilbert Smith—How He Broke Out of Jail Three Years Ago.

From the Grand Rapids Democrat.

Three years ago a crime was alleged to have been committed in the village of Charlevoix, which led to the apprehension of one Gilbert Smith, who was brought to trial before Judge Ramsdell, at Charlevoix. The trial resulted in a disagreement of the jury. Mr. Smith, who had been incarcerated in the county jail at Charlevoix, was ordered kept in durance until a new trial should be held. The jury was picked in the first trial from people resident in the immediate vicinity of Charlevoix and in that village. The story had thoroughly penetrated the minds of all residents in that neighborhood and the result of a trial held before such jurors gives a reasonable ground for a belief that the charge was falsely made. However that may be, violent threats were made, and his friends thought that Mr. Smith had better flee the country. Before the first trial lynching had been openly threatened, and one night Mr. Smith experienced a considerable amount of rough handling from masked men, which resulted in an illness of four months duration. During his sickness the prisoner was allowed to stay at home with his wife and children, but no sooner did the convalescing period come than the unfortunate man was again incarcerated to await a second trial.

"While imprisoned in the jail," said Smith to a reporter yesterday, "I received many bits of advice from friends. All wished me to run away, and at last I consented. But before I made up my mind to go I succeeded in holding nightly consultations with my wife, and enjoyed the privilege of seeing my children. ...

... the boat saw me and took me aboard. I was a pretty well fagged man, now, I tell you.

The tug steamed into Little Traverse Bay; the men lifted and set their nets. I saw that they were from Charlevoix, but knew that they had recently settled there and did not know me. They asked me where I was going, and I told them ... I lived on Beaver Island and that I ... about going to Charlevoix. The sea was running higher than when they took me on board, and certain death would have resulted had I attempted to launch my skiff.

At my request the captain of the tug ran up under the lee of a point and let me off. I rowed a short distance to Burgess' mill, where I knew the people. They received me and gave me food. Advised not to remain over night, lest the others should learn of my whereabouts from the fishermen who had picked me up, and come to Burgess for me that night. Although I was made welcome and invited to spend the night there, I ate supper, took some matches and rowed across the little bay, which was comparatively smooth, and landed near a lot of fir trees. It was my intention to spend the night in a shelter made of my boat and what ... and underbrush I could find, but when I tried to pull the boat up to the trees, I found myself unable to accomplish the task. Seeking the cover of the wood I endeavored to build a fire, but the matches were damp, and I had nothing but wet slabs to build a fire with, so naturally very poor success crowned my efforts. Finally I did kindle a little fire, but after flickering in an uncertain manner for a few minutes, it left me cold and wet in that sombre and dismal forest. You know how the winds sigh through fir trees? It seemed like a requiem over my body to hear the wind as it sang mournfully to me, using as accompaniment the Æolian harps fashioned by nature. I slept a little, but would wake frequently and turn the wet side down and then go to sleep again. ...

Local News.

—C. Y. Cook and wife will return next week.

—Judge Newberry of Petoskey, favored us with a call Monday.

—O. I. Wheat and wife returned from their southern visit last Friday.

—A letter from H. W. Beach states that he has anchored at Tampa, Florida, for at least a year.

—J. P. Hart the Ionia architect, in renewing for his SENTINEL says: "I don't know how to get along without it."

—It is authoritively stated that Hon. C. G. Luce will not allow the use of his name as a candidate for governor. Sorry.

—R. Rosenthal & Son have finished their annual invoice and in their new ad speak of bargains in clothing, underwear, etc.

—The wood-work for Major Green's new building has been put up at architect Kirkpatrick's shop and is described as a model of its kind.

—The SENTINEL extends a cordial invitation to its friends to step into our press-room any Wednesday afternoon between two and four, and witness the working of our steam presses.

—Perfection has been reached in the new covered stage that was placed on the Charlevoix and Petoskey route, yesterday. This stage is covered with oiled canvass and cedar, has a double floor and is painted vermilion.

—A new dock is to be built at Petoskey.

—Geo. Miller is expecting a large line of spring clothing next week.

—Mrs. O. A. Cooper left Friday for a visit among Grand Rapids relatives.

—The ladies give a supper at the Newman House next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the boys' band.

—Stockman & Iddings fill their advertisement with an announcement to sugar makers. Look it over carefully.

—The Boys Band masquerade last Monday evening was a great success. Charles Newman furnished supper to fifty couples.

—Ike Burton, foreman for A. W. Olds & Co., the Bear Lake lumbermen, skipped by the light of the moon last week. He was accompanied by $1,000 in funds belonging to the company.

—Stockman & Iddings have ordered the plate glass for Major Green's new block. This front will contain 23,898 sq. inches of plate glass and will be one of the handsomest north of Grand Rapids.

—Rev. W. H. McCartney of Banks will supply the M. E. pulpit at East Jordan until conference. Our East Jordan friends will find in Mr. McCartney an eloquent, conscientious, christian gentleman.

—Al Washburn has made arrangements to enter the employ of F. W. Craine & Co., this spring. Al is a host in himself and his extensive acquaintance in this region will prove a powerful factor towards making this new establishment a success.

—The officers elect of the Grand Lodge I. O. of O. F. are as follows: Grand master, O. A. Janes, of Hillsdale; deputy grand master, S. S. Fallas, Cadillac; grand warden, George M. Dewey, of Owosso; grand secretary, E. H. Whitney, of Lansing; grand treasurer, B. D. Pritchard, of Allegan; grand representative, B. F. Rounds, of Benton Harbor. Jackson was chosen as the place of meeting for next year.

—Cedar Springs Clipper: The proposed legislative reunion is now a fixed thing. Time, June 10, 1886; place, Lansing. Over 500 have responded favorably, and 489 favor the above date and place. Those interested in the above movement request newspapers to publish a correct list of all present and ex-members in their respective counties and send a copy of said paper to the Hon. George W. Thompson, 56 Ionia st., Grand Rapids, Mich. This will not only show enterprise on the part of the press, but at the same time furnish the publisher with valuable information.

—The annual village election occurs on Monday, March 8th.

—New village voters should register with the clerk, Saturday, March 6th.

—Meeting of the M. E. choir at the residence of the director Saturday evening.

Not So Fast, Gentlemen.

The SENTINEL is undoubtedly considered a potent factor in the county seat fight, if what we hear from East Jordan is true, and it comes well authenticated. Several of the good citizens of that burg recently held an indignation meeting for the purpose of expressing their disgust and devising means to boycott the SENTINEL because of its attitude in the county seat question. ...

J. T. COURIER, of Stella, Neb., recently went to Wyandotte, Kan., to take a position as telegraph operator, but was found dead in bed at the hotel where he stopped, having been suffocated by gas. With him was found a letter from his mother describing a dream of her son's death.

THOMAS A. EDISON, the electrician, who is a widower, is passing the winter in Florida, accompanied by his daughter and sons, and it is hinted that he will bring back a bride with him in the spring. He recently bought a house at Orange, N. J., which, including its furnishings, cost over $450,000.

THE recent heavy gales on the Maine coast washed up at Kennebunk the copper-fastened keel of a vessel which had evidently laid on the bottom of the ocean for many years. It was carefully examined by old salts, and the opinion was expressed that the keel belonged to the Isadora, which was lost off York Cliffs, Me., November 30, 1842, with all on board.

THE Dublin Freeman's Journal admits that agrarian outrages still occur in the remote districts of the country, but it declares that the National League can not be held responsible for them. It adds that the league has resolved to do all in its power to repress disorder and to remove every semblance of a pretext for the Government to revive the coercion laws.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Interesting News Compilation.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 2.—In the Senate Mr. Riddleberger offered a resolution that the President is not restricted by law in removing officials, and that the Senate has no right to require a statement of his reasons for suspensions. Mr. Pugh submitted a substitute, declaring the President responsible to the people for removals or suspensions from office. The Electoral-Count bill was recommitted. Mr. Chase introduced a bill to prevent Congressmen from recommending appointments to office, and Mr. Harris a measure appropriating $75,000 to establish a bureau of public health. In the House the day was devoted to eulogies of Vice President Hendricks.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 3.—The Chair placed before the Senate the resolution submitted by Mr. Riddleberger and the substitute for it submitted by Mr. Pugh concerning the relations between the President and the Senate in regard to information and papers affecting Government officers suspended or appointed. After some discussion a motion by Mr. Edmunds to lay the resolutions on the table was carried, only one voice being heard in the negative. A motion by Mr. Riddleberger was subsequently agreed to to take his resolution from the table, and Mr. Morrill moved that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which motion prevailed. The Dakota bill was further debated by Messrs. Logan, Butler and Morgan. In the House reports were submitted: To enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture; to protect homestead settlers within railway limits; to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory, and to prohibit any officer of the Government from hiring or contracting out the labor of prisoners.

THURSDAY, Feb. 4.—In the Senate the bills providing for an Assistant Secretary of the Navy and for the admission of Dakota were debated, but no action was taken. A petition was presented urging that the Oklahoma Territory be opened to settlement. In the House a bill was passed abolishing certain consular fees affecting ship-owners and masters, and one providing that in addition to the present method of taking depositions of witnesses in cases pending before United States Courts, it shall be lawful to take depositions in the mode prescribed by the laws of the State in which the court is held.

Many of those who were shouting "turn the rascals out!" are bewailing the wickedness of the rascals who are turned in.

The Rochester, N. Y. Democrat says, and says it boldly: "Mr. Cleveland either has very queer ideas of the integrity demanded of public servants, or he is shamelessly insensible to public opinion. In either event he is certain in time to find out how wrong headed he was in not cleansing his Cabinet while yet there was time.

The New York Sun is working itself up to a melting heat as it directs its rays upon the Pan-Electric Administration scandal. It does not allow a day to pass without a sharp dig at the ribs of President Cleveland. One of its recent thrusts is this:

"Is there still any person who does not understand how heavy a load President Cleveland's Administration is at this moment carrying? Mr. Garland, perhaps feels that he can afford to keep his office and brave public opinion for the sake of possible pecuniary gains in the golden future. How long can a Democratic Reform Administration afford to keep Garland?"

It has been reserved for the good natured German to find a way through the temperance gate of the Turkish Mahometan. Gen. Lew Wallace tells with great [illegible]

The Grant Monument.

Before the sum is wholly subscribed there will be time carefully to consider what form the memorial should take, and the other question which the death and burial of General Grant have brought prominently forward, whether there should not be a common national ground, a campo santo, in which the great heroes should be buried and which would become at once a shrine of national pilgrimage and an ever-renewing fountain of national union and patriotism.

There is one obvious objection to such a scheme, which is that the claims of distinguished citizens to such national sepulture must be determined by Congress, and the result would be almost inevitable that mere partisan feeling would largely determine a question which such feeling can not justly decide. There is to be considered, also, the advantage of the distribution of such national shrines throughout the country by the burial of every great citizen at his home. Mount Vernon is a temple and a monument which even the Capitol would not be if the dust of other great Americans were deposited in its crypts. Like the battle-fields of the Revolution which are scattered over the old thirteen States, and each of which is a consecrated field of patriotism, the graves of famous Americans enshrined amid the local scenes of their lives would be altars of enkindling patriotism everywhere in the land.

It is objected, indeed, and very forcibly, that they are not cherished, but fall often into most unseemly neglect. Wherever this is true, it is a caustic reproach of the neighborhood or of the family. But it is hardly a reason for national interment that a great man's kindred are negligent of his grave.

In a little town among the hills of western Massachusetts there is a monument to the "ever-living memory" of the sons of the town who died in the service of the Union. It is not a shaft, [illegible]

The best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

CAREFUL attention to diet is the best guard against disease. It is a fact which all should know, that over-eating not only corrupts the blood but destroys nerve force, and induces dyspepsia, jaundice, bad breath, piles, pimples, low spirits, headache, ague, malaria, and all stomach and liver troubles. Dr Jones' Red Clover Tonic quickly cures the above diseases. Can be taken by the most delicate. Price fifty cents, of Druggists.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c per box by Dr. G. W. Crouter and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

WE should economize at all times, but more especially when times are close. Observe the pure acts of your thrifty neighbors. More substantial benefits can be obtained from a fifty cent bottle of Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure than a dollar bottle of any other cough remedy. It is a prompt, safe and pleasant cure for all throat and lung troubles. Sold and endorsed by Druggists.

THE RISE OF THE CHESTNUT

It is a matter of reproach to our social scientists that the habits and customs of the joke have received so little attention. It is an error of the vulgar to suppose that a joke is a literary meteor that flashes across the intellectual sky for a moment and then disappears forever. Even trained observers have been deceived into expressing much the same opinion; and a celebrated scientist, whose services to mankind justify us in concealing his name in connection with the charge, was heard to declare that a joke was "an instance of intellectual aberration unworthy of serious attention." Nothing could be further from the facts. Leaving aside any discussion of the first cause of the joke, which would involve us in the obscurities of metaphysical discussion, we may state boldly that the joke has well-defined habits and peculiarities, and a study of its history and development is well worthy the attention of the foremost minds in science.

It is evident to any observer that the joke may be accurately divided into races and nationalities. No one who had paid the slightest attention to the subject could possibly mistake a German joke for a French joke, or a French joke for a British joke. In fact, they are as plainly marked off from each other as any two breeds of dogs, and each undoubtedly has its different habits. An adequate discussion of the subject can not even be outlined in this column. Nevertheless, as a small contribution to an important subject, we offer the following account of a single member of the large and interesting family known as the American joke:

It is eight months or more since the chestnut joke first saw the light. Its birth is involved in obscurity, in spite of earnest efforts to trace its ancestry. In the early days of its existence it gave no sign of coming greatness. We know the story of the school at Brienne, where Bourienne took the [illegible]

What Makes Certainty of Life.

She Took off her Hat.

Clara Louise Kellogg has given entertainment enough to audiences, one would suppose, writes a New York correspondent, to have earned the right to enjoy herself as an auditor when she chooses. But I sat next to her in a theater the other evening when two fellows directly behind her would not let her have a good time. She was handsomely dressed, and on her head was one of those towering hats that are now in high favor, except with those whose view of a performance is by them obscured, and to this class of objectors belonged the chaps at the rear of Miss Kellogg.

"I say, Jim," one remarked, in a thrilling whisper, "did you ever try to mark the height of a stovepipe hat from the floor up the side of a room by estimate? Yes? Then you made it as high as a flower barrel, likely. Now, I'll bet you the drinks that this millinery construction is a silk hat and a half tall; and I'll hold mine up for a measurement."

The wager was made, the hat was uplifted for comparison, and it was settled without dispute that the heights from brim to crown were exactly the same. A glance around the theater showed that the same surprising fact was realized on dozens of women's heads. But the bet was not so readily decided, for from Miss Kellogg's hat uprose two feathers six or eight inches further, and the wagerers could not agree whether they were to be considered as part of the structure itself. The prima donna grew fidgety in hearing the dialogue, and her color reddened considerably.

"Do you remember," said one of her tormentors, after an interval of silent endeavor to see past the constantly-shifting obstruction to what was going on in the stage show, "an apparatus that Heller used to exhibit for looking through a brick?" [illegible]

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Fourth Discourse of the Series on the "Marriage Ring."

The Mutual Duties of Husband and Wife, With Suggestions on the Preservation of Domestic Harmony and Culture of Home Pleasures.

Can two walk together, except they be agreed—Amos iii., 3.

He said: No, Amos, they can not. They will be tripping each other up, or pushing each other down. Married life under such circumstances will be the sounding of perpetual warhoop. In this course of sermons on "The Marriage Ring," I will to-day speak of the mutual duties of husband and wife, preparatory to discourses on their individual duties.

A church within a church, a republic within a republic, a world within a world, is spelled by four letters—home! If things go right there, they go right everywhere; if things go wrong there, they go wrong everywhere. The door-sill of the dwelling-house is the foundation of Church and State. A man never gets higher than his own garret or lower than his own cellar. In other words, domestic life overarches and undergirds all other life. The highest house of Congress is the domestic circle; the rocking-chair in the nursery is higher than the throne. George Washington commanded the forces of the United States, but Martha Washington commanded George. Chrysostom's mother made his pen for him. If a man ...

I want to tell you that the destroying angel passes by without touching or entering the door-post sprinkled with blood of the everlasting covenant. Why is it that in some families they never get along, and in others they always get along well? I have watched such cases, and have come to a conclusion. In the first instance, nothing seemed to go pleasantly, and after a while came devastation, domestic disaster, or estrangement. Why? They started wrong. In the other case, although there were hardships and trials, and some things that had to be explained, still things went on pleasant until the very last. Why? They started right.

My advice to you in your home is to exercise to the very last possibility of your nature the law of forbearance. Prayers in the household will not make up for everything. Some of the best people in the world are the hardest to get along with. There are people who stand up in prayer-meeting and pray like angels, whom at home are uncompromising and cranky. You may not have everything just as you want it. Sometimes it will be the duty of the husband and sometimes of the wife to yield; but both stand punctiliously on your rights, and you will have a Waterloo with no Blucher coming up at nightfall to decide the conflict.

Never be ashamed to apologize when you have done wrong in domestic affairs. Let that be a law of your household. The best thing I ever heard of my grandfather, whom I never saw, was this. That once having unrighteously rebuked one of his children, he himself having lost his patience, and, perhaps, having been misinformed of the child's doing, found out his mistake, and in the evening of the same day gathered all his family together and said: "Now I have one explanation to make, and one thing to say. Thomas, this morning I rebuked you very ...

Reports to the State Board of Health by sixty-six observers in different parts of the State, for the week ended January 23, indicated that rheumatism and consumption of the lungs increased, and diphtheria, neuralgia, dysentery, inflammation of the bowels and inflammation of the kidneys decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at twenty-five places, scarlet fever at twenty-five, typhoid fever at three and measles at five places.

More than twenty-five thousand bushels of beans were raised last season within a radius of seven miles of Charlotte.

All the State troops have been paid in full to the 1st of January.

The prosecuting attorneys of the State will hold a convention in the Supreme Court room at Lansing on Wednesday, February 10, to discuss modifications desired in the criminal practice laws.

OHIO DEMOCRACY.

An Occasion for Severe and Hearty Root-and-Branch Work.

The offense of the political methods of Ohio Democrats is "rank and smells to heaven." These methods are an outrage upon party allegiance. They not only violate every principle of honesty and every instinct of honor, but they set at defiance every dictate of sagacity. They wrong the people whose decisions they nullify, while they degrade the party in the interest of which they are exercised.

The management of Democratic interests in Ohio—and especially the Cincinnati influence in that management—has been in bad odor for years. The men who have come to the front have not been distinguished for character or ability. They belong to the class of politicians, always too numerous, who value a narrow and time-serving expediency more than principle. For political wisdom such men substitute cunning, and for the true methods of party effectiveness they resort to the clumsy blundering of the ruffian and the criminal.

Ever since the malign element which was content to leave Allen G. Thurman ...

... land's reasons for removals would make no intrusion on the Presidential prerogative, but only furnish an excellent opportunity to set himself aright. If he has any good reasons why should he not be eager and glad to furnish them? Washington contended that in all cases where the Senate had any doubts it was bound to ask him for his reasons before taking final action, and why should not Cleveland do the same? It is his privilege, of course, to refuse to render any reasons, but when he does so for the purpose of "defending the Presidential prerogative" he exposes himself to the same suspicion which has so long clouded Falstaff's reputation for candor and sincerity.—Chicago Tribune.

The story published in these columns recently, from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, created a deal of comment here as it has elsewhere. Apparently it caused even more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester, but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper a few days ago which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal inquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed necessary.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion at his residence on Andrew street, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued, such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. I was brought so low by neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious. The medical profession has been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of kidney disease more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of diseases are torturing people to-day, which in reality are Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a hydra-headed monster, and ...

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The Fifth Discourse of the Series On "The Marriage Ring."

The Husband's Duty to the Wife — Responsibility of the Marriage State — Ante-Nuptial Love Compared with Post-Nuptial Life.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage delivered the fifth discourse of the series on "The Marriage Ring," before a highly interested congregation, and the husbands, present and prospective, were given an outline as to their duties. The text was:

And Isaac went out to meditate in the field at the eventide; and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and, behold, the camels were coming.—Genesis xxiv., 63.

Following is the sermon in full:

A bridal pageant on the back of dromedaries! The camel is called the ship of the desert. Its swinging motion in the distance is suggestive of a vessel rising and falling with the billows. Though awkward, how imposing these creatures as they move along, whether in ancient or modern times, sometimes carrying four hundred or four thousand travelers from Bagdad to Aleppo, or from Bassora to Damascus. In my text comes a caravan. We notice the noiseless step of the broad foot, the velocity of motion, the gay caparison of saddle and girth and awning, sheltering the riders from the sun; and the hilarity of the mounted passengers; and we cry out: "Who are they?" Well, Isaac has been praying for a wife, and it is time he had one, for he is forty years of age; and his servant, directed by the Lord, has made a selection of Rebekah; and with her companions and her maidens she is on her way to her new home, carrying with her the blessings of all her friends. Isaac is in the fields, meditating upon his proposed passage from celibacy to monogamy. And he sees a speck against the sky, then groups of people, and after a while he finds that the grandest earthly blessing that ever comes to a man is approaching with this gay caravan. The drivers cry "Kneel!" to the camels, and they kneel, and putting foot on the neck of the stooping beast the bride dismounts and greets the man who was as worthy of her as she was worthy of him. "And Isaac went out to meditate in the field at the eventide; and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and, behold, the camels were coming."

In this fifth discourse on the "Marriage Ring," having spoken of the choice of a life-time companion, I take it for granted, O man, that your marriage was divinely arranged, and that the camels have arrived from the right direction, and at the right time, bringing the one that was intended for your consort, a Rebekah and not a Jezebel. I proceed to discourse as to how you ought to treat your wife, and my ambition is to tell you more plain truth than you ever heard in any three-quarters of an hour in all your life.

First of all, I charge you realize your responsibility in having taken her from the custody and care and homestead in which she was once sheltered. What courage you must have had, and what confidence in yourself, to say to her practically: "I will be to you more than your father and mother, more than all the friends you ever had or ever can have. Give up everything and take me. I feel competent to see you through life in safety. You are an immortal being, but I am competent to defend you and make you happy. However bright and comfortable a home you have now, and though in one of the rooms is the arm chair in which you rocked, and in the garret is the cradle in which you were hushed, and the trundle-bed in which you slept, and in the sitting-room are the father and mother who have got wrinkle-faced and stoop-shouldered and dim eye-sighted in taking care of you, yet you will do better to come with me." I am amazed that any of us ever had the sublimity of impudence to ask such a transfer from a home assured

We've had wi' ane anither.
Now we maun totter down, John,
But hand and hand we'll go;
And sleep thegither at the foot,
John Anderson, my Jo.

If any one assail her good name you will have hard work to control your temper, and if you should strike him down the sin will not be unpardonable. By as complete a surrender as the universe ever saw, except that of the Son of God for your salvation and mine, she has a first mortgage on your body, mind, and soul, and the mortgage is foreclosed, and you do not more thoroughly own your two eyes or your two hands than she owns you. The longer the journey Rebekah makes, and the greater the risks of her expedition on the backs of the camels, the more thoroughly is Isaac bound to be kind and indulgent and worthy.

Now, be honest and pay your debts. You promised to make her happy. Are you making her happy? You are an honest man in other things, and feel the importance of keeping a contract. If you have induced her into a conjugal partnership under certain pledges of kindness and valuable attention, and then have failed to fulfill your word, you deserve to have a suit brought against you for getting goods under false pretense, and then you ought to be mulcted in a large amount of damages. Review now all the fine, beautiful, complimentary, gracious and glorious things you promised her before marriage, and reflect whether you have kept your faith. Do you say: "Oh, that was all sentimentalism and romance and a joke," and that "they all talk that way."

Well, let that plan be tried on yourself! Suppose I am interested in Western lands, and I fill your mind with roseate speculation, and I tell you that a city is already laid out on the farm that I propose to sell you, and that a new railroad will run close by and have a depot for easy transportation of the crops, and that eight or ten capitalists are going to put up fine residences close by, and that the climate is delicious, and that the ground, high up, gives no room for malaria, and that every dollar planted will grow up into a bush bearing ten or twenty dollars, and my speech glows with enthusiasm until you rush off with me to an attorney to have the deed drawn and the money paid down and the bargain completed. You can hardly sleep nights because of the El Dorado, the Elysium, upon which you are soon to enter. You give up your home at the East you bid good-bye to your old neighbors and take the train, and after many days' journey, you arrive at a quiet depot from which you take a wagon thirty miles through wilderness and reach your new place. You see a man seated on a wet log in the swamp and shaking with his fifteenth attack of chills and fever, and ask him who he is. He says: "I am a real estate agent, having in charge the property around here." You ask him where the new depot is. He tells you that it has not yet been built, but no doubt will be if the company get their bill for their track through the next Legislature. You ask him where the new city is laid out. He says, with chattering teeth: "If you will wait till this chill is off I will show it to you on the map I have in my pocket." You ask him where the capitalists are going to build their fine houses, and he says: "Somewhere along these lowlands, out there by those woods, when the water has been drained off." That night you sleep in the hut of the real estate agent, and though you pray for everybody else you do not pray for me. Being more fortunate than many men who go out in such circumstances, you have money enough to get back, and you come to me, and, out of breath in your indignation, you say, "You have swindled me out of everything. What do you mean in deceiving me about that Western property?" "Oh," I reply, "that was all right: that was sentimentalism and romance and a joke. That's the way they all talk."

But more excusable would I be in such deception than you, O man, who, by glow of words and personal magnetism, induced a womanly soul into surroundings which you have taken no care to make attractive, so that she exchanged her fath-

A Democratic Paper's Account of the Greatest of National Scandals.

The New York Times admits that the public condemnation of Attorney-General Garland for continuing to hold Pan-Electric shares after his appointment as chief law officer of the Government is just; but with regard to the principal point in this scandalous case, the Times passes it over in silence.

We refer, of course, to the fact that, while thus holding a large amount of such shares, the Attorney-General allowed the authority and name of the United States to be used for the purpose of promoting, under cover of a

The Senate Having Proven That the President Has Stultified Himself, "Rest Their Case."

It appears likely at last that the Senate Republicans have appreciated the folly of their contest with the President on the matter of suspensions and removals. The Riddleberger and Pugh resolutions, which would have opened up the whole question in debate, were at first laid upon the table and subsequently called up again to accommodate Mr. Ingalls, who had given notice that he should move their reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. As he declined to do so, Mr. Morrill moved their reference ...

The striking feature was that when the tops were in their prime there was a very noticeable regular gradation in the size, ascending as a step-ladder, the single eyes being lowest ...

Established 1869.

CHARLEVOIX, MAR. 3, 1886.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor.

New York shows large republican gains. Syracuse has elected a republican mayor for the first time in six years, by a majority of 1,000.

Philadelphia Press: Governor Lee, of Virginia, may succeed in his obvious determination to force a settlement of the State debt on terms antagonistic to the Federal Constitution, but we doubt it. The Lee family of Virginia has never been overwhelmingly successful in antagonizing the Constitution.

Washington reports say that there are more persons employed by the present House of Representatives than by any of its predecessors, and still more are wanted. Among committee clerks and employes are many correspondents of Democratic newspapers. Instead of practicing the retrenchment, economy and reform which they preached, the Democrats are apparently beginning to wonder how the Republicans ever got along without more help about the House.

Two States are now in financial trouble, Virginia and New Jersey. The latter is to-day in a condition of bankruptcy. The Supreme court of the state has pronounced the railway tax unconstitutional, and in consequence the treasury has suspended payment. Not even the legislature can draw a penny. As for Virginia, the poor old mother of Presidents is in mortal terror lest she should be obliged to pay her honest debts, without even the help of "refunding." In this case, too, it was a Supreme Court decision that did the business, only it was a National and not a State decision.

The Senate is making a searching inquiry about John Goode of Virginia, who by the grace of President Cleveland is now filling, or rattling around in, the office of United States Solicitor General. He has been somewhat prominent as an "offensive partisan." According to the charges Goode is none too good. His performances have been of peculiar character. He claimed a seat in Congress from a Virginia district some years ago, and evidence that he procured it by the grossest bull-dozing and fraud, is a matter of record in the investigation of the case. He is also said to have been an office-broker for others before receiving his own appointment to the position he is now occupying.

Chicago Tribune: Railroad wars are beginning all over this continent. From New York all the way to the Pacific coast there is a ferment which cannot be arrested. The paralleling of railroads has proceeded so much more rapidly than has the filling up of the country through which they run as to render it impossible for the pool commissioners to satisfy the rival claims for "percentages." The California compact has gone to pieces, and apparently broken so badly as to pass repair. The action of the Santa Fe line in demanding a larger percentage of the California traffic has resulted in cutting down passenger fares to about of the late figures and in a beneficial reduction of freight rates. That there is little hope of a return to former extortionate charges may be inferred from the fact the Union Pacific management is now asking Congress for relief.

As much as is said about California, and has been for nearly forty years its greatness is only vaguely appreciated. It is no less than seven hundred miles in length, having an area larger than New England, New York and Pennsylvania combined, and with only only one navigable river upon its entire coast. Of course such a state is specially dependent upon railway facilities interiorly, but with its vast coast line its extremes are brought into a certain proximity. Crescent City on the north and San Diego on the south, have only the Pacific Ocean in common. According to the latest report the total railroad mileage of this vast state was only about 3,500, more than one-third of it it belonging to the Central Pacific system, which has been distressingly successful in monopolizing the rail facilities of the state, and which, in its turn, forms a part of the Southern route, sometimes called the "Sunset Route," also known as the Huntington system.

General B. F. Butler, in an interview at the Fifth Avenue hotel, New York city, expressed the opinion that Cleveland would not be renominated by his party in 1888, as "the fellows who wanted something and got nothing will be too much for him, and the men who are disappointed are the men who have the machines." Regarding the next Republican nomination for the Presidency, he took occasion to say, "Blaine has certainly grown of late. There is no one else who anywhere near approaches him in his own party. It is possible he may be renominated." He also referred to the bill now before Congress instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to take $100,000,000 of the silver dollars which have accumulated in the Treasury and buy bonds with them. The General said, "The measure is one that should be favored. It is a good bill. There is no reason why Wall street should howl against it. The bonds were made payable in gold or silver. The taking of $100,000,000 of bonds would set loose that much money, for which possessors would desire investment. Business would thereby be greatly stimulated." It cannot be denied that when Butler speaks he says something worthy of attention.

Hotels in America.

The ruling idea in America is that whatever a guest can possibly want is to be ready waiting for him at all hours of the day or night. From 6 o'clock in the morning till bedtime he can eat. Be it breakfast, lunch, dinner or supper, there will be something on the table. In order to post his letters or to buy a paper or to telephone to a friend or to send a message, he has only to walk into the main hall. For a wash, a shave, boot-cleaning, hair-dressing or the relief of his corns, he has merely to sit down on a chair and the appropriate artist will be at his side in a minute. They all understand their business, whatever it may be, and no time or labor is wasted in explanations. The guest knows beforehand his own share of the programme—what he will have to eat, where he will have to sleep, and to a cent what he will have to pay. In the best-managed hotels on our own side of the Atlantic the element of strangeness and uncertainty has not yet been altogether eliminated. A person never knows exactly what may happen to him; how he may be treated, or what he may be charged even at the house which he frequents habitually. But the American hotel sets your mind at rest forthwith. For so many dollars per day you are free of the house and all its privileges, which, apart from the eating and sleeping, are very considerable.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Working a Railroad for all it was Worth.

Under the careless legislation of many of the States, which has permitted corporations to decide for themselves the amounts of obligations they might put out, it is no wonder that the privilege has been abused, and the making of shares and bonds, the latter represented to be amply secured by mortgage liens, has been carried to criminal excess. One illustration will suffice. The Arkansas Central Railroad company, (the name indicates the locality) built only forty-eight miles of its projected line. The road was of narrow gauge, with very light iron, and in every respect cheaply constructed. It cost less than ten thousand dollars per mile, including equipment. As with most companies building railways in new countries, help in its behalf was asked from the communities to be benefited, and bonds amounting to half a million dollars were given it by counties, cities, etc. Under a statute providing for aid to railroads when their beds could be utilized for levee purposes, the company got $160,000 of State bonds. Under another statute it got, as a loan from the State, its bonds to the amount of $1,350,000, which were to be a first lien upon the property. After an abundant assistance, it would have seemed hardly necessary for the company to put out obligations of its own. However, it proceeded to issue and market its own bonds to the amount of $2,500,000, of which $1,200,000 purported to be secured by first mortgage, which was not the case. In addition, a considerable amount of stock certificates was issued. Altogether, nearly $5,000,000 of paper were put out and negotiated on the basis of forty-eight miles of narrow-gauge road. But this proved to be insufficient. The road, for non-payment of interest, soon passed into the hands of a receiver, who found it in such an unfinished state that, with the court's permission, he issued a considerable amount of his own certificates to provide for necessary repairs and betterments. Then the road—the product of so much outlay—was sold at public auction, and brought the magnificent sum of $45,000, which was paid, not in cash, but in receiver's certificates that had been purchased at a large discount.—Popular Science Monthly for November.

ELK RAPIDS

MACHINE --AND-- BOILER WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

Civil-Service Examination.

Mr. James Flurewalker, having become tired of machine politics, aspires to a [illegible] official position under the Federal Government, and having had several years' experience as a sugar expert, he applies for the office of Sugar Inspector in the customs service. In due time he is summoned before the Civil Service Examining Board. Feeling confident of his general intelligence, and of his special qualifications for the position, he presents himself for examination, wearing an easy and benignant smile.

Mr. Flurewalker rapidly collects his thoughts together and tries to concentrate all the faculties of his mind in readiness for the first question, which he is a little fearful may be a poser.

THE FIRST QUESTION.

"In sailing from Mozambique to the Straits of Malabar, what are the variations in the magnetic needle, and what is the cause of these variations?"

Mr. Flurewalker requests a repetition of the question. It is repeated twice—three times—but Mr. F. is too flurried to reply.

"Perhaps you can tell us where Mozambique is?" says one of the examiners.

"Oh, yes! Of course. Why, it is off to the eastward somewhere—an archipelago or a peninsula, or something. It is somewhere near Mesopotamia."

"That will do, sir."

"What is the rule in Shelly's case?"

"Eh! in Shelly's case?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I suppose it's the same rule as with any other man. If he is squarely elected, count him in. I never heard that Shelly had any particular pull."

"That will do, sir."

THIRD QUESTION.

"Describe the process of germination in a seed."

"In a seed?"

"Yes, sir."

"The process of what?"

"Germination."

"Oh! The progress of the German nation! Well, since the battle of Koeniggratz and the war with France there——"

"That will do."

"What is meant by the precession of the equinoxes?"

"The equinoxes?"

"Yes."

"The procession of the equinoxes?"

"No! the precession of the equinoxes."

"Never heard of it. What does it relate to?"

"Cosmogony."

"What?"

"Well, astronomy."

"O! I see now, gentlemen, you must have made a mistake. I am not an applicant for an astronomical position. I only want to be a sugar inspector."

"That will do, sir. We are quite aware of that. Now pay attention and answer our questions."

FIFTH QUESTION.

"Explain the relation of the molecular theory to the nebular hypothesis."

"No, I thank you, I had rather not. Perhaps you had better put some of your civil-service questions to the President and some of his Cabinet. When they pass I will call around again."

"Sir, you may go."

And Mr. Flurewalker goes—yes, he goes back to machine politics.—N. Y. Telegram.

Lord Houghton's Peculiarities.

As a poet it is easy to underrate Lord Houghton, and it is equally easy to overrate him. With him it was all of life to live, if not all of death to die. To such heights of poetical inspiration are never opened. It may be doubted whether any other poet of his time, however, more uniquely expressed what and more of what he felt and wished to say. Persons of doubtful positions and things of a more or less disorderly character had a strange fascination for his muse as they had for himself. He felt as lively a curiosity to know a phenomenally bad man as a phenomenally good one, partly, perhaps, because according to conventional standards the latter are the rarer. Nothing human or inhuman lay beyond the range of his curiosity—a peculiarity which I once heard illustrated by the following story. Whether true or not, there is nothing improbable about it. A criminal was to be hung at nine o'clock, the event to be announced to the public by the firing of a gun. Some one at Houghton's breakfast table remarked that it was after nine and the gun had not been fired; the execution, therefore, must have been postponed. "Oh no," promptly rejoined his sister; "the man has surely been hung, or brother would have had him here at breakfast." Whether from a spirit of generous toleration, or charity, or love of fair play, or sympathy for the weaker party, or a curious taste for the paradoxical, or all these combined, his muse seemed to have been consecrated to the defense of people and conduct that were on the defensive. Though not ranking with the great poets of the world, Lord Houghton long before his death had secured for himself an enduring place among the poets of England.—Hon. John Bigelow, in Harper's Magazine for November.

Couldn't Account for It.

Two gentlemen of color, interested in a living in North Minneapolis, were recently overheard having the following conversation: "Sam, I hear dat dar's a good many spring chickens bein' tuk from de roosts in Highlan' Park. 'Sdat so?"

"Yes, niggah, dat am de sad fac.' An' Ise berry sorry that sitch er reputation is agittin out 'bout dat subub; I libs dar mysel'."

"Dat so? Is am de truf tion."

"Yes, Sam, it am the truff. I hab seen de proof wid dese berry oculer demonstrations mysel'."

"How's dat?"

"Well, yer see ole man, Ise got a smart string ob chickuns mysel' an' I reckons dey's a-in-creasin' right 'long all de time. 'Most ebery mawnin' I finds two or three mo'ah chickuns in my coop den de was de night befoah. How's dat? Why it makes dem chickuns, specially de spring uns, so scart to tinks dey's gwine to be stole dat dey just sneaks 'way in de night an' comes ober to my roost whar deys safe. Nobody'd tink ob lookin' dar fooh spring chickuns ter steal, an' when dey gets dar Ise bound ter pertec 'um. Dat's all how scaht dem chickuns git."—Minneapolis Mail.

A step toward abolishing the high hat nuisance at the theatre has just been taken by the management of a Vienna play house, which orders that all female patronizers must either wear low head gear or forego the pleasure of attendance at the performances.

Artemas Martin, the newly-appointed head of the computing bureau of the coast survey, has received honorary degrees from several leading colleges in this country and England in recognition of his achievements in mathematics, and is well versed in other departments of science and general literature. He also edits and publishes—setting the type with his own hands—a valuable mathematical periodical.

A Paris newspaper says of the Marquis de Leuville—who didn't marry Frank Leslie's widow—that he has arrived in Paris and is staying at the Hotel Continental. The Marquis is about to repeat his four-in-hand driving tour recently executed in England, the itinerary chosen being from Paris to Marseilles by the Bourbonnais. On his return the Marquis will give a lecture and reading at the Salle des Conferences, in the Boulevard des Capucines.

A new feature of the German public school system, which meets with great favor, is that of bathing. The Burgomaster of Gottingen says that when bathing was first introduced in the schools of that town only a few of the pupils availed themselves of the privilege, whereas now 600 out of 700 gladly take part in it several times a week. The children are bathed in sections of six to nine, and as they immediately return to the school-room and resume their lessons no risk of catching cold is ever incurred; while the refreshing influence of the bath shows itself in a greater energy and eagerness to study. The health of the children is greatly promoted, especially those from the homes of the poor.

BOOKS FOR THE MILLION

Complete Novels and Other Works, by Famous Authors, Almost Given Away!

The following books are published in neat pamphlet form, many of them handsomely illustrated, and all are printed from good type upon good paper. They treat of a great variety of subjects, and we think no one can examine the list without finding therein many that he or she would like to possess. In cloth-bound form these books would cost $1.00 each. Each book is complete in itself.

1. The Widow Bedott Papers. This is the book over which your grandmothers laughed till they cried, and it is just as funny to-day as it ever was.
2. Fancy Work for Home Adornment, an entirely new work upon this subject, containing easy and practical instructions for making fancy baskets, wall pockets, brackets, needle work, embroidery, etc., etc., profusely and elegantly illustrated.
3. Grimm's Fairy Stories for the Young. The finest collection of fairy stories ever published. The children will be delighted with them.
4. The Lady of the Lake. By Sir Walter Scott. "The Lady of the Lake" is a romance in verse, and of all the works of Scott none is more beautiful than this.
5. Manual of Etiquette for Ladies and Gentlemen, a guide to politeness and good breeding, giving the rules of modern etiquette for all occasions.
6. The Standard Letter Writer for Ladies and Gentlemen, a complete guide to correspondence, giving plain directions for the composition of letters of every kind, with innumerable forms and examples.
7. Winter Evening Recreations, a large collection of Acting Charades, Tableaux, Games, Puzzles, etc., for social gatherings, private theatricals, and evenings at home; illustrated.
8. Dialogues, Recitations and Readings, a large and choice collection for school exhibitions and public and private entertainments.
9. Parlor Magic and Chemical Experiments, a book which tells how to perform hundreds of amusing tricks in magic and instructive experiments with simple agents.
10. The Home Cook Book and Family Physician, containing hundreds of excellent cooking recipes and hints to housekeepers, also telling how to cure all common ailments by simple home remedies.
11. Manners and Customs in Far Away Lands, a very interesting and instructive book of travels, describing the peculiar life, habits, manners and customs of the people of foreign countries; illustrated.
12. Sixteen Complete Stories by Popular Authors, embracing love, humorous and detective stories, stories of society life, of adventure, of railway life, etc., all very interesting.
13. The Budget of Wit, Humor and Fun, a large collection of the funny stories, sketches, anecdotes, poems and jokes that have been written for some years; illustrated.
14. Useful Knowledge for the Million, a handy book of useful information for all, upon many and various subjects; illustrated.
15. Called Back. A Novel. By Hugh Conway, author of "Dark Days," etc.
16. At the World's Mercy. A Novel. By Florence Warden, author of "The House on the Marsh," etc.
17. Mildred Trevanion. A Novel. By "The Duchess," author of "Molly Bawn," etc.

SOME of the papers are discussing the question why it is that the men do not attend church as numerously or as regularly as the women do. If the question were to be flatly put to the average man, says the Chicago Journal, he would probably be forced to answer, as poor Topsy did: "'Cause I'se so wicked."

JULIUS CÆSAR, Augustus Cæsar and another Cæsar, of Cincinnati, partners in business, have brought a suit in court to recover a bill of one hundred dollars, which illustrates the degeneracy of these modern times when the descendants of the Cæsars, who used to put Rome in their pockets, bring suit for so small a sum.

"EVER since the blizzard left us," writes a Northern visitor from Florida, "we have had the most perfect summer weather—real shirt-sleeve weather. THE disappearance of a river is noted in California as one of the results of the recent great storm. The stream was known as the Clearwater, and it flowed out of San Gorgonio pass. It is explained that so much rock and earth were washed into the channel that the waters were driven out upon the Colorado desert to be lost in the sand.

THE Telegraph, printed at Macon, Ga., couples an item of news and the suggestion of a curious fact in natural history, as follows: Near Eatonton, while a negro boy was riding a horse very rapidly over a wet bridge, the horse slipped and fell, sustaining injuries that caused his death. The negro was thrown off, but struck on his head and was thus saved.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

MONDAY, Feb. 8.—In the Senate the silver question was further discussed. A resolution was agreed to directing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the propriety of making an amendment to the Revised Statutes requiring the issue of United States notes of the denomination of one dollar and two dollars. Petitions were presented for the opening up to settlement of the Oklahoma lands and the granting of lands in severalty to Indians, and that a constitutional amendment be submitted by Congress to the several States forbidding disfranchisement on account of sex. In a debate Mr. Sherman declared that Congress had the right to any and every paper on file. In the House bills were introduced: To provide for the payment of the surplus in the Treasury upon the bonded indebtedness and stop interest; to prevent monopoly in the operation of the patent laws of the United States; to regulate the transportation of live stock; to enable the people of Dakota, east of the Missouri river, to form a Constitution and State Government; making eight hours a day's work for all laborers, etc., employed by the United States Government.

TUESDAY, Feb. 9.—Bills were passed in the Senate to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections set apart for Indian reservations; to grant the right of way through the public lands for irrigation purposes; to extend the laws of the United States over the unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, and known as the "public lands strip," and for the erection of public buildings at eleven places. In the House bills were reported to reduce the fee on money orders for five dollars or less from eight to five cents; to provide for the payment into the Treasury of the receipts of the money order system; and to provide for the investigation of the discovery of preventing yellow fever by inoculation. The Silver Coinage bill was further discussed.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 10.—In the Senate the Eustis' resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the refusal of the Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans to receive shipments of silver and to issue silver certificates therefor was discussed. Resolutions of sorrow on the death of General Hancock were adopted. In the House the bill appropriating $[illegible] for the extension of the benefits of the signal service to farmers by means of signals displayed at telegraph stations was favorably reported. The death of General Hancock was announced, and proper resolutions were adopted.

THURSDAY, Feb. 11.—A bill was introduced in the Senate providing for the repeal of all treaties permitting the coming of Chinese to the United States and prohibiting their coming, except in the case of diplomatic and official personages. Petitions were presented against the passage of the International Copyright bill; for the opening of the Oklahoma lands to settlement, and for the adoption of a constitutional amendment to prevent disfranchisement on account of sex. The House bill for the payment of the "Fourth of July" claims and a bill regulating the promotion of West Point graduates were passed, and the Education bill was further considered. Adjourned to the 15th. In the House a bill was passed to enable National banks to increase their capital stock and to change their names or locations. Leave was asked to introduce a bill granting a pension of two thousand dollars per annum to the widow of General W. S. Hancock, but it was objected to. The Fitz John Porter bill was discussed.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

UNEMPLOYED mechanics and Socialists of London to the number of nearly ten thousand gathered on the 8th in Trafalgar square to listen to an address by a Socialist named Burns. Resolutions were adopted demanding public work to give bread to thousands of deserving men. The police were smothered in flour and dirt. On being driven from the Nelson monument, the rabble made its way to the club-houses, sacking saloons and clothing stores, and hundreds of people were maltreated. It was said that fifty thousand persons engaged in the rioting, and the wonder was that so little blood was shed.

THE new Secretary for Ireland, John Morley, said at Newcastle on the 8th that the Government would find a better way than coercion to pacify Ireland, the plans for which purpose were left with Mr. Gladstone.

AMONG poor families in New Brunswick the distress was on the 9th said to be on the increase. At Newport, Grand River, Novelle, Paspebiac and New Carlisle many families had not tasted bread for weeks, and were actually without a mouthful to eat in their houses. At least six thousand persons required relief from day to day.

GEN. HANCOCK DEAD.

Major General W. S. Hancock Dies Very Suddenly at His Residence, Governor's Island, N. Y.,

After a Week's Illness Caused by a Malignant Carbuncle on the Back of His Neck—His Last Moments Calm and Peaceful.

HIS LAST MOMENTS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—The whole country was shocked yesterday afternoon by the brief telegraph message from Adjutant General Whipple, on Governor's Island, announcing the death of General Winfield S. Hancock, Senior Major General United States army, and commander of the Military Division of the Atlantic. The sad intelligence was immediately conveyed to the remotest corners of the country, and as if by magic the flags appeared at half-mast on the various public buildings in the city. Within an hour the telegraph wire leading into the headquarters was burdened with messages of condolence and tender sympathy with the bereaved widow, whose grief is overwhelming, and of tributes to the General's private and public virtues as a citizen, as well as to his greatness as a commander.

The news of his death was all the more startling from the fact that few, even of his intimate friends, had any knowledge that his illness was considered to be serious. As late as Saturday last he was in his private office attending to his official duties. When he went to Washington, two weeks ago, a slight eruption on his neck near the base of the brain gave him uneasiness, and the inflammation increased so rapidly that on Friday, January 29, he had it lanced by Dr. O'Reilly, the attending surgeon in Washington. The eruption continued to discharge freely and the loss of blood was such as to make a very perceptible difference in his usual robust appearance.

A Florida Letter of Another Sort.

ST. ANDREW'S BAY, Fla., Feb. 15, 1886.

To the Editors of the Charlevoix Sentinel.

The SENTINEL visits us every week, and is welcomed as an old friend. Thinking that a short letter from St. Andrew's Bay might be of interest to its many readers, I will try and give a true statement concerning that much abused locality.

I read Mr. Stockman's letter, and wish to correct some of the statements therein. To be sure, the Railroad Company exaggerated it in their pamphlet, but it is not as bad as many of them would have you believe. I think Mr. Stockman must have obtained his information from the same source as the correspondent of the Florida Agriculturist, and the editor of that paper wrote me for a true statement of affairs here.

There was a certain class came here from the North who were too lazy to work, expecting the company to support them, and, of course, such ones are sadly disappointed. But when we found that it was not as represented, my husband made inquiries and found that he could get a homestead, so he lost no time in making an application, and I think we have the loveliest place near St. Andrew's Bay. It is situated on what they call a bayou here, but in Michigan it would be a lake, only the water is salt. We have about 25 acres of water, said to contain the finest oyster bar around here; so we can raise our own oysters and aligators.

We have been busy the past week making a garden and planting potatoes. When we arrived at the Bay it was very much crowded, and accommodations were poor; but since then many have built houses for themselves, and some have left, so it is more comfortable now.

There are a great many here from Michigan. I think the number is exceeded only by one State—Ohio—but we will hope that what Michigan lacks in quantity she makes up in quality.

We have had some cold weather, but not as cold as it was farther south. There is one fine orange grove on the Bay, and it is uninjured. We shall plant a grove and run the risk of its doing well. The climate is delightful, and it is very healthy.

I wish to make these statements for the benefit of some of our friends in Marion, who have prophesied that "it will be Glover's last move," and that he will never own another home. But we have a home here and another in Charlevoix, and still have money enough left to subscribe for the SENTINEL one more year at least.

Yours,
MRS. WM. GLOVER.

The residence of Mrs. S. K. Bagley occupied in part by the family of L. Wray, was burned Monday noon. Most of Mr. W's goods were saved. Mrs B being absent for the winter, her household effects were packed and stored away in the upper chamber and were totally consumed. The origin of the fire was due to defective pipe. About the same time of the day Mrs. P. Moble [illegible] called for help to put out a fire on the roof of their dwelling. Timely help and a spunky lass, who doffed her shoes, mounted the roof by climbing a hemlock board and vigorously fighting the fire. That is instead of yelping for the man in the moon, stand by your colors and avoid a destructive conflagration. Cause, pipe through the roof.

"For the Healing of the Nations."

A real Bethesda will soon be in operation in our midst for the healing of the sick by metaphysics, or mind cure, together with the compound vapor and medicated baths of the most approved schools. The operators, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Sweetland, have been through the mind cure schools of Boston and Chicago. The residence of Mr. Chas. Swallow has been purchased, and will be remodeled and enlarged for the accommodation of the invalid. Full particulars will be given in our next issue.

Circuit Court.

At the February term of the Circuit Court held at East Jordan last week, the following cases were disposed of:

The case of The People vs. Barry, et al. for murder; that of The People vs. Geo. Estelle, assault and battery; D. H. Houghtaling vs. R. E. Newville, replevin; H. A. Tiffany vs. A. C. Boyce and J. C. McFellin, assumpsit; Mary E. Beegeny vs G. R. & I. Railroad, trespass on the case; Thomas Halpin vs. Township of Hayes, certiorari; Lionetta J. Horton vs. Oliver Horton, divorce, were all continued.

In the case of the Springfield Engine and Thresher Co. vs. Wm. Mears, et. al, judgment was taken against defendant Howard for $143. Mears and Van Buren dismissed.

In the case of James Slater vs. H. B. Chapman, et. al., motion to dismiss, the plaintiff was allowed 20 days to deposit $100 with the clerk as security for costs.

M. M. Pierce vs. John Miller, motion for further relief; defendant compelled to deposit deed in escrow, and complainant given to first day of next Court to deposit amount of decree.

Superintendents of Poor vs. John E. Webb, poor person; action given compelling son to support his father.

Mary Blackbird vs. J. A. Bacot, replevin, both allowed to come into court.

Divorces granted in the cases of John Race vs Caroline Race, and James Inwood vs. Sarah Inwood.

H. Jace Holly vs. J. Jordan and A. R Upright, bill to correct error in deed; testimony taken, jury disagree; decision continued.

Motions were denied in the following cases: L. Cressman vs. David Brown, motion to dismiss; J. Swanson vs. Amelia Wilson, motion to dismiss.

Norwood Notes.

T. F. Nelson of the Enterprise was in town over Sunday.

Elmer Parsons of Pensylvania is visiting his cousin G. V. Nash.

The entertainment given by the Norwood Dramatic Club on Wednesday evening was fairly well attended. The Club are fully up to the average of amateur performers, and with a fair chance and suitable pieces would do credit to themselves and please their audience. But the selection this time was unfortunate. "A Breach of Promise" however, well played would hardly interest an audience of grown up people for an hour. It was intended for a comedy, but there is a wide difference between true humor and nonsense, between the comic and the silly. "Hans Van Smash," if well played would do very well for an after piece, but it is getting it on a little too thick to follow a silly comedy with a farce. We trust our friends of the Club in the future will be more fortunate in their selection of plays, for their own sake, as well as that of their audience.

Michigan Crop Report.

LANSING, Feb. 12.—The secretary of state has received crop returns for January from 903 correspondents, representing 683 townships. Six hundred and three returns are from 412 townships in the southern four tiers of counties. One hundred and twenty correspondents in southern counties and 32 in northern districts say that wheat has suffered during the month, and 452 in the southern counties and 256 in the northern indicate no injury. In the early part of the month the ground was bare, or nearly so, in the southern part of the state, but from the 17th of January to the 9th of February it was well covered with snow. The amount of wheat reported marketed in January is 510,000 bushels, which is less than one-half the amount reported marketed in December. Horses are reported at 99, cattle 98, sheep 97 and swine 97 per cent.

And Then The Band Played.

New York Tribune: "Dan," said the president, as the two sat together in the seclusion of the white house dining-room lingering over their evening pie, "do you think that I am electrifying the country with reform these days? Tell me true, Dan, how is it?"

"Mr. President," replied the frank and level-headed private secretary, "since you have asked me the question and we are well out of the reach of reporters, I may say that I have a strong impression, which is growing more robust every hour, that the brand of reform now emanating from the administration is rather more than electrifying the country."

"What do you mean, Dan, by more than electrifying the county?" inquired the president, while a puzzled look crept over his face.

"I mean," explained the sagacious and subtle Daniel, "that an attentive perusal of our leading party organs, to say nothing of the republican papers, renders it only too evident that you are pan electrifying the country with your present brand of reform."

Then the Marine band struck up "Dare to be a Daniel," and the executive session closed.

The Antrim County Murder.

The horrible murder of Peter Higgins was the all absorbing topic in Antrim county last week. The confession of Mrs. Higgins was the first. She stated that while her husband was at Central Lake that she and George decided upon their plan to get rid of him. They had previously planned to kill him, but no opportunity had presented itself. After reaching home Higgins put his team in the barn and went to the house. Upon entering the uncle and nephew commenced quarreling. The nephew grabbed him and commenced choking him. The man staggered violently and exclaimed, "For God's sake I are you trying to kill me?" Finding that choking did no good, George asked for a hammer which his aunt got for him. With this her husband was struck one blow which stunned him, and several more blows finished the awful work. The body was then taken to the barn and hidden, where it was buried where it was found. Dr. E. Woolsey, of Bellaire, made an examination of the corpse and found 11 ugly gashes on the head. Mrs. Higgins told the story of the murder with great coolness until she reached that point referring to her husband's piteous appeals for help. Then she grew pale and shuddered, but quickly collected herself, resumed the bloody story and finished without a break. After the confession had been drawn from Mrs. Higgins, the nephew was interviewed in his cell. He vehemently denied all knowlege of the affair, until informed that Mrs. Higgins had confessed. This information had a very startling effect. The fellow grew red and white by turns, shook as with ague, gasped for breath and then completely broke down. He corroborated the woman's story, and undertook to throw the responsibility upon the murdered man by saying: "Well, the old man had no business to try and drive me away." Higgins was jealous of the intimacy said to be existing between his wife and nephew, and had told George that he must leave. Mrs. Higgins objected, however, and the young man had remained.

Ironton.

Gospel Temperance meeting at the M. E. church on Friday evening to be addressed by Rev. VanAuken.

The Grammer Department of the school closed on Wednesday. It has been a successful term and Prof Howe has made many friends here.

"Nasby has the postoffis." "The faithful shall be rewarded." Our friend A. B. Noyes the only registered democrat in the town, and who has voted that ticket since '60, on his sixty-eighth birthday took possession of the postoffice of this place; no doubt he will make a faithful officer.

Prof Howe's lecture on Tuesday night last was well attended. It was an interesting and instructive discourse. The audience called Mr. Adams to the chair and at the close of the lecture he made some appropriate remarks, hinting that Mr. Howe should have a vote of thanks. Accordingly a resolution was offered to that effect by Mr. Frizzell and unanimously adopted. As a lecturer and a teacher, Prof. Howe has given good satisfaction.

Whoever says our Supervisor in January 1885 at the meeting of the county board for submitting the removal of the county seat to East Jordan or any other place is mistaken,—or lies.—The records show that he was solid for Charlevoix all through the fight.

Character of the Newspaper and of its Circulation.

The SENTINEL has received from one of the leading advertising agencies of the country—a concern which places advertising with the newspapers of the country amounting to millions of dollars annually—an interesting monologue treating of this important business adjunct, and its arguments upon one point is interesting and should be so profitable to the general advertiser that we give what it says: "Long ago advertisers discovered that the practice of posting handbills on fences and billboards was utterly valueless as an advertising scheme, and that an inch of space in a respected and respectable newspaper was worth yards of barn surface and miles of fence painting. The lessons learned then are teaching advertisers now the advantage of discrimination as between newspapers of character and the irresponsible class of publications which a good many people may read, but for which few entertain anything like respect. The same rule holds goods here as before: the characterless sheets correspond exactly to the obsolete hand-bill. They are of doubtful value as advertising mediums. The slanderers of personal character, the malicious libelers of business corporations, and the blackmailers in journalism generally are necessarily without public confidence, and the honorable advertiser often suffers by the appearance of his thoroughly honest and candid business announcement in their columns. It is in the clean and respectable newspaper, in which public confidence is always high, where advertising is valuable, and it often happens that no extent of circulation is able to offset lack of character. It is as idle to expect good and profitable results from an advertisement in a disreputable newspaper as to expect the same results from the recommendation of an individual with a reputation as a liar and a blackmailer.

Probate Notice of Sale.

State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. In the matter of the Estate of Avery Van Dusen, deceased. Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order granted to the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of said deceased, by the Hon. Judge of Probate for the County of Charlevoix, on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1886, there will be sold at public vendue, to the highest bidder, on the premises described below, in the Township of Norwood, in the County of Charlevoix, in said State, on Tuesday, the [illegible] day of May, A. D. 1886, at two o'clock in the afternoon of that day, (subject to all encumbrances by mortgage or otherwise existing at the time of the death of said deceased, or at the time of sale, and also subject to the right of dower and the homestead rights of the widow of said deceased therein) the following described real estate, to-wit: The southwest quarter of section eight [8] in Township Thirty-three [33] North, of Range eight [8] West containing one hundred and sixty [160] acres of land, according to United States survey.

ORVIS D. WOOD,
Administrator of said Estate.

Hayings from Hayes.

Miss Hannah Bell is making arrangements for an exhibition at the close of her term of school at Maple Grove, March 19.

The quarterly meeting services of the M. E. Church for Petoskey Circuit, will be held at Burgess Saturday and Sunday, March 13 and 14. Presiding Elder Stinchcomb is expected to be present.

We could give the Hayesite some pointers about the taxes, but in doing so we would tread on all the soft corns in the town.

There has been some more law found in Hayes that will soon be enforced. We think it is an act found in Ayers' Almanac for 1883, or St. Jacob's Oil calendar of same date. Probably both.

The school boards of the two school districts have displayed about as much intelligence as could be expected of them, when they attempted to stop the school funds of Districts No. 5 and 6 in the Treasurer's hands by notifying him over their signatures to withhold it. It will take a different process and smarter Alecks to stop the funds in No. 5 and 6 than the parties at the head of this matter. Laws from Ayer's Almanac, with moss-back amendments don't work in these districts.

Wm. McNally has purchased a $300 span of horses to replace the mules lately killed.

The Detroit Free Press still thinks the late war a failure and thus patriotically alludes to the loyal sons of the north many of whom are lying in southern battle fields because they sat out to conquer or die for a great principle:

It is a confession of weakness that the Republicans of Michigan can be allured to enthusiasm only by appealing to their stomachs. It is like an army that, setting out to conquer or die for a great principle, could be kept together only by storming the hen-roosts and the sheep pastures along its line of march.

During the year 805,708 passengers were transported, a decrease of 107,113 under the year previous, and the revenue from this source was $599,691.58, a decrease of $46,424.05. Freight to the amount of 767,966 tons was transported, a decrease of 52,683 tons, and the revenue amounted to $1,216,783.38, a decrease of $107,402.92.

Township Caucus.

A township caucus will be held at the Black school house in the Township of Marion, on Saturday, the 20th day of March, 1886, for the purpose of nominating candidates for township offices.

Ironton.

Mrs. A. Burdick is visiting friends at Petoskey. She will be absent three weeks.

The Gospel temperance meeting on Friday night was led by Rev C. J. Strang. Elder VanAuken was to have delivered a lecture, but was not present, Mr. Strang coming in his stead.

A dance and oyster supper at Robt. Bedwin's on Friday night was well attended and a bass time is reported.

The last scale on logs made here this season, will be made this week.

Nicholas Clark aged 75 years, died last Sunday morning. He was one of oldest residents of the county—having taken his homestead on which he died when there was but four or five settlers in the county. His death was caused by an obstruction in the throat.

Sleighing is about spoiled on east and west roads.

We are not well enough versed in scripture to comprehend the Enterprise's "melange" on the people of Ironton, and the W. H. bridge. We have been looking for the 25 innocents "roped in." They have sharp, intelligent countenances, and converse intelligently on that subject or any other, and would not impress a stranger with their innocence any more than would the eloquent scribes of the "Statesman" or "Enterprise."

East Jordan "sharps" are too scriptural (?) or modest to come to us and present their points in joint discussion or any other way. With all our innocence, we are not so incapacited that we cannot comprehend a subject when discussed intelligently, so we pray you dear Enterprise "come unto us" and show us your side of the question, and do not upbraid us for our innocence.

New Dress.

The SENTINEL goes to its readers this week clothed in a "new dress," from the well-known type founders, Marder, Luse & Co., of Chicago.

Annual Meeting.

The annual election of officers for the Charlevoix Improvement Association occurs at the Village Hall next Monday evening. A full attendance is desired.

The Charlevoix Minstrels.

This organization has been in rehearsal several weeks, and announce that they will give their first concert at Opera Hall next Tuesday evening. The boys have considerable minstrel talent, and may be expected to give a good entertainment.

Flouring Mill Announcement.

The Rifenburg Milling Company announce that hereafter they will not do exchange work with any one excepting farmers. They will, however, pay the highest market price for all kinds of grain delivered at the mill. All grades of their flour will be in the market next week.

Old Fashion Social and Supper.

The ladies are preparing for an old fashioned social at the residence of Dr. Carlstein on Wednesday evening March 17. A very interesting program is arranged, abounding in song and manners of "ye olden tyme." We regret that want of space prevents our publishing the programme entire.

Historical Society.

The Historical met last week at the home of Egbert Carpenter and was received by E. W. Miller, R. A. Emrey and ladies.

Pres. E. H. Green called the society to order and the program was introduced by a piano solo by Mrs. R. A. Emrey being a composition of E. A. Berdan, dedicated to Jessie Carpenter, after which Mrs. Chas. Grier read a selection, "The Vision of Myrzah." After intermission Miss Flora Nelson and Miss Minnie Lewis accompanied by Miss Celia Nicholls, rendered a beautiful soprano and alto duett. Prof Enos for 30 minutes held the attention of the audience by an interesting and highly instructive article on "Obliterated Continents." Mrs. R. W. Kane accompanied by Miss Alice Cochran closed the program with a beautiful vocal composition. Amusements followed which made the hours pass quickly until a late hour.

The Society meets next week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Kane. Hon. John Nicholls will read a paper which will treat of "What [illegible] monument building takes in history."

M. E. Church Notes.

In the event of the second quarterly meeting last Sabbath, the Charlevoix M. E. Church passed the middle of the Conference year. Presiding Elder Stinchcomb was present during the entire service.

The pastor, Rev. J. T. Iddings, is now on his third year. The church and congregation may well feel encouraged at the result so far. The report shows a net increase of fifteen in the membership for the quarter. A substantial growth for the year so far has marked the work.

The finances are in a favorable condition; the Presiding Elder's claim is met to date, and the church is encouraged to do its utmost in all departments of work.

Subject of sermon Sunday morning, "Queen Esther's Appointed Mission," Esther, 4: 14.

Sabbath school at the usual hour.

Young people's meeting at six p. m., to be led by Al. Washburn.

The W. C. T. U. will have charge of the evening service. Address by the pastor.

Sudden Death of Mrs. Parker.

Early Friday morning, Charlevoix people were painfully surprised to learn of the death of Mrs. Stillman Parker of heart disease, which had occurred at midnight. Mrs. Parker had joined in the Baptist prayer meeting the previous evening and was to all appearances in her usual health up to within a few moments of her death. Shortly after midnight she awakened her husband, asking to be raised in bed. Momentary relief followed, but in five minutes she sank back, dead.

The funeral was held at the M. E. church Sunday morning, Rev. A. M. Parmenter, preaching the sermon to a large congregation, and Rev. J. T. Iddings and Rev. C. F. VanAuken assisting in the obsequies. The text was: "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; Go ye out to meet Him." The remains are at rest in the Charlevoix cemetery.

Mrs. Parker who was 63 years of age, had been troubled with heart affections for some years. In her death, Charlevoix mourns a conscientious Christian lady; the church, a willing and efficient helper; and the poor, a steadfast and generous friend. All unite in sincerest sympathy with the bereaved husband, daughter and other relatives who, owing to the distance from their homes, were unable to be here.

Think of it! Southern Michigan has not been blessed with sleighing for four weeks.

Dr. Perry, the dentist, is settled down in his office at Wood's drug store, and is prepared to do all kinds of work in dentistry. The Dr. is also an adept in the art of piano tuning and organ repairing. All orders for this class of work will be promptly attended to.

DOES IT MEAN A RAILROAD?

A Preliminary Route Surveyed For a Railroad From Boyne Falls to Charlevoix.

Yesterday morning Mr. A. R. Upright received a telephone message from George F. Beardsley, at Boyne City, to notify the citizens of Charlevoix that he, with Engineer Beardslee, of the G. R. & I. Railroad Co., and County Surveyor Robinson, would like to meet a committee from here at Ironton for consultation regarding a route for a branch of the G. R. & I. from Boyne Falls to this place. LEARNING THE VERBS.

Signifying to Be, to Do, or to Suffer.

"To be"—Well I fol . . . of the track,
That gave me a chance of existence;
But I honestly own, looking back,
That it's prettiest viewed from a distance.
Just now it seems easy and bright,
But I haven't forgotten my scrambles
Over horrible rocks, or the night
That I spent in the midst of the brambles.
At times from the path I might stray,
And thus make the journeying
rougher,
But still I was learning the way,
"To Be, or to Do, or to Suffer!"

"To do" I have worked rather hard,
And my present position is cosey;
But I haven't done much as a bard,
And my prose—well of course it is prosy!
The schemes and the aims of my youth
Have long from of I time had a floorer,
And I doubt—shall I tell you the truth?—
If the world be a penny the poorer!
If you can not your vanity curb,
You must either, my friend, be a
. . . ffer,
Or you haven't yet learnt that a verb
Is "To Be, or to Do, or to Suffer!"

"To suffer?" I took my degrees
Long ago in that branch of our knowledge,
Where our hearts and our hopes are the
. . .,
And the universe sees as a college.
I have had, as it is, rather more
Than the usual share of affliction;
And that much is remaining in store
Is my very decided conviction.
But I find myself growing with years,
Insensibly tougher and tougher.
I can manage, I think, without tears,
"To Be, and to Do, and to Suffer!"

I have stated the facts of the case,
But Heaven forbid I should grumble;
And I need not complain of a place
That suits my capacities humble.
I have learnt how "to be"—well, a man;
How "to do"—well, a part of my duty;
And in "suffering" own that the plan
Of the world is all goodness and beauty!
Still at times from the path I may stray,
And thus make the journeying
tougher,
But at least, I am learning the way
"To Be, and to Do, and to Suffer."

PRINCE TONIC

HAMILTON, Mo., Nov. 7, '84.

W. C. Lewis Med. Co., Gentlemen:—I have been afflicted for years with Malignant Blood Poisoning, and had given up all hope of ever being any better, until a friend advised me to try Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, which I did with the most satisfactory results. I have entirely recovered and am enjoying perfect health. I consider your remedy a very valuable preparation for all blood diseases, and general disorders.

Very truly yours, . . .

BLOOD PURIFIER

PARIS, KY., May 29, '84

W. C. Lewis Medicine Co.—For several years I have been prostrated every spring with Malarial Fever, until life had become almost unbearable. This year I stole a march, and began early to take your preparation, Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, the result is, I have escaped entirely. I am sure too much can not be said in its favor, as a preventative for Malaria.

Yours very resp., . . .

Price $1.00. Send to us if your druggist does not keep it, and we will send ½ doz. by express prepaid for $5.00. Prepared only by W. C. Lewis Med. Co., . . . , Mich.

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, which will be . . . Dyspepsia, Female Prostration, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Sores, Eruptions, Scrofulous Sores, Melancholia, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier a purely vegetable tonic, the Best Known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does eradicates all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

MYSTERIOUS COURTING.

A Man Falls in Love With a Woman's Voice.

Having decided to finish the year in Italy, I looked about me for a dwelling, to be had upon reasonable terms. I found what I wanted in the outskirts of the ancient city of Lucca, one of the loveliest spots in the peninsula. The house was quite new, and in every way desirable, while the rent asked for it was absurdly low. I questioned the agent in regard to this circumstance. Having my money safe, he could afford to be truthful.

"There is nothing against the house itself," he said, "but the grounds have the reputation of being haunted. Strange sounds are said to be heard near that ledge of rock in the park yonder. We Italians are superstitious, signor," he added, with a bow, "but I presume to an American a ghost is no objection."

"So little," I replied, laughing, "that I am obliged to you for the opportunity of making the acquaintance of this one."

Such superstitions are common in Italy, and the agent's story made very little impression upon me. During a tour of inspection around the premises I came upon the rock in question. It consisted of two walls of granite, perhaps twenty feet in height, meeting at an oblique angle, covered over their greater extent with vines. . . .

[illegible]

"I dare not—but yet your voice sounds as if you would do me no harm. Yes, I will come."

Then there was utter silence, the mysterious speaker had gone. I returned home in a state of stupid wonder, questioning myself if I had not lost my senses and if the whole occurrence was not a delusion. I was faithful to my appointment with the voice on the following morning, however. I had waited but a few moments, when the soft trembling accents broke the silence, saying: "I am here."

"And I, too," I answered; "I am grateful to you for coming."

"I have not slept the whole night," said the voice. "I was so terrified. I am very much afraid that I am doing wrong to come."

"Are you still afraid of me?"

"Not exactly, but it is so strange."

"Will you tell me your name?"

"I don't know—Lenore. What is yours?"

"George," I answered, imitating her example and giving my first name only. "Shall we not be friends, Lenore?"

"Oh, yes," answered the voice with a silver peal of laughter. Evidently its owner was getting over her fears. "Don't be offended, George. It is so strange—two people who can not see each other, and perhaps never will, making friends."

"I will solve the mystery yet, Lenore," I answered, "and find out where you are. Would you be glad to see me in my proper person?"

"Yes," was the reply, "I should like to see you."

"And I would give a great deal to see you, Lenore. You must be very beautiful, if your face is like your voice."

"Oh, hush!" was the agitated answer. "It is not right to speak thus."

"Why not? Do you know, Lenore, that if this goes on I shall end by falling in love with you, though I never see you."

"You are very audacious," was the reply. "If you were really here before me I should punish you for it. As it is I am going now."

"But you will come again to-morrow, Lenore?"

"If you will promise to be more discreet, George—yes."

As may be imagined, I did not fail to keep my engagement with my invisible friend. For many consecutive days these strange meetings continued. As absurd as it may seem, the voice was beginning to make a powerful impression upon me. I felt in its soft tones the manifestation of a sweet, refined woman's soul. True, I had made no progress toward unravelling the mystery. Nevertheless I was confident that . . .

[illegible]

"You could not be more," she answered naively, "you are no less."

"Now that we meet as solid and material beings," I continued, "are you willing to ratify the contract we made when we were only voices, Lenore? Your father gives us permission."

It may be supposed that I received a satisfactory answer, when the good-natured Count found it discreet to turn away his eyes during my reception of it.

As to the strange circumstances which was the means of uniting us, a series of tests revealed a remarkable acoustic property in the rock by which persons standing in certain positions with reference to it were able to hear each other with ease more than a quarter of a mile apart. It is a very matter-of-fact solution of the mystery, but Lenore and I are none the less grateful for the good offices of the rock.—C. L. Hildreth, in N. Y. World.

A MARRIAGE CASE.

Interesting Scene Witnessed in a Dakota Justice-Shop.

Old Bill Ditmars was recently elected a justice of the peace in a Dakota town. He had formerly taught school and run a small post-office somewhere in Pennsylvania and had come West like so many other men with the intention of not accepting any thing less than the Governorship, but when he got here he found the ground pretty well covered with men possessed of a similar idea. The woods also appeared to be full, while, figuratively speaking, the houses were overflowing and their feet were sticking plentifully out of the windows; all of them had gone out with the expectation of getting some good office and "running things." So when he found how matters stood he just gave out around that he had once been circuit judge in Pennsylvania, and settled down to finding fault with every thing in the neighborhood.

The next day after he was elected justice a big, awkward young fellow came into the office and said:

"Mr. Ditmars—"

"Judge, ef you please, young man, Judge Ditmars."

"Well, judge, then. You marries folks, do you, judge?"

"I does."

"Yes, so I s'posed. I want you to do the job fir me, I and—"

"All right, young man. I'll tend to you. I'll put your case on the docket. I s'pose you can give security for the costs?"

"How's that?"

"I say I'll enter that case o' yourn on the docket."

"But we want to be married . . ."

HOME AND FARM.

—French Cake: Two cups sugar, half cup butter, one cup milk, three eggs, four cups flour, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonfuls cream of tartar, with or without spice.—Toledo Blade.

—Pigs suffer greatly with the cold, and should have dry, well-littered nests, always. Litter them with straw or swamp hay, enough so that they can cover themselves out of sight in it.—Western Rural.

—Manure is one of the things of which a farmer can never have too much. The more he uses the better his crops will be, and the broader becomes the foundation which he lays for permanent prosperity.—N. E. Farmer.

—Sausage to Keep: Grind fine, use whatever seasoning you like—we use salt, pepper, ginger, a little mustard and allspice. I find the meat much healthier than with sage. Put up in sacks about two inches in diameter. Immerse in boiling water one-half minute; meat will sear and sack become air-tight; hang up, let dry and smoke in Spring.—Western Rural.

—All a cow requires over twelve or fifteen pounds of hay should be made up in grain food. Twelve pounds of hay and eight pounds of middlings per day will winter a one thousand-pound cow much better than thirty pounds of hay per day. But the ground feed should be mixed with cut hay, moistened, so the ground feed will adhere to it, and must be eaten with the hay and raised and re-masticated. Fine feed fed alone is not raised and re-masticated, but goes on to the fourth stomach without further mastication.—Prairie Farmer.

—Do not allow the swine to make their beds on the manure heap. The heat which develops there by the process of fermentation is not wholesome for them, nor conducive to the making of good wholesome pork. For the sows which are with pigs this excessive heat is very injurious, and often the cause of loss of the whole litter of pigs. They may be allowed to root in the manure heap during the day, and even encouraged to do so by the scattering of a little grain among the manure, but they should have their bed of dry straw.—Toronto Globe.

—Mending Leather: A cement which is recommended for leather belting, but which is probably equally serviceable in covering worn-out places, etc., is given as follows: Take common glue and American isinglass, equal parts; place them in a boiler and add water just sufficient to cover the whole. Let it soak ten hours, then bring the whole to a boiling heat, and add pure tannin until the mixture becomes ropy, or appears . . .

A LEGAL STORY.

The Champion Judicial Yarn of the Current Year.

A St. Petersburg paper vouches for the truth of a legal story which quite comes up to any told of the kind yielded by our own courts of law. A man found himself . . . in the prisoner's dock on a third charge of theft. His advocate, a young man, made a long speech to the jury in defense, and towards the close spoke as follows: "Now, gentlemen of the jury, let us go into the depths of history, let us go back five thousand years—" "I must ask you to keep to the subject," interposed the judge. "Then we will go but three thousand years back," continued the lawyer, "and we see without doubt—" Another reminder from the bench. "Good, we will go back one thousand years; or, no—since it is forbidden to appeal to history, let us turn to geography. In the Sandwich Islands, gentlemen—" A third call to order. "Very well," was the advocate's response; "in the islands lying nearer to us, as Madeira, there exists a long-observed and very honorable custom—" "Mr. Advocate," interrupted the judge again, "I speak to you for the last time. If you talk again of things which have nothing to do with the case I shall refuse to hear you any longer." "I protest against an infringement of the rights of the defense," was the unabashed reply, "and I request my protest may be taken note of." Then, turning once more to the jury, he added: "Since, gentlemen, I may appeal to neither history nor geography, I will only remind you of the custom of the court of this district in case of a third theft. This court has the praiseworthy custom of acquitting the defendants in such cases, and, therefore, I do not see why you should not let my client go free." How the case ended it is not said, but it will be a pity if the prisoner did not get off.—Chicago Tribune.

—It is said of a particular dame that she cut the fur on the edges of her new sealskin sacque so that people would not mistake the genuine fur for plush.—Chicago Herald.

CONTAGIOUS!

I am a native of England, and while I was in that country I contracted a terrible blood poison, and for two years was . . . an out-door patient at Nottingham Hospital, England, but was not cured. I suffered the most agonizing pains in my bones, and was covered with sores all over my body and limbs. Finally I completely lost all hope in that country, and sailed for America, and was treated at Roosevelt in this city, as well as by a prominent physician in New York having no connection with the hospitals.

I saw the advertisement of Swift's Specific, and I determined to give it a trial. I took six bottles and I can say with great joy that they have cured me entirely. I am as sound and well as I ever was in my life.

Notes and Sketches from Washington.

WASHINGTON, D.C. MARCH 5, 1886.

EDITOR SENTINEL

Nearly three months of the present session of Congress has passed away, and scarcely anything of real importance has been accomplished save the passage of the Presidential Succession Bill. True, a good deal of skirmishing has been done, and in a preliminary sense, this, perhaps, is all necessary and right enough, but the American people are getting to be emphatically practical and want less theory and more solid business. This spending day after day in dicussing some obsolete question may give chance for the display of much oratorical force, but it don't develop the country, build homes, reward the industrious, or scatter many rays of sunshine. The average American has had enough of theory, and looks now for real practical results.

Take the silver question. Both the Senate and House have been discussing that on and off for the past eight weeks, when no one in either branch for a moment believes that there will be any legislation, and that the end of this Congress will find the question substantially the same as at the beginning.

Then there is the tariff question. Such an episode seems to be inevitable in every Congress. It commenced in the very first, and a tariff bill was the second that ever became a law. It is safe to predict that there will be no legislation upon the subject this Congress, from this practical stand-point, if none other, that nothing that the Democratic House originates touching the tariff, has much chance of meeting the endorsement of the Republican Senate, so that the agitation of the question will be a waste of time so far as legislation is concerned.

In a sly sort of way a good deal of comment and fun has been occasioned by the prolonged absence of Senator Jones, of Florida who has not put in an appearance this session, or even sent any word of excuse. Some of his friends have thought it would be well to publish an advertisement for the lost Senator, but within the last day or so news of him has been furnished by a gentleman who has recently seen him. Jones is in Detroit, and has been there since the first of June. Jones is in love—and got it real bad, too—with a charming widow, said to have $2,000,000 in her own name. Jones is a widower and has five or six children in his own name, and that is about all, except Senatorial position. Jones has thus far been unsuccessful in his suit with the widow, and is reported to have sworn that he would never leave Detroit until the widow succumbs. It is said that the Senator faithfully sends every day to his adored one a basket of flowers and a written avowal of his undying love. The notes and flowers are never acknowledged, but the patient Senator never permits this obdurate silence to discourage his passionate appeal.

The galleries of the House are pretty well filled with visitors this session of Congress. Each day they assemble there by the time the House meets and watch eagerly for something interesting to happen. A large percentage of the visitors are ladies.

During the past week the Fitz John Porter case came up in the House and was most hotly contested on both sides, assuming very nearly a party issue in the discussion and final vote. The discussion evoked a good deal of bitterness on the part of several who engaged in it, reminding one of ante bellum days, when such things would lead to blows or a challenge. The bill will undoubtedly pass the Senate and receive the President's signature and thus become a law. It will be remembered that a like bill passed both branches in the last Congress, but was vetoed by President Arthur.

The famous seventh regiment of New York proposes to make an excursion to this city on the 19th of April to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of its journey hither in 1861 to aid in suppressing the rebellion. The occasion of the visit suggests that we have already reached a time when the civil war has become invested with an historical aspect. The centennials, so to speak, have begun.

The House committee on Invalid Pensions have under consideration a bill extending the arrears of pensions act to 1889. It is estimated that the entire cost will be $220,000,000.

The political division of the present Congress stands thus: House—182 Democrats, 141 Republicans, 2 Nationals, total 325 members; Senate—42 Republicans, 34 Democrats, total, 76 members. This is known as the long session, commencing the first Monday in December, and probably will not adjourn before July. The short session commences the first Monday in December, and expires by Constitutional limitation on the 4th of March.

The most attractive speakers in the Senate, taking three from each side, are Ingalls, of Kansas; Logan, of Illinois; Manderson, of Nebraska; Voorhees, of Indiana; Vest, of Missouri, and Morgan, of Alabama. In the House—Curtin and Randall, of Pennsylvania; Bragg, of Wisconsin; Reed, of Maine; Burrows, of Michigan, and Hepburn, of Iowa. When it is understood that either of these gentlemen are to occupy the floor, no matter what the occasion, their admirers turn out in full force and the galleries are crowded.

The Treasury Department has paid out about $11,000,000 so far this month on account of pensions.

WASH.

The Cat Smiled Serenely.

Some weeks ago amateur photography was the rage among the young ladies of New York society. Nearly every one of them had an instrument, and some of them were very proficient in the art. But fashionable young ladies soon tire of any pastime, no matter how interesting it may be at first; but they have got hold of an amusement now which has something of the risk of Wall street in it, and which is occupying the attention of a large number of them. Instead of a photographic apparatus they have incubators, and are trying to see which one will hatch out the most chickens in a given time. They do not all of them have rooms built especially for this incubating process and are sometimes put to for a place to put up their apparatus. One young lady whom I knew had the incubator in her bedroom, and put a hundred eggs in it; the result—eight chickens. Of these she was as proud as any old hen. But what to do with them was something of a question. She couldn't keep them in her bedroom, so, as the weather grew milder, she brought them down-stairs and put them in her back yard one day and left them there for a minute while she went into the house for some bread-crumbs to feed them with. When she came back she saw a sleek old tabby-cat sitting on the fence with the fattest and most promising of her chicks in his wicked claws.

It was too late to do anything, for the chicken that had been hatched through so much tribulation was dead, and the brute of a cat was feasting off it. The young lady could find nothing in the yard to throw at it, so she flew into the house and brought out a handful of coal from the scuttle. These with her own fair hands she threw at the cat, but if you ever saw a young woman throw a stone you know that the cat was safe. She hit the fence two or three times, but the cat only looked down and licked his chops and smiled.—Boston Gazette.

A New Story About Senator Evarts.

A story illustrative of the ready wit of William M. Evarts, comes to Tid-Bits. It has never been published, and, being strictly true, will be of interest.

In the year 1850 Mr. B., a lawyer of prominence in New York city, had a country-seat at White Plains, Westchester county, N. Y.

About that time, Mr. Evarts having to go abroad, and being the possessor of a horse, suggested to his friend B. that he should take the animal and accept the use of him for a few months in return for his "keep," to which B. assented. The horse was taken to White Plains, placed in a livery stable, and used occasionally by B.

Now B. knew a great deal more about law than he did about a horse, and therefore did not recognize the fact that the livery stable keeper was, by economy of "feed," gradually reducing the flesh of the animal, until, on Mr. Evarts' return, in about five months, the poor brute's ribs were painfully apparent.

Upon seeing the horse, Mr. Evarts exclaimed: "Joe, what in the world have you been doing to my horse? He looks as if he had been work on a stone boat!" To which B. replied: "Why, William, he has been up here in C's stable, and we have used him very little, except occasionally to take a short drive about town; and once we went over to Tarrytown, and several times we drove to Rye."

With his peculiar smile, Mr. Evarts replied: "I don't mind, Joe, how often you drove him to Rye, but I do wish you had driven him a little oftener to Oats."—Tid-Bits.

Dr. Lighthall, who died of small-pox at San Antonio, Tex., recently, was the most famous and successful quack in the country. He was a handsome man of 40, with an income, it is said, of fully $100,000 a year from his practice and the sale of his medicines. He usually wore $100,000 worth of diamonds and a $5,000 watch. Frequently he would spend $500 on a crowd of men whom he had never seen before. During the last ten years he had visited every large town in the South and West.

The Preacher and the Landlord.

When Rev. Dr. Tappan was the agent of the American Home Mission society he once made a trip through the northeastern part of Maine on horseback. It was before the days of railroads. On arriving at Mattawamkeag, where he was pleasantly entertained, he was told he had better remain over night there, as the place which he intended to make his next station was rather rough and uncomfortable, and the landlord was a rude, blasphemous man, who might not use him well. But Dr. Tappan was anxious to carry out his itinerary as he had planned it, and journeyed on. He arrived at his destination at dusk. The landlord came out, greeted him cordially, took his horse and put him up, hastened in to help entertain his reverend guest, prepared a nice warm supper for him, and was as polite as a lightning-rod agent.

Just before Dr. Tappan retired the landlord and all his family, arranged in procession according to their ages, filed into the room with much decorum, and the doctor was asked to lead them in family worship, which he cheerfully did.

The next morning after the doctor had dressed, the host, his wife, his boys, and his girls, all neatly attired, came in again, and the same request was made and granted.

After a good breakfast the doctor's nag was brought to the door, saddled and bridled, and the good man prepared to go on his way. He asked for his bill.

"Not a cent," said the landlord, cheerily.

The doctor thought this reply was strange from a landlord possessed by such an ill reputation, and said: "Why! I must pay you for my entertainment."

"You don't owe me a cent," said the innkeeper. "The fact is that tin peddlers, butchers, drovers, fishmen, and all classes of people come here to stop with me, and I make it a point to take my pay in their own line whenever I can. I've done the same by you. You've paid. Good morning, sir!"

The old divine used to tell this anecdote himself with great relish.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

The Old World's watches are no longer what they used to be in the estimation of the American public. The absolutely accurate and unvarying work of machinery which has attained almost to perfection here has crowded out the foreign made watches, no two of which are alike. There are various reasons for this, one being that the American watches are better, and another that they are much easier and less expensive to repair.

Rugs in Place of Carpets.

Before another twenty years shall have passed away we venture to predict that there will scarcely be a room in the city which will be covered from end to end and side to side with thick, impenetrable carpet. Apart from all fashion and all theory, it will be recognized as a fact that health demands movable floor coverings, or, failing these, coverings which can be cleansed daily. The ancients understood this perfectly. Socrates waxed eloquent in describing what a house should be, how needful air and sunshine and cleanliness were for health, and imagination calls up the interiors of that time with their mosaic pavements and the absence of all that would have harbored dust, and in doing so disease. The luxurious native of the East, the inventor of carpets, never even in his most indolent moment conceived the possibility of saving himself the trouble of shaking his carpet by fixing it to the floor, and although we can not credit him with any exalted ideas of cleanliness in his domestic arrangements, we must at least concede that he showed a good deal of common sense in this respect.

Twenty-five years ago physicians began to enter a protest against the enervation of modern homes; thence they passed to detail, the more enlightened entered upon a sort of crusade against floor covering, and declared that infectious diseases were harbored in the woolen hangings and carpets of their well-to-do patients quite as surely as amid the squalor and filth of over-crowded alleys. People no longer sleep (at least sensible people do not) in four-post bedsteads, with woolen curtains drawn closely around them; they are even recognizing the desirability of leaving their windows unincumbered with voluminous folds of velvet and of rep, and going a stage further they are beginning to realize that floors and their coverings are important factors in the question of hygiene.

Rugs are certainly free from many of the most serious objections to carpets, even when they are fixed upon the floor, which in our estimation they never ought to be. It is possible to wash well all around them, to remove the dust from the corners of the room, and even under the edges of the rug itself. But such a condition of affairs is still far from satisfactory. There is always more or less dirt about a stationary carpet, in any room that is much lived in, and the best housemaids in the world can not rid an immovable rug of dust as readily on the floor as they could off it. Carpets ought, as a matter of health, to be taken up once a week, laid over a line and thoroughly beaten, but where is the household where this rule is enforced?

The growing conviction of the superiority of rugs to carpets is shown in the newest houses, in many of which the floors are expressly arranged with stained borders, a parquet flooring, which it is possible to leave entirely uncovered. What a boon this is to persons of small means! Nothing eats into a small sum of money for house-furnishing more disastrously than a carpet. It is useless to buy a cheap one; cheap carpets are never of any use, and the price of a good one is a formidable consideration. This is another argument in favor of rugs—cheap rugs wear a great deal better than cheap carpets, for the obvious reason that they are not pulled and strained in every direction, and are only subjected to limited wear and tear.—N. Y. Times.

The City of Henderson, in North Carolina, is now said to be the largest in the world. A printer's error is responsible for the fact. It was intended to extend the limits 1,000 yards in each direction from the depot, but the printer made the bill to read 1,000 miles, and the bill passed without the error being noticed. This is one of the cases in the calling of a shovel a spade does not make it one. The Legislature has no jurisdiction outside the limits of its own State.

A Pretty How-D'ye-Do.

A well-known and wealthy manufacturer, Dubot, of Paris, has had a young clerk in his employ for two years, with whose services and behavior he has been greatly pleased. In fact, so much had the young man endeared himself to his employer that he was taken into the family circle, and permitted to enjoy the society of his daughter, a blooming miss of seventeen summers. Some time last month M. Dubot sent for his trusted clerk, and said to him confidingly: "You are a handsome, clever, and industrious young man. My Minnie is but 17 years old, and you please her much. She has a dower left her by her deceased mother of 100,000 francs ($20,000); if you have a mind to marry her we will arrange the wedding before Lent."

The young clerk, known to his employer as Ernest Lamotte, turned pale at this kind proposition, and was silent. Upon recovering himself he inquired: "Have I satisfied you in the performance of my duties during the two years I have remained with you?"

"More than satisfied me," replied the manufacturer, enthusiastically.

"Well, whatever the consequence may be," he began, hesitatingly, "I must now intrust you with my secret. My name is not Ernest, but Ernestine. I have passed through a commercial course of instruction, fitting me for any position in which a man would receive 240 francs per month ($50.) In female apparel I could earn but 40 francs. This explains all."

M. Dubot, of course, was duly astonished. Taking his worthy clerk by the hand he reassuringly replied: "I hope to be able to console Minnie in her disappointment. Her husband, I see, you can not be; but what would you think of the proposition of becoming her step-mother?"

It was now the turn of Ernestine to show astonishment. Requesting a day for consideration, the friends under new relationships parted.

The opening by Queen Victoria of the eleventh Parliament of her reign is a circumstance a parallel to which cannot be found since the time of Henry VI.

The Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writes: "When Senator Berry of Arkansas came on to take his seat Col. Dave Caruth of St. Louis, who is an intimate personal friend of Mr. Berry, wrote to Senator Vest requesting him, as a personal favor, to 'take care' of the new Senator. Judge Rogers of the Arkansas delegation tells how the Missourian discharged the trust. When the new Senator appeared Mr. Vest approached him and said: 'Berry, Dave Caruth writes me to take care of you. All I've got to say to you is to bring on your family and keep them with you. If you don't, in six months you won't be worth a d—n.' That was the sum total of Mr. Vest's advice, but Judge Rogers says it was the very best that could be given."

I feel in all my veins a quickening glow,
Companioned thus by song.

Through interlacing boughs of pine and palm
I catch brief glimpses of a turquoise sky;
Below, as softly as an evening psalm,
The [illegible] ripples by.

I gain ere long the forest's heart,
And pause, where proud magnolias lift in state
Their wealth of blossoms, whose pale petals part
Sweetly luxuriate.

Here, in the early legendary days,
Besides these mighty, time-defying boles,
Gathered around their campfire's ruddy blaze
The swarthy Seminoles.

And through the trembling shadows round me creep,
My soothed fancy pictures, even now,
A stealthy shadow gliding slyly past,
With bow of stout ash bough.

Recalling memories of a perished time,
While thus I stray through changing glow and gloom,
I do not heed how trumpet creepers climb,
Or golden jasmines bloom.

But taking leave of present thoughts and things,
I voyage on years that swiftly backward flow,
And dwell with those who reigned as forest kings
Two centuries ago.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life-giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system, carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood, if pure, makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no other. Sold by

WILLING TO GO.

Many Celestials Already Returning to China in Obedience to the Imperial Recall—A Synopsis of the Document—The Empire Big Enough for All—The Chinese Consul at New York Thinks His Government Contemplates Retaliation.

St. Louis, Feb. 23.—The alleged Chinese proclamation mentioned in yesterday's dispatches bears the seal of the Governor of the Province of Quang Tung and is dated the 10th moon of last year. It further says his Imperial Majesty regrets exceedingly that such measures had to be taken to inconvenience his subjects, but he was told at a very unguarded moment that the barbarians could not be trusted with a compact. "The mistake shall not be made again. Our own Empire is large enough and rich enough in its own resources. Immense territories lie in waste in the middle provinces, and our people have lived for the past tens of thousands of years in prosperity and happiness at home, why not for the next tens of thousands of years, when we can successfully bar our doors against labor-saving machinery?" The proclamation makes an extra provision of ten dollars to be given to each poor old man who may apply for passage. According to the latest advices from San Francisco within the past thirty days all the Chinamen of the northern and middle provinces have availed themselves of the opportunity of free transportation and have returned to China. There are only the Cantonese and Hong Kong ites remaining.

New York, Feb. 23.—The report of the issuing of an imperial edict recalling the Chinese from this country has caused no surprise among the New York Chinamen, and the more intelligent of them believe that it is well founded. Ching Hoy, of this city, Chinese Consul in New York and a man of fine attainments, said last night:

I can not say that I am advised that an imperial proclamation has been issued compelling all Chinamen in this country to return home, as the report states, but I can tell you that the Consul General of San Francisco has sent out notices advising all Chinamen to leave. Whether the Government is back of this I can not say, but the suggestion of retaliation, I have no doubt, is one measure of this kind will be taken by our Government. If Chinamen are driven out and outraged how can they—that can people drive out all Americans from China? The good name of this country has been outraged by the recent events, and this question has become very serious. It seems to me that unless something is taken up by your Government there is no protection to the Chinaman, but American merchants and missionaries are well treated in China, and whenever ill-treated the Government takes prompt action, not only paying damages but redressing the wrong done. What I do not understand is why the best people of the country here remain silent. It certainly is not the intention of Congress that these people should be treated in this way and the others should be treated in this way. If nothing is done to stop such a thing the commerce between the two countries, amounting to eighty million dollars, will be destroyed. There have been so many troubles that the Chinamen prefer to go home from all parts of this country.

EDUCATION IN THE WEST.

Extracts from the Report of the Commissioner of Education Giving Statistics of the Progress of the Schools in Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa.

Washington, Feb. 23.—The report of the Commissioner of Education for 1883 and 1884 has just appeared. It contains the following summaries of Western school statistics: Illinois, with over 1,000,000 youths of legal school age (6 to 21), reported in 1883-84 an enrollment of 728,881 in the public schools and 476,623 average daily attendance, or about 65 per cent. of the school population enrolled and about 46 per cent. in average attendance. There were also 75,831 attending private or church schools, which, added to the number in public schools, would give 75 per cent. of school population under instruction during some portion of the year. Nearly 12,000 public school children were taught, the average term for the State being 151 days, and $9,168,186 was expended in the work.

Michigan, with about 557,000 youths within the legal school age (5 to 20), reported that over 400,000, or 70 per cent., were enrolled in public schools, besides 27,000 in private schools. Public schools were taught for a term of 152 days at a cost of over $1,000,000 in school-houses and of over $1,000,000 in school-houses, which, with other school property, were worth nearly $11,000,000. The reports show an increase of more than 12,000 in the number of pupils attending public schools, and of about 3,000 in the average attendance of private schools, or an increase of the average public school term throughout the State, of about $309,000 in the valuation of public school property, and $376,462 in the amount expended on public schools. There was also a slight advance in the pay of teachers, the average monthly salary of men being $1.92 more, and that of women $1.10.

Wisconsin statistics show that of 528,750 youths of legal age (4 to 20) in 1883-84 nearly 317,000, or about 60 per cent., were enrolled in the public schools, an increase for the year of over 7,000 in the enrollment and 18,652 in school population. The reported attendance in private schools (15,615) decreased considerably during the year, but these statistics are incomplete, many large cities failing to report on this point. About 83 per cent. of all children between 7 and 15 years of age were in the public schools, an increase for the year of 3,166 and for two years of 14,021.

Iowa reported over 621,000 of school age (5 to 21) in 1883-84, with about 469,000 enrolled in the public schools and 300,000 in average daily attendance. The schools taught an average of 149 days in 13,624 buildings, valued with other school property at over $10,400,000, and about $5,886,000 was expended during the year for public school purposes. These figures show an advance of 8 per cent. in the proportion of school population enrolled, and 5.7 per cent. in the proportion of school population in average attendance.

Many Persons Hurt.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 23.—The accommodation train on the Buffalo, New York & Philadelphia road jumped the track near Scottsville yesterday morning. The passenger coach and baggage car broke from the freight cars ahead, rolled down the bank into a creek and took fire. Of twenty-three passengers in the burning coach sixteen were more or less injured, and several of them were seriously. The baggage car turned to death. The baggage-master will probably die. More than twenty were rolled over and over upon one another in the descent of the train.

Fatal Explosion of Powder.

Winchester, Ky., Feb. 23.—As a clerk was in the act of weighing some powder in the store of Mary Wills yesterday a man standing near the counter struck a match to light a cigar. This ignited the powder, which exploded with terrible violence. The house was badly wrecked and Bird White, Thomas Martin, James Newkirk, James Hopper, William McMurray, John Judy, James Carrick and Buford Smith were seriously injured. Hopper and Murray are dying. The man who struck the match, Mary Wills and two others escaped unhurt.

Fortune's Changes.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 23.—Four years ago S. S. Willmot arrived in New York from England with $25,000 in his pocket. He went to Montana and bought a sheep ranch. In one year he dropped his money and lost his ranch. He worked awhile herding cattle and about six months ago took a position as cook on the Northern Pacific dining cars. Sunday he was notified that his father had died in Northumberland County, Eng., and had willed him $75,000 and one-third interest in a large wine and liquor business, giving him an income of $30,000 per annum.

DEATH'S GAVEL FALLS.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 26.—The reunion of pioneer legislators of Iowa was continued yesterday. John F. Duncombe presided at the morning session, and made a speech in accepting the honor. In the afternoon the Senate and House adjourned and joined the reunion at the opera-house. Ex-Governor Lowe, H. Hear was the first speaker. His address was one of the ablest of the reunion and was listened to with unusual attention. Other speakers were C. P. Clarkson, Senator Alfred Hibbard, Senator Boardman, who organized the movement for the reunion, Judge T. S. Wilson, Senator Scott and Representative Weaver, of the present House.

Judge James L. Mitchell, of Nebraska, followed in a speech, during which he said that he was the youngest member of the Ninth, that Iowa was a magnificent State, evolved by that creative hand and by the American character, and, after paying a loving tribute to Iowa soldiers, he suddenly fell forward to the floor, and Senators Caldwell and Underwood, both physicians, hurried to his side to find that he was dying of apoplexy. An adjournment was effected a few minutes later, and the audience quietly withdrew. A mortuary assemblage was held last night, at which suitable resolutions were passed and a committee appointed to escort the remains home. Judge Mitchell, deceased, was judge of the second district of Nebraska, was fifty years old, and leaves a widow and three daughters.

GUATEMALA.

Mrs. Barrios, Widow of the Late President, Charged with Fomenting Disorder—Soto's Alleged Ambition.

New York, Feb. 26.—A private letter has been received from Director-General Pratt of the Guatemalan service. He says that arrests of political offenders are made daily; that it is rumored that Mrs. Barrios, widow of the late President of the Republic, and now a resident of New York City, has given $30,000 to assist in fomenting disorder; that two vessels under the Costa Rican flag, with men and arms, have been off the coast of Honduras, and that Marco A. Soto, late President of Honduras, is aiming at the Presidency of Guatemala, Honduras and Salvador.

Mrs. Barrios and Mr. Soto were interviewed in regard to these charges. They live in adjoining houses in great elegance on Madison avenue, but are not on speaking terms. Mrs. Barrios is said to own large property in Guatemala, valued at $14,000,000. She denied that she had sent any money to her native country. Ex-President Soto denied that plans were on foot to make him the President of the three republics. He described President Bogran, who succeeded him in Honduras, as a blood-thirsty tyrant, and said that he (Soto) had secured the comity of the late President Barrios because he refused to play the role now undertaken by Bogran.

SANITARY.

Report on the Prevention of the Introduction of Cholera and Other Contagious Diseases.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 26.—A thoroughly comprehensive treatment of coast defense against Asiatic cholera is given in the reply made yesterday by Dr. Rauch, secretary of the Board of Health, of his inspection of the Atlantic and Gulf quarantines between the St. Lawrence river and the Gulf of Mexico. This subject he considers of paramount importance to the people of Illinois, because fully half of the immigrants to this country pass through or come into this State. He thinks the present season of quiet should be taken advantage of to make precautions certain against the introduction of contagious diseases from foreign shores, which he thinks can be done if proper plans are undertaken and thoroughly executed. Imported contagions have cost the country in loss of life almost as much during the past twenty years as the civil war, and the cost of preventing their recurrence would be trifling, as compared with the millions spent and contemplated for protection against the contingent invasion of armed foreign foes. The service, he says, at New York, the most important port in the country, is hampered by a vicious financial system, which robs it of much of its efficiency.

An International Labor Movement.

Paris, Feb. 26.—The Socialist members of the Chamber of Deputies joined in sending a telegram to the British workmen to the House of Commons "proposing a joint international movement in the interest of laboring men." The main objects of the proposed movement are to be the securing of a reduction in the hours of labor, improvement in the sanitary condition of workshops, proper limits to the work obtained of women and minors, and an absolute prohibition against hiring children of either sex under fourteen years of age to work at all in shops or factories. The telegram suggests that the British workmen join those of France in inviting the workmen of America and Europe to send delegates to a congress to be held next September in some place to be hereafter designated, for the purpose of discussing means to "emancipate the workmen of all countries."

Destitute in His Old Age.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 26.—Donald McLellan, aged one hundred and twenty, is living in destitute circumstances in this city. Fifty years ago, being then an old man, he came to this country from Scotland, where his grandfather had been a compatriot of the famous Rob Roy. What support he gets is from a son-in-law, William Allen, aged seventy-six. Allen is a veteran of the Seminole war and the war of the rebellion, but having stolen from the records for his service he and this family can not draw a pension. McLellan has never been able to learn English, but converses only in Gaelic.

A Heart-Rending Accident—Twin Sisters Caught by a Revolving Shaft.

Reading, Pa., Feb. 26.—A man named Lillie owns a mill at Shamokin Hill, Pa. His twin daughters, Katie and Susie, aged six years, strayed to the machinery room yesterday where a shaft was revolving. The little ones ventured too near the machinery and their clothing caught in the shaft. After having been thrown around for an hour they were found by an older sister. When the machinery was stopped their bodies were found to be terribly mangled. Katie was dead and Susie has but little chance of recovery.

The National Welsh Convention in Session at Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 26.—The National Welsh convention was in session again yesterday, and organized the "Welsh Land Association," with the view of establishing Welsh colonies in various parts of the country. One colony was formed and will be located in Webster County, W. Va., where ten thousand acres of land are to be had. It was decided to sell shares of $25 each, no member to own more than $1,000 worth of stock in the association. During Wednesday and Thursday over six hundred shares of stock were taken.

E. B. Moore, a lumberman and land dealer of Detroit, died the other morning at Ione Oak, Ark., the result of an accidental rifle-wound two days before.

Reports to the State Board of Health by sixty-eight observers in different parts of the State, for the week ended on the 15th, indicated that inflammation of the bowels and scarlet fever increased, and erysipelas, remittent fever and tonsillitis decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at twenty-three places, scarlet fever at thirteen, typhoid fever at five and measles at five places.

Under the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury the expense of collecting the revenue in Michigan is thus apportioned: Detroit, $57,040; Port Huron, $41,600; Grand Haven, $5,500; Marquette, $6,000—being a heavy reduction all around.

There are 47,112 illiterates in Michigan who confess it; hence if the Blair Educational bill becomes a law and should be applied, the State will receive $[illegible] of the $15,000,000 to be apportioned among the States.

The bridge to be built from Detroit to Belle Isle will be about three-quarters of a mile long, and will cost about $300,000.

R. A. McIvor, of Detroit, died at a Little Rock, Ark., hotel a few days ago a few minutes after having taken by mistake an overdose of bromide of chloral.

The prosecuting attorneys of the State met at Lansing a few days ago and formed an association for the purpose of securing a revision of the criminal laws. The officers elected were: Frank Knappen, of Kalamazoo County, President; J. E. Simonson, of Bay County, vice-president; Jason E. Nichols, of Ingham County, secretary; G. W. McBride, of Ottawa County, treasurer. Another meeting would be held before the next meeting of the Legislature to prepare the desired revisions.

The widow of Caleb Aldrich, who was a soldier of the Revolution, is still living in Ingham County. She was his second wife and thirty-five years his junior.

The venerable Alphens Felch, now over eighty years of age, is spending the winter in Florida. He was Governor of Michigan in 1846-47, and United States Senator from 1847 to 1853.

The value of the product of the Detroit tobacco manufactories for the year 1885 was $7,111,500.

At East Tawas a few days ago Ernestina Schoultz, sister of the murdered Herman Schoultz, was brought before Judge of Probate Robert White for a hearing as to her mental condition. The physicians declared her insane, and an order was made that she be taken to the asylum at Traverse City.

During the session of the circuit court at Detroit the other day two prominent local lawyers engaged in a fist fight.

I. F. Harter, of the Quartermaster's Department at Lansing, received over thirty letters one day recently from State bounty claimants. The department has been under steady fire for some time. Mr. Harter answering fully one hundred and seventy-five letters on the subject. Of the deluge of claims received, it is stated that not one can be allowed, the writers not being entitled to bounties, or else having already received them. The State did not offer bounties until 1863, but there are many claimants who enlisted as early as 1861.

There are three or four lumber camps in the State where prayer-meetings and religious services are held almost nightly by the employes of the camp.

Michigan railroads will issue tickets this year from all stations to Detroit and return at one and one-third fare, to those who wish to witness the league championship games of ball, to be played in that city.

Statistics prepared in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction show that the total number of school children in the State is 595,087; the attendance in 1885, 411,951; the increase over last year, 18,624; increase in enrollment, 6,988; total number of teachers, 15,898; total wages paid teachers, $2,785,280.16; number of school-houses, 7,164; increase of school-houses, 111; total seating capacity, 512,659; total value of school property, $11,267,540, an increase of $[illegible].

The resignation of Hon. Levi L. Wilson, judge of the twenty-fourth judicial circuit, was received at the Executive office a few days ago. It would take effect March 3.

Andrew Lucas, of Detroit, claims to be one hundred and twenty-seven years old and still hale and hearty. He was born a slave, and remembers the Revolution. He is the father of twenty-six children.

A farmer named Fanning, living at Belleville, Wayne County, accidentally shot a bullet into his brain the other night. He permitted a physician to probe for the missile, had his wound taken to bed, and eat, drank and was cheerful.

John Stearns, an old and wealthy resident of Coldwater, died recently, aged seventy years.

A fire in the drying kilns of the Wilson hoop factory at West Bay City the other evening destroyed or injured eighty-five thousand hoops. Loss about $750 or $800, with full insurance.

The Battle Creek Call says that the family from Coldwater who rented and moved into the house where the recent White tragedy occurred now wishes to vacate the building, owing to mysterious noises heard about noon every day.

A number of Port Huron ladies have recently been victimized by buying a certain brand of soap, with the expectation of sharing in a cash distribution of one hundred thousand dollars. The instructions on each bar were to forward the wrapper to the manufacturer, with stamps for return postage, and they would share in the annual drawing. In each case the wrapper was returned to them as the prize drawn.

Mail now arrives and departs to and from Turnerville, the new post-office in Arenac County. It goes from Standish via Omer, the county seat.

Four saloon-keepers recently parted with twenty-five dollars each, the fine imposed by the Battle Creek magistrate who wants bar-rooms closed on time.

About fifty new members joined the State Dairymen's Association at its recent session in Kalamazoo. G. H. Horton, of Fruitridge, was elected president and E. A. Stowe, of Grand Rapids, secretary and treasurer.

The Pillsbury standing pine interest in Minnesota has been sold to Michigan capitalists, the price paid being $1,500,000.

Alexander Lawson, who is charged with the attempt to kill the chief-of-police of Muskegon, is held without bail, and is to be tried early in May.

The proposed ship canal across Michigan would be about one hundred and seventy-eight miles long and would shorten the distance from Chicago to Lake Erie ports five hundred and fifty miles. A steam vessel would save sixty days in a season and navigation would be prolonged thirty days. Sailing vessels would be benefited still more than steam, and the cost of freight would be much reduced.

Miss Rattie A. Jordan, of Coldwater, is a student at Yale law school, and expects the degree of LL. B.

A HORSE TRADE.

How the Professionals of Texas Manage Questionable Transactions.

G. W. Bulger is one of the best horse traders in Western Texas. Not long since he offered for sale a large bay horse to Colonel Witherspoon, who thinks he knows all that is to be known about a horse. Colonel Witherspoon bought the horse at a very low price. Gilhooly, who happened to be present when the trade was made, took the purchaser aside and said to him:

"Colonel Witherspoon, how did you come to let yourself be taken in on that horse? Don't you see that he is lame in his left hind leg?"

Colonel Witherspoon winked and whispered to Gilhooly.

"I am not fooled a blame bit in that horse. I know he is lame, but his lameness comes from a nail in his hoof. I'll just have that nail pulled out, and then the horse will not limp and will be worth twice what I gave for him. It's a big bargain and don't you give it away."

Gilhooly whistled and remarked: "Well, you are a shrewd one after all."

"It will be a cold day when I get left on a horse trade," replied Witherspoon, as he led off his limping purchase.

Next day Gilhooly met G. W. Bulger.

"Bulger, you are not as smart at a horse trade as I thought you were. You let Witherspoon have that horse for half what he is worth."

"Are you sure of that?"

"Certainly I am. That lameness comes from a nail in his hoof. Witherspoon will pull the nail out, cure up the sore place, and the horse will be worth twice what he paid you."

"I don't think so," replied Bulger. "I know all about that nail in the horse's hoof. I drove it in myself."

"You did?"

"Yes. You see I wanted people to believe that it was the nail that made him limp, but he was lame before. He will keep on being lame after that nail is out. He always will be lame. Do you see now?"

"Well, yes, I think I do. I'm glad you told me. When I want to buy a horse I know who not to buy from."—Texas Siftings.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

Contrast Between Them in Respect to Land Cultivation.

The case of Flanders is always cited as an illustration of the benefits of peasant proprietorship, and there, it is stated, the small farms own more cattle, yield more produce, and are more carefully cultivated than the large farms. "I have seen in Belgium," says Mr. Arnold, "women scratching with their fingers fair crops of potatoes from nearly white sand—a miracle of agricultural industry, of thrift and perseverance, such as belongs only to peasant proprietorship.

In France, again, it is said that agricultural land fetches a higher price than in England, and that the largest clear produce and the best cultivation are, on the whole, that of the peasant proprietors. M. Laveleye asserts positively that the richest and most productive provinces in France are those in which the small land owners are in a majority, and Mr. Cliffe Leslie, in the chapter he contributes to the volume on the "Systems of Land Tenure of Various Countries," published by the Cobden Club, has much to say in the same direction. The reply to all this, fairly enough, is, that France is not England, and that in France there are special circumstances of soil and climate—associated with vine growing, fruit culture and the like—which render the country appropriate to "la petite culture." A peasant proprietor in France can, on ten acres of land, make ends meet and put a little into the family "stocking" every year, but it does not follow that a peasant proprietor of ten acres in England could do the same. It is all very well to urge market gardening; but the demand for garden produce is not illimitable, and is already abundantly supplied, partly at home, but mostly from foreign countries more bountifully qualified by nature for the purpose.—All the Year Round.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Seventh Sermon of the Series On "The Marriage Ring."

The Wife's Duty to Her Husband—To Remember His Struggle in the Daily Battle of Life, and Keep Herself Attractive—Ante-Natal Murderers.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage took for the subject of the seventh discourse of his series on "The Marriage Ring" "The Duties of Wives to Husbands." His text was:

The name of his wife, Abigail; and she was a woman of good understanding, and of a beautiful countenance.—I. Samuel, xxv., 3.

The ground in Carmel is white, not with fallen snow, but the fleece from the backs of three thousand sheep, for they are being sheared. And I hear the grinding of the iron blades together, and the bleating of the flocks, held between the knees of the shearers while the clipping goes on, and the rustic laughter of the workmen. Nabal and his wife Abigail preside over this homestead. David, the warrior, sends a delegation to apply for aid at this prosperous time of sheep-shearing, and Nabal peremptorily declines his request. Revenge is the cry. Yonder over the rocks come David and four hundred angry men with one stroke to demolish Nabal and his sheepfolds and vineyards. The regiment march in double-quick, and the stones of the mountain loosen and roll down as the soldiers strike them with their swift feet, and the cry of the commander is, "Forward! Forward!"

Abigail, to save her husband and his property, hastens to the foot of the hill. She is armed, not with sword or spear, but with her own beauty and self-sacrifice, and when David sees her kneeling at the foot of the crag he cries: "Hold! Hold!" Abigail is the conqueress; the woman in the right mightier than four hundred men in the wrong! A hurricane stopped at the sight of a water-lily! A dew-drop dashed back Niagara! By her prowess and tact she has saved her husband and saved her home, and put before all ages an illustrious specimen of what a wife can do if she be godly and prudent, and self-sacrificing and vigilant, and devoted to the interests of her husband, and attractive.

As, Sabbath before last, I took the responsibility of telling husbands how they ought to treat their wives—and, though I noticed that some of them squirmed in their pews, they endured it well—I now take the responsibility of telling how wives ought to treat their husbands. I hope your domestic alliance was so happily formed that while married life may have revealed in him some frailties that you did not suspect, it has also displayed excellences that more than overbalanced them. I suppose that if I could look into the heart of a hundred wives here present and ask them where is the kindest and best man they know of, and they dared speak out, ninety-nine out of a hundred of them would say, "At the other end of this pew." Though sometimes you may have snapped each other up a little quick, I think the most of you are as well paired as a couple of whom I have read. The wife said to her husband: "I have made up my mind to be submissive notwithstanding all the misfortunes that have come upon us." They had lost their children, he had lost his health, and hence, the income of his profession, and the wife had temporarily lost her eyesight. "Yes," said the husband, "we ought to be submissive. Let me see what we have to submit to. First, we have a home; we can submit to that. Then we have food and raiment; we can submit to that. Then we have a great many friends; we can submit to that. We have a Heavenly Father to provide for us—" "Stop! Stop!" said the wife, "I will talk no more about submission."

I hope, my sister, you have married a man as Christian and as well-balanced as that. But even if you were worsted in the conjugal bargain, you can not be worse off than this Abigail in my text. Her husband was coarse and ungrateful, an inebriate, for on the very evening after her heroic achievement at the foot of the hill, where she captured a whole regiment with her genial and strategic behavior, she returned home and found her husband so drunk that she could not tell him the story, that had to postpone it until the next day. So, my sister, I do not want you to keep saying within yourself as I proceed: "That is the way to treat a perfect husband;" for you are to remember that no wife was ever worse swindled than this Abigail of my text. At the other end of her table sat a mean, selfish, snarling, contemptible sot, and if she could do so well for a dastard, how ought you to do with that princely and splendid man with whom you are to walk the path of life?

I counsel the wife to remember in what a severe and terrific battle of life her husband is engaged. Whether in professional or commercial or artistic or mechanical life, your husband from morning to night is in a Solferino if not a Sedan. It is a wonder that your husband has any nerves or patience or suavity left. To get a living in this next to the last decade of the nineteenth century is a struggle. If he come home and sit down preoccupied, you ought to excuse him. If he do not feel like going out that night for a walk or entertainment, remember he has been out all day. You say he ought to leave at his place of business his annoyance and come home cheery. But if a man has been betrayed by a business partner, or a customer has jockeyed him out of a large bill of goods, or a protested note has been flung on his desk, or somebody has called him a liar, and everything has gone wrong from morning to night, he must have great genius and forgetfulness if he do not bring some of the perplexity home with him. When you tell me he ought to leave it all at the store or bank or shop, you might as well tell a storm on the Atlantic to stay out there and not touch the coast or ripple the harbor. Remember, he is not over-working so much for himself as he is over-working for you and the children. It is the effect of his success or defeat on the homestead that causes him the agitation. The most of men after forty-five years of age live not for themselves, but for their families. They begin to ask themselves anxiously the question: "How if I should give out? what would become of the folks at home? Would my wife have to go out into the world to earn bread for herself and our little ones? My eyesight troubles me; how if my eyes should fail? My head gets dizzy; how if I should drop under apoplexy?" The high pressure of business life and mechanical life and agricultural life is home pressure.

Some time ago a large London firm decided that if any of their clerks married on a salary less than seven hundred and fifty dollars a year, he should be discharged, the supposition being that the temptation might be too great for misappropriation. The large majority of families in America live by utmost dint of economy, and to be honest and yet maintain one's family expenses is the appalling question that turns the life of tens of thousands of men into martyrdom. Let the wife of the overborne and exhausted husband remember this, and do not nag him because he is tired, and say you might as well have no husband, when the fact is he is dying by inches that the home may be kept up. I charge also the wife to keep herself as attractive after marriage as she was before marriage. The reason that so often a man ceases to love his wife is because the wife ceases to be lovable. In many cases what elaboration of toilet before marriage and what recklessness of appearance after. The most disgusting thing on earth is a slatternly woman. I mean a woman who never combs her hair until she goes out or looks like a fright until somebody calls. That a man married to one of these creatures stays at home as little as possible is no wonder. It is a wonder that such a man does not go on a whaling voyage of three years and in a leaky ship. Costly wardrobe is not required; but, O woman, if you are not willing, by all that ingenuity of refinement can effect, to make yourself attractive to your husband, you ought not to complain if he seek in other society those pleasant surroundings which you deny him.

Again, I charge you, never talk to others about the frailties of your husband. Some people have a way, in banter, of elaborately describing to others the shortcomings or unhappy eccentricities of a husband or wife. Ah, the world will find out soon enough all the defects of your companion. No need of your advertising them. Better imitate those women who, having made mistakes in alliance, always have a veil to hide imperfections and alleviations of conduct to mention. We must admit that there are rare cases where a wife can not live longer with her husband, and his cruelties and outrages are the precursor of divorcement or separation. But until that day comes keep the awful secret to yourself. Keep it from every being in the universe, except the God to whom you do well to tell your trouble. Trouble only a few years at most, and then you can go up on the other side of the grave and say: "O, Lord, I kept the marital secret. Thou knowest how well I kept it, and I thank thee that the release has come at last. Give me some place where I can sit down and rest awhile from the horrors of an embruted earthly alliance, before I begin the full raptures of Heaven." And orders will be sent out to the usher angels, saying: "Take this Abigail right up to the softest seat in the best room of the palace, and let twenty of the brightest angels wait on her for the next thousand years."

Further, I charge you let there be no outside interference with the conjugal relation. Neither neighbor nor confidential friend, nor brother, nor sister, nor father, nor mother, have a right to come in here. The married gossip will come around and by the hour tell you how she manages her husband. You tell her plainly that if she will attend to the affairs of her household you will attend to yours. What dangerous people do with their tongues! Nature indicates that the tongue is a dangerous thing by the fact that it is shut in, first by a barricade of teeth and then by the door of the lips. One insidious talker can stir up a whole neighborhood badly stirred up. The Apostle Peter excoriated these busybodies in other people's matters, and St. Paul, in his letter to the Thessalonians and to Timothy, gives them a sharp dig, and the good housewife will be on the lookout for them and never return their calls and treat them with coldest frigidity. For this reason better keep house as soon as possible. Some people are opposed to them, but I thank God for what are called flats in these cities. They put up a separate house within the means of nearly all the population. In your married relations you do not need any advice. If you and your husband have not skill enough to get along well alone, with all the advice you can import you will get along worse. What you want for your craft on this voyage is plenty of sea-room.

I charge you, also, make yourself the intelligent companion of your husband. What with these floods of newspapers and books, there is no excuse for the wife's ignorance either about the present or the past. If you have no more than a half hour every day to yourself you may fill your mind with entertaining and useful knowledge. Let the merchant's wife read up on all mercantile questions, and the mechanic's wife on all that pertains to his style of work, and the professional man's wife on all the legal or medical or theological or political discussions of the day. It is very stupid for a man, after having been amid active minds all day, to find his wife without information or opinions on anything. If the wife knows nothing about what is going on in the world, after the tea hour has passed, and the husband has read his newspaper, he will have an engagement, and must go and see a man. In nine cases out of ten, when a man does not stay at home in the evening, unless positive duty calls him away, it is because there is nothing to stay for. He would rather talk with his wife than any one else if she could talk as well.

I charge you, my sister, in every way to make your home attractive. I have not enough of practical knowledge about house adornment to know just what makes the difference; but here is an opulent house, containing all wealth of bric-a-brac, and of musical instrument, and of painting, and of upholstery, and yet there is in it a chill like Nova Zembla. Another home, with one-twentieth part of the outlay, and small supply of art, and cheapest piano purchasable, and yet, as you enter it, there comes upon body, mind and soul, a glow of welcome and satisfied and happy domesticity. The holy art of making the most comfort and brightness out of the means afforded every wife should study.

At the siege of Argos, Pyrrhus was killed by the tile of a roof thrown by a woman, and Abimelech was slain by a stone that a woman threw from the tower of Thebes, and Earl Montfort was destroyed by a rock discharged at him by a woman from the walls of Toulouse. But without any weapon save that of her own cold, cheerless household arrangement, any wife may slay all the attractions of a home circle. A wife and mother in prosperous circumstances and greatly admired was giving her chief time to social life. The husband spent his evenings away. The son, fifteen years of age, got the same habit, and there was a prospect that two other children as they got old enough would take the same turn. One day the wife accused to the consideration that she had better save her husband and her boy. Interesting and stirring games were introduced into the house. The mother studied up interesting things to tell her children. One morning the son said: "Father, you ought to have been home last night. We had a grand time. Such jolly games and such interesting stories." This went on from night to night, and after awhile the husband staid in to see what was going on, and he finally got attracted and added something of his own to the evening entertainments; and the result was that the wife and mother saved her husband and saved her boy and saved herself. Was not that an enterprise worth the attention of the greatest woman that ever lived since Abigail at the foot of the rock arrested the four hundred armed warriors?

Compare such a one with one of these dis-away, attitudinizing, frivolous, married coquettes of the modern drawing-room, her heaven an opera-box on the night of Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," the ten commandments an inconvenience, taking arsenic to improve the complexion, and her appearance a confused result of belladonna, bleached hair, antimony and rain-coat acts, until one is compelled to discuss her character and wonder whether the line between a decent and indecent ... is like the equator, an imaginary line.

What the world wants now is about fifty old-fashioned mothers, women who shall realize that the highest, grandest, mightiest institution on earth is the home. It is not necessary that they should have the same old-time manners of the country farm-house, or wear the old-fashioned cap or spectacles and apron that her glorified ancestry wore; but I mean the old spirit which began with the Hannahs and the Mother Lois and the Abigails of Scripture days, and was demonstrated on the homestead where some of us were reared, though the old house long ago was pulled down and its occupants scattered never to meet until in the higher home that awaits the families of the righteous. While there are more good and faithful wives and mothers now than there ever were, society has got a wrong twist on this subject, and there are influences abroad that would make women believe that their chief sphere is outside instead of inside the home.

Hence in many households children, instead of a blessing, are a nuisance. It is a card case versus child's primer, carriage versus cradle, social popularity versus domestic felicity. Hence infanticide and ante-natal murder are so common that all the physicians, allopathic, hydropathic, homeopathic and eclectic, are crying out in horror, and it is time that the pulpits joined with the medical profession in echoing and re-echoing the thunder of Mount Sinai, which says: "Thou shalt not kill," and the Book of Revelation, which says, "All murderers shall have their place in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." And the man or the woman who takes life a minute old will as certainly go straight to hell as the man or woman who destroys life forty years old. And the wildest, loudest shriek of judgment day will be given at the overthrow of those who moved in the high and respectable circles of earthly society, yet decreed by their own act as far as they could privately effect it, the extermination of the advancing generations, abetted in the horrid crime by a lot of infernal quacks with which modern medicine is infested. When, on the Last Day, the criers of the Court shall, with resounding "Oyez," "Oyez!" declare the "Oyer and Terminer" of the universe opened, and the Judge, with gavel of thunderbolt, shall smite the nations into silence, and the trial of all the fratricides, and parricides, and matricides, and patricides, and uxoricides, and regicides, and deicides, and infanticides of the earth shall proceed, none of my hearers or readers can say that they knew not what they were doing. Mighty God! Arrest the evil that is overshadowing this century.

I charge you, my sister, that you take your husband along with you to Heaven. Of course, this implies that you yourself are a Christian. I must take that for granted. It can not be possible that after what Christianity has done for women, and after taking the infinitely responsible position you have assumed at the head of the household, that you should be in a position antagonistic to Christ. It was not a slip of the tongue when I spoke of you as being at the head of the household. We men rather pride ourselves as being at the head of the household, but it is only a pleasant delusion. To whom do the children go when they have trouble? When there is a sore finger to be bound up or one of the first teeth that needs to be removed to make way for one that is crowding it out, to whom does the child go? For whom do children cry out in the night when they get frightened at a bad dream? Aye, to whom does the husband go when he has a business trouble too great or too delicate for outside ears. We, the men, are heads of the household in name, but you, O wives, are heads of the household in fact, and it is your business to take your husband with you into the Kingdom of God and see that house prepared for Heaven.

You can do it! Of course, God's almighty grace alone can convert him, but you are to be the instrument. Some wives keep their husbands out of Heaven, and others garner them for it. If your religion, O, wife, is simply the joke of the household, if you would rather go to the theater than the prayer-meeting, if you can beat all the neighborhood in progressive euchre, if your husband never sees you kneel at the bedside in prayer before retiring, if the only thing that reminds the family of your church relations is that on communion day you get home late to dinner, you will not be able to take your husband to Heaven for the simple reason that you will not get there yourself. But I suppose your religion is genuine, and the husband realizes there is in your soul a divine principle, and that though you may be naturally quicker tempered than he is, and have many imperfections that distress you more than they can any one else, still you are destined for the skies when the brief scenes of this life are over. How will you take him with you? There are two oars to that boat—prayer and holy example.

But you say he belongs to a worldly club, or he does not believe a word of the Bible, or he is an inebriate and very loose in his habits? What you tell me shows that you don't understand that while you are at the one end of a prayer, the Omnipotent God is at the other end, and it is simply a question whether Almightiness is strong enough to keep His word.

I have no doubt there will be great conventions in Heaven called for celebrative purposes, and when in some Celestial assemblage the saints shall be telling what brought them to God, I believe that ten thousand times ten thousand will say, "My wife."

I put beside each other two testimonies of men concerning their wives, and let you see the contrast. An aged man was asked the reason of his salvation. With tearful emotion he said: "My wife was brought to God some years before myself. I persecuted and abused her because of her religion. She, however, returned nothing but kindness constantly, maintaining an anxiety to promote my comfort and happiness, and it was her amiable conduct when suffering ill-treatment from me that first sent the arrows of conviction to my soul." The other testimony was from a dying man: "Harriet, I am a lost man; you opposed our family worship and my secret prayer; you drew me away into temptation and to neglect every religious duty. I believe my fate is sealed. Harriet, you are the cause of my everlasting ruin." How many married couples in heaven—Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Lapidoth and Deborah, Zacharias and Elizabeth, Joseph and Mary, and many whom we have known as good as the most of them.

As once you stood in the village or city church or in your father's house, perhaps under a wedding bell of flowers, to-day stand up, husband and wife, beneath the cross of a pardoning Redeemer, while I proclaim the banns of an eternal marriage. Join your right hands. I pronounce you one forever. What God hath joined together let neither life nor death nor time nor eternity put asunder. Witness men and angels, all worlds, all ages! The circle is an emblem of eternity, and that is the shape of the marriage ring.

Proof-reader (reading)—Hon. William Smith arose—

Proof-reader—Smythe arose—

Copy-holder—With a "y" and "e".

Proof-reader—Then why didn't you say so? Smythe arose and saw—

Copy-holder—Saw.

Proof-reader—Ran his fingers through his hair—

Police reporter—Smythe hasn't any hair; he's as bald as a watermelon.

City editor—to reporter who wrote the article—What do you want to work in Smythe's hair for if he hasn't any? Don't you know any better than that?

Reporter (chop fallen)—I didn't notice that he didn't have any hair. I couldn't notice that and take notes at the same time.

C. E.—Then how could you tell what he was doing with his fingers? You had better try our want column and see if you can get a situation in a livery stable.

Proof-reader—Well, what shall I do with it?

C. E.—Cut it all out. It is ridiculous to give a half-column report of a speech to a man who hasn't any hair. Kill the whole article.—Rochester Herald.

When is a troublesome corn like Henry VIII? When it is aching (a king).

Why is a doctor never seasick? He is used to sea sickness.

What relation is the door to the door-mat? Step-father.

Why is a door like a colored woman? Because it is an egress.

Why is a dog's tail a novelty? Because no one ever saw it before.

What is the difference between an astronomer and the planet Mars? One is a star gazer, and the other is a gay star, sir.

How did Adam and Eve get out of the Garden of Eden? They were snaked out.

Why do white sheep eat more than black sheep? Because there are more of them.

Why was Cowper the poet in debt? Because he O'd lor a lodge in some vast wilderness.

What is the difference between the North and South pole? All the difference in the world.

Why is the conscience like a strap of an omnibus? Because it is an inward check on the outward man.

Why is a lady at a ball like an arrow? Because she can not go off without a beau, and is in a quiver until she gets one.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

KNOWN BY HIS WALK.

One of the Finest Repartees Ever Published in This Country.

The following story is told of Dr. William S. White, formerly chaplain of the University of Virginia. It is one of the best illustrations of a quick and apt retort.

When J. H. Orr was Speaker of the House, he spent a short time at Warm Springs, in North Carolina, where Dr. White was also. The two had been sitting for a time apart, each engaged with his own knot of immediate friends, and by and by the doctor arose and walked across the ... gait.

Mr. Orr immediately recognized him, and asked him if he were not the chaplain at the University of Virginia at such a time, naming the year. The doctor replied that he was.

"I was there," said Mr. Orr, "a student at the time, and I knew you by the peculiar limp of your step."

"Well," said the doctor, a little severely, though with a twinkle which told that he spoke jokingly, "it seems that my limping made a deeper impression on you than my preaching."

"Ah, doctor," quickly replied Mr. Orr, "I deem it the highest compliment we can pay a clergyman to say he is known by his walk rather than by his conversation."—Charlottesville (Va.) Chronicle.

John G. Saxe's Full Hand.

Did you ever on a railway car observe the many bits of pasteboard that are thrust out at the conductors who hesitate before they punch them and hand them back with an air that seems to say: "Well, 'tis none of my business," and move on to another? That's the "pass," and a mighty useful thing it is where the shekels are not redundant and the ways are long. Lecturers find it so especially, and Saxe now old—once told me one of his experiences that was very amusing. He had passes on all the railroads and steamboats in the West, he thought, but at one time he found himself on a short road not down on his chart upon which he had no ticket. As the conductor came along he took all his passes from his hand like a deck of playing cards: "Mr. Conductor," said he, "do you play euchre?" "Yes, sometimes." "Well, what would you say to a hand like that? I should say pass," and Saxe put up his cards as the conductor passed laughingly along.—Boston Cor. Hartford Post.

He Still Made a Profit.

A sailor, having purchased some medicine of a celebrated doctor, demanded the price.

"Why," says the doctor, "I can not think of charging you less than ... sailor, "take off the odd and I'll pay you the even."

"Well," returned the doctor, "we won't quarrel about trifles."

The sailor laid down [illegible] walking off when the doctor reminded him of his mistake.

"No mistake at all, sir. Six is even and seven is odd all the world over. So I wish you a very good day."

"Get you gone," said the doctor, "I have made fourpence out of you, anyhow!"—English Exchange.

A COLD DAY.

The Wonderful Experience of the Champion Railroad Ananias.

"Talking about sudden changes in temperature," said a St. Paul brakeman, "let me tell you of a little experience I had one day a few weeks ago. It was a nice, warm day, and I was out on my run, and was just congratulating myself that we'd get through on time this trip. We'd had tough times with snow and cold and I was particularly pleased with the fair outlook on this occasion 'cause I wanted to get home in time to lead the prayer-meeting; bein' as it was my turn. I'm a religious man, you see, so you can place the utmost confidence in what I tell you. Well, as I was a-sayin', it was a nice warm, thawing day and we were making good time. Pretty soon, though, the train stopped, miles from any station, and I stepped out to see what the matter was. I noticed that it seemed slightly colder, and I shivered a bit as I stood in the slush and water looking ahead where the engineer was fixing something about his machine. By the time the engineer had concluded his fixing, probably three or four minutes, I was chilled through, and wasn't sorry to see him jump onto his cab and hear the bell ring for starting. I made a move to get on the train, but it wasn't much of a move. In fact, I was stuck. I could no more move my feet than if the court house had been sitting on one of them and the city hall on the other. You see, while I was standing in that water the temperature had suddenly fallen so that the water had turned to firm ice, and my feet were frozen fast. The train moved off without me, despite my rage, and I stayed there three hours and missed my prayer meeting. That beat all the sudden changes in temperature I ever heard of, and you can bet it was a cold day when I got left."—Chicago Herald.

Crude, But Appreciative.

A countryman who had been to see "Hamlet" went into a bookstore the following day and bought a copy of the play.

"By the way," he said, "who writ Hamlet?"

"That is a disputed question," replied the bookseller. "Some people think Shakespeare wrote it, while others believe that Bacon was the responsible one. You pay your money and you take your choice."

"Well," said the countryman, as he turned to go, "whoever he was, he was a darned smart feller."—N. Y. Sun.

Desperate Uncle Mose.

"You are not looking well to-day, Uncle Mose."

"I ain't feeling well. I'se de most miserable niggah in de hull State ob Texas."

"What seems to be the matter?"

"Fouh de last eight days I'se had sich pains all ober my body dat I'se scared on de world. I wants to get outer it, so I tole my ole ooman dis mornin' dat I was gwinter come to you, no matter what happened. I'se jess desperate, I is."—Texas Siftings.

No More Use for the Dog.

Wife (reading the paper)—Well, I declare, if that isn't the queerest thing I ever heard of.

Husband—What's that?

Wife—Why, here in the paper is an account of a wedding up in Manchester, and among the wedding presents was a bull-terrier, given to the bride by her father.

Husband—I don't see anything odd about that. She was the old man's youngest daughter, wasn't she? Wife—Yes, but [illegible] ... band—Why, of course, if she was married, he had no further use for the dog.—Somerville Journal.

In the Same Neighborhood.

Two wretched looking tramps were brought up before a Texas justice of the peace. Addressing the worst looking one, the justice asked:

"Where do you live?"

"Nowhere."

"And where do you live?" said the justice, addressing the other.

Cholly (trying to be funny; time, eleven p. m.)—I say, Aurelia, tell me what is the difference between that clock and me?

Aurelia (artlessly)—You tell me.

Cholly—Because it is not fast and I—ha! ha! See the point?

Aurelia (as before)—Oh! yes; but there's another difference. The clock is not going and you—he! he! See the point?—Philadelphia Call.

Congratulated.

"Charles, I hear you are going to marry Miss Boldly. Charming woman! Let me congratulate you on your good fortune."

"Ah, yes, but—the fact is, I have broken off the match and I'm not going to marry any one."

"Then let me congratulate you on your good sense."—Philadelphia Call.

The Philosopher Is Enlightened as to the Singular Course of the President.

[From the Toledo Blade.]
Confedrit X Roads,
(Wich is in the State uv Kentucky),
February 15, 1886.

I hed a conversashun with a prominent Dimekratic manager uv Louisville, regardin the extraordinary slownis uv the President in cleenin out the Republikin raskels, wich hev bin fattenin on the public offises for 24 years, and puttin in their places honest patriots like myself. Sez he:

"You don't know wat a scoot statesman Grover Cleveland is. He is playin it low down on the Republikins, for he intends to keep the Government in the hands of the Dimocrisy, wich is hisself, forever."

"To wich Dimocrisy do you refer?" I askt.

"The Dimocrisy uv wich he is the exponent. His policy is to disintegrate the Republikin party, and destroy it entirely. To this end he is retainin in offis the heft uv the Republikin offis holders, wich is rooin to our enemies. The Republikins wich is in offis are the most active workers in the Republikin party. It is them wich rallies to the polls, wich votes early and often, and wich brings in the agid and infirm. It is them wich bleeves in the importance of one vote, and wich pays for brass brands and sich. Now no Republikin offis holder wich is continnered by Cleveland, kin, with any decency, rally to the poles or bring in the agid and infirm agin him or his Administrashen. They won't be active, to say the least. A hen settin comfortably on its nest is quiet and content—chop her hen's head off and it flops furiously and spirts blood into your face. The Republikin offis holder is a settin hen. This course knocks out uv active work thousands uv zelus men, and a certain per cent. uv em will vote with the Dimocrisy, to hold their places. I shouldn't wonder ef he shood decide to appoint nothin but Republikins to offis, in order to weeken the enemy. Do you see?"

"I shood say I did," I replied. "But in the meantime wat is to becum uv me? Wat yoose wuz it for me to rally to the poles, and vote early and often, to elect Grover Cleveland, ef I don't git the offis I hev bin yearnin for for twenty-four years? Wat good is a Dimekratic administrashen run by Republikins? Wat better off am I than ez Blaine had bin elected? But go on. My patience is about eggshausted."

"Then to further weeken the Republikin party and to take the wind entirely out uv ther sales, he perposes to adopt ther policy. He is making a vigrus fite fur Civil-service reform, he is opposed to any speshil tinkerin with the tariff, and he is everlastingly down on repoodiashun and all that, and ef ther is a Republikin noshun that he hezn't adopted I don't jist know it. You kin easily see how it weekens the Republikins to adopt their polisy! It knocks em out uv the ring, becoz, you see, they hevn't any ishoos."

"I see," I replied, "but wat becomes uv Dimocrisy? It is jist the same in the matter uv offises. Ef we are agoin to do all that Blaine would hev done, why in blazes didn't we elect Blane? Then wat is to become uv them Dimocrats wich reely do bleeve in the distinctive principles uv Dimocracy? Ther are Dimocrats wich hev noshuns uv ther own. Ther are mossbax wich vottid for Jaxun, and to them Dimocrisy meens suthin. I am free to say that ef the President will give me the offis which I am entitled to that I don't keer a dam wat he asks me to believe. I am in the sere and yaller leef, and subsistence is necessary to me. It don't make much difference wat I bleeve about the few remainin yeers I hev to stay. Gild the pill with post offis and I'll swaller it, no matter wat it is. When I went into the fite last yeer ther was inscribed onto my banner the two P's, under wich I hev allus fit, Principles and Provender. I ain't so pertikeler as to the Principles, but I must hev the Provender. The Provender was my stummick, and the stummick never. Principles won't give a man the dinner in the mornin or the Southern at nite. Principles won't pay Bascom or make you solid at his bar. I will take em both together, but ef I kin only hev wun it must be the latter.

"But when you ask me to turn a flip flap into Republikinism and not hev the post-offis, my stummick rebels. That is too much. With the kentry run on Republikin prinsiples and the offises filled with Republikins, I don't see wat the Dimocrisy hev made. It isn't the feest I apposed I was goin to set down to anyhow."

The discushun closed with this. I feel all that I sed. I'm blessed ef I'm goin to swaller Republikanism and Lubbock, the bigger postmaster, both. Ef the President wants me to foller him into the Republikin camp under the Dimokratic flag, I must be put somewhere in the visinity uv the baggage. I don't carry a musket sooly for the benefit uv the General commandin. I want some of that plunder myself.

THE OHIO BLUNDERS.

Politicians of the Buck-Eye State Inciting Present and Future Retribution.

It must be no small relief to a man of Allen G. Thurman's natural nobility of character to have a good excuse for getting away from home, now that Columbus is the stage for a display of the worst elements of the Democratic party, to which his political fortunes have always been allied. As senior counsel for the prosecution of the Government's case against the Bell Telephone Company, he could go to Washington without laying himself liable to any partisan censure. The Ohio Democrats are in a bad way, but he has no responsibility for the mess they are in, nor is he under any obligation to help defend them. The cool-oil gang ran over him with their trucks, and now they can suffer the consequences of their own disregard of the decencies of political life.

The refusal of Daniel J. Dalton to answer questions legally put to him by the House Committee on Privileges and Elections, and to produce the poll-book and tally-sheet of Precinct A of the Fourth ward of Cincinnati, was the assertion, in the court of public opinion, of a plea of guilty, and the interposition of a writ of habeas corpus by a Democratic judge can serve only a temporary screen for him and the crimes with which his name is linked. The House was clearly acting within the limits of its constitutional prerogative when it ordered his commitment to jail for contempt of its authority. Resort to legal quibbles may stave off judgment for a time, but there can be no reasonable doubt of the decision which the Supreme Court of Ohio will render. That tribunal has a Republican majority, and thus far the Republicans have made no compromising and embarrassing mistakes. They have been careful to keep law and justice both on their side. No snap judgment has been taken, nor can any obstinacy on the part of such a tool as Dalton prevent the accomplishment of the final and practicable purpose in view, the thorough exposure of the frauds perpetrated.

The people of Ohio will hold not only local but Congressional elections during the current year, and that State has too much sturdy integrity to put the signet of approval upon false election returns and all its concomitant crimes. Eleven of the twenty-one Congressmen from Ohio in the present House are Democrats, some of them elected by narrow majorities. The State is decidedly Republican upon a full vote, and nothing could tend more strongly to arouse the latent enthusiasm of the party than a realization of the means resorted to by the workers of the Democracy last fall. The object had in view in the perpetration of those frauds failed when Senator Sherman was re-elected. The most that the perpetrators can hope for now is to reduce to the minimum the punishment of their crime, especially that inflicted by an indignant and outraged people at the polls next fall. Thus far their tactics have been ill-advised and tend to defeat their own end.—Inter Ocean.

A SETTLED POINT.

The Republican Senate Will Not Be Domineered by a Democratic President.

The controversy between the President and the Senate has now reached that point where Mr. Cleveland must recede from his untenable position in withholding papers and documents or encounter the unanimous opposition of the Republican Senators. By the blunder of one of the committee in calling for the "reasons" for a removal the Senate was heedlessly placed in a false attitude, but the matter has since been exhaustively considered in the Judiciary Committee, and the report presented by Senator Edmunds puts the Republican Senators on solid ground. Among the others who signed the report are Edmunds, Evarts and Wilson, three as able constitutional lawyers as can be found in the country, and their statement covers the law and the right of the whole question. The Republican party will approve without qualification the position taken in the Edmunds report, and the Republican Senators can afford to fight it out on that line if it takes the remainder of Mr. Cleveland's term and makes it necessary to reject his appointees by the thousand. The Republican party would not approve any invasion of the President's rightful prerogatives, but it will support any effort that may be needed to teach Mr. Cleveland and his Cabinet that they constitute only one branch of the Government and can not be permitted to lock the public archives and withhold information from the Senate.

The Edmunds resolution recites that since the adoption of the Tenure-of-Office law it has been the uniform practice to call on the departments for documents and papers relating to suspensions from office whenever such information was desired, and it was never withheld except in one instance, and then the refusal lasted only for two or three days. This practice had the unanimous approval of the Judiciary Committee and was concurred in by Democratic Senators, some of whom have drawn resolutions since the beginning of the present session calling on the departments for papers and documents desired by the Senate. If Congress has not the authority to examine any books or documents belonging to the Government and pertaining to official transactions the power of impeachment is a nullity and the executive departments practically free from all criticism or control. No such doctrine has ever been asserted until within the last month, and it is not to be tolerated now. The Edmunds report recites that the action of the Attorney-General in refusing to transmit papers is "in violation of his official duty and subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government," and that it is therefore the duty of the Senate to refuse confirmation in all cases where papers and documents are withheld. Furthermore, the report cites the law declaring that honorably-discharged soldiers suffering from disability incurred in the service shall be preferred in appointments to office in all cases where such applicants possess the necessary capacity, and it is declared obligatory on the Senate to see that this provision is faithfully enforced or at least not violated by displacing soldiers without cause to make way for civilians. The Edmunds resolution should be adopted by the Senate and enforced to the letter hereafter. If Mr. Cleveland persists in his attempt to domineer the Senate, let him take the consequences.—Chicago Tribune.

STANDING BY GARLAND.

Washington dispatches announce that the President will stand by Attorney-General Garland in the Pan-Electric business. Very likely. We put faith in the accuracy of our reports, and we think that this stubborn and perverse determination is quite like Mr. Cleveland.

But so much the worse for the President. His loyalty to an impeached associate is honorable to his chivalric friendship, but it does no credit to his judgment. He is called to act not on the impulses of personal regard but on the obligations of the Chief Magistrate. What is at stake is not his friendly sentiment for a colleague, but the honor and repute of his Administration. He had the opportunity to show that he would not tolerate any questionable relations and proceedings; if he does not choose to use it the country will be sorry, and so much the worse for him.

Mr. Garland took the Pan-Electric stock as a gift while a member of the Senate. There were half a dozen other prominent figures in and around Congress in the same boat. The stock was not given to them on any sentiment, but as a matter of cold deliberate business. It was put where it would do the most good. These men are now hatched in the Administration, and the Pan-Electric, after knocking at the door of Congress, came knocking at the door of the Department of Justice just as soon as Mr. Garland and his associates were installed, and it got what it wanted.

If the President sees nothing in all this which disqualifies Mr. Garland for further usefulness, we must be looking out of his blind side. He may change his notions as the fire grows hotter, and keeps right on.—Philadelphia Press.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Eighth Sermon of the Series on the Marriage Ring.

Hotel and Boarding House vs. Home Life—The True Realization of the Family Relation Impossible Except Under the Home Roof.

In his seventh discourse of the "Marriage Ring" series Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage drew a strong picture of contrasts between the hotel and boarding-house life, now getting so common, and that of life under the home roof. The text was:

And brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence and gave them to the host, and said unto him: "Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee."—Luke x, 34 and 35.

This is the good Samaritan paying the hotel bill of a man who had been robbed and almost killed by bandits. The good Samaritan had found the unfortunate on a lonely, rocky road, where to this very day depredations are sometimes committed upon travelers, and had put the injured man into the saddle, while this merciful and well-to-do man had walked till they got to the hotel and the wounded man was put to bed and cured for. It must have been a very superior hotel in its accommodations, for, though in the country, the landlord was paid at the rate of what in our country would be four or five dollars a day, a penny being then a day's wages, and the two pennies paid in this case about two days' wages. Moreover, it was one of those kind hearted landlords who are wrapped up in the happiness of their guests, because the good Samaritan leaves the poor wounded fellow to his entire care, promising that when he came that way again he would pay all the bills until the invalid got well.

Hotels and boarding-houses are necessities. In very ancient times they were unknown, because the world had comparatively few inhabitants ...

... wholesale. So, while the private home may brood into life an occasional falsity and take a long time to do it, many of the boarding-houses and family hotels afford a swifter and more multitudinous style of moral inculcation, and one old gossip will get off the nest after one hour's brooding, clucking a flock of thirty lies after her, each one picking up its little worm of juicy regalement.

It is no advantage to hear too much about your neighbors, for your time will be so much occupied in taking care of their faults that you will have no time to look after your own. And while you are pulling the chickweed out of their garden yours will get all overgrown with horse sorrel and mullein stalks.

One of the worst damages that comes from the herding of so many people into boarding-houses and family hotels is inflicted upon children. It is only another way of bringing them up on the commons.

While you have your own private house you can, for the most part, control their companionship and their whereabouts; but, by twelve years of age, in these public resorts, they will have picked up all the bad things that can be furnished by the prurient minds of dozens of people. They will overhear blasphemies and see quarrels, and get precocious in sin, and what the bar-tender does not tell them, the porter or hostler or bell-boy will. Besides that, the children will go out into this world without the restraining, anchoring, steadying and all controlling memory of a home. From that some of us who have been blessed of such memory have escaped. It grips a man for eighty years, if he lives so long. It pulls him back from doors into which he otherwise would enter. It smites him with contrition in the very midst of his dissipations.

As the fish already surrounded by the long, wide net swim out to sea, thinking they can go as far as they please, and with gay toss of silvery scale they defy the sportsmen on the beach, and after a while the fishermen begin to draw in the net, hand over hand and hand over hand, and it is a long while before the captured fins begin to feel the net, and then they ...

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

What Came from a Note.

While visiting, last August, in Connecticut, Miss Joe M. Riddell, of Jackson, with others, was inspecting a cheese factory of a relative, when she wrote a note, placed it in a small vial, and then made a hole in a cheese, in which she placed the vial and sealed it up. The substance of the note was a request for the person into whose hands it should fall to correspond with the writer thereof. Recently Miss Riddell received a somewhat voluminous correspondence from Castleton, England, embracing several letters. The first was from a grocer of that place, who was the purchaser of the cheese, which fell into his hands in October last. Upon opening it he found the note in the vial, and having a neighbor named Riddell he passed it over to him. This Riddell answered the note, and passed it around to other relatives of the same name, one or two of whom also sent replies, giving considerable interesting information regarding their ancestry, etc. The letters were all sent to Miss Riddell together, and after reading them she forwarded them to her father, in Nebraska, who has a history of the Riddell family for several generations past.

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, also all its malignant effects. Dyspepsia, Female Prostration, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Eruptions, Scrofulous Sores, Malassimilation of Food, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, a purely vegetable tonic, the Best Known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does eradicates all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

WHY? Because it is the only remedy known that has power to expel the uric acid and urea, of which there are some 500 grains secreted each day as the result of muscular action, and sufficient if retained in the blood, to kill six men. It is the direct cause of all the above diseases, as well as of Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Insanity and Death.

This great specific relieves the kidneys of too much blood, frees them from all irritants, restores them to health, action by its certain and soothing power.

IT CURES ALSO Jaundice, Enlargement of the Liver, Abscess and Catarrh of the Bile Ducts, Biliousness, Headache, Furred Tongue, Sleeplessness, Languor, Debility, Constipation, Gall Stones, and every unpleasant symptom which results from liver complaint.

WHY? Because it has a specific and positive action on the liver as well as on the kidneys, increasing the secretion and flow of bile, regulates its elaborating function, removes unhealthful formations, and, in a word, restores it to natural activity, without which health is an impossibility.

COWARDLY TACTICS.

The Administration Stabbing Officials in the Back and Refusing to Explain.

The ground upon which Republican Senators demand the papers affecting the removal of Republican officials should be distinctly borne in mind. It is not a denial of the power of the President to remove, nor of his right. Mr. Cleveland has said that officeholders would not be removed before the expiration of their terms for merely political reasons. Had he not said this, Senators would have yielded without a question to the application of the spoils principle. But, having said this, all such premature removals carry with them the inevitable inference of the discovery of something wrong. There must be dishonesty or inefficiency. There would seem to be no escape from this conclusion.

In many cases the men so removed, who know that no well-grounded charge can be brought against them, are anxious to have the imputations upon their good name cleared up. Many others are curious to ascertain what were the secret slanders that prevailed at Washington to secure their dismissal, and who the authors of those calumnies are. This much, it is felt, is due honest and faithful public servants. But it is gradually coming to be seen that there are many of these secret charges that will not bear scrutiny. Their authors never intended they should become public and are ashamed and afraid to face them. They are, therefore, lousy and interested in maintaining the "rights of the President" intact. They can be relied on to rally to a man in the defense of his prerogatives, and to soundly condemn those who would strip him of the power ...

... freshing their memories with this painstaking summary of last year's legislation, will be able to decide whether the will of the majority was not disregarded by the Postmaster-General and the will of the minority, headed by Mr. Holman carried into effect. The facts speak for themselves and no argument is needed to emphasize them. The Postmaster-General has acted in open defiance of the law-making powers.—N. Y. Tribune.

AN INCOMPETENT BODY.

The Outcome of the Labors of the Democratic House of Representatives.

It is already evident that there is small hope of any beneficial legislation from this Congress. More than two months of the session have passed and only one measure of importance—the Presidential-Succession bill—has been sent to the President. But there are several bills pending to remedy the admitted defects in that measure. The Senate has passed the Dakota bill, an important measure concerning Indian reservations, the Utah bill, one to fix the salaries of district judges, the bill to provide arms for the militia, and many others of less value. It has defeated the Electoral-Count bill, and has on its calendar ready for passage a number of important measures. It is clear that the slow progress of legislation can not be charged to the Senate. Of the bills it passed at the last session two hundred and seventy-five of them were never considered by the House.

The cause of the delay is found in the incapacity of this representative Democratic body. Last year the rules and Mr. Randall were made the scapegoats. But that difficulty has been ...

THE HOTEL CLERK'S STORY.

It is the fashion among many so-called humorists to represent the American hotel clerk as a lordly and supercilious being, who, with a headlight diamond in his immaculate shirt front and a look of contemptuous disdain upon his classic features, sends tired and travel-stained arrivals off to impossible regions in the fifteenth story, or haughtily refuses them any lodging whatever.

The fact is that the true American hotel clerk is an invaluable feature of our civilization. The time of the arrivals and departures of all the trains on all the railroads is at his tongue's end; he is full of information about what is interesting at the theaters, and of stories of actors and actresses who have stopped at his hotel, and withal a kind of man, who, if the house is crowded, will let you sleep on a billiard table. Mr. W. P. Hammond, who is the clerk at the West End Hotel, 503 and 505 West Madison street, Chicago, is of this obliging disposition and is always ready to give any information regarding the hotel to those who seek it. The accomplished landlady of the West End has recently suffered with rheumatism. The story of her cure is thus told by clerk Hammond:

"Our landlady was taken with quite a severe attack of rheumatism in the lower limbs, suffering much pain and being scarcely able to walk. She heard of Athlophoros and of the cures it had effected, and sent me to the drug store to buy a bottle of it. I got it, and in half an hour's time after she had taken the first dose she felt relieved and in a few days the rheumatism was entirely gone."

"How much did she take?"

"About one bottle."

"Has she had any return of the pain?"

"Not to my knowledge," replied Mr. Hammond, "and I am certain she would be likely to say something about it if she had. She speaks of Athlophoros in the highest terms, and has recommended it to many. In one case I remember the cure was as quick as in her own."

Spring Medicine

Everybody needs and should take a good spring medicine, for two reasons:

1st. The body is now more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season.

2d. The impurities which have accumulated in the blood should be expelled, and the system given tone and strength, before the prostrating effects of warm weather are felt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best spring medicine. It purifies the blood. It sharpens the appetite. It tones the digestion. It overcomes debility. It builds up the whole system. Try it and you will be convinced of its superiority.

Purify Your Blood

Remember, we do not claim that Hood's Sarsaparilla will do impossibilities. We tell you plainly what it has done, and submit proofs from sources of unquestioned reliability, and ask you frankly if you are suffering from any disease or affection caused or promoted by impure blood or low state of the system, to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Our experience warrants us in assuring you that you will not be disappointed in the result.

"I can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as a safe, sure medicine. It cured me of terrible head aches and cured my little girl of swellings in her neck which had been lanced twice." Mrs. F. E. Lord, Cates Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"When in the spring I felt all run down and much debilitated, I found Hood's Sarsaparilla just the medicine to build me up. My wife also, after much physical prostration, found in its use new life and lasting benefit. Upon our little girl, who had been sick with scarlet fever, its effect was marvelous, entirely removing the poison from her blood and restoring her to good health." E. G. Stratton, Swampscott, Mass.

"I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla and find it to be the best remedy for impure blood I have ever taken." M. H. Baxter, ticket agent, P. & R. Rd., Bound Brook, N. J.

Tone Up the System

"I consider Hood's Sarsaparilla the best medicine I ever used. It gives me an appetite and refreshing sleep, and keeps the cold out." Jesse M. Pope, 106 Spruce Street, Portland, Me.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla was a God-send to me, for it cured me of dyspepsia and liver complaint with which I had suffered 20 years." J. B. Hornbeck, South Fallsburg, N. Y.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for general debility and was wonderfully benefited by it." J. P. Johnson, Martin's Ferry, O.

Mrs. C. W. Marriott, Lowell, Mass., was completely cured of sick headache, which she had had 16 years, by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The pronoun "I" will not fall into innocuous desuetude during Mr Cleveland's administration.

A rather apocryphal story is told by a New York Herald relative to Senators Logan and Evarts. During the New Yorker's speech at the Detroit banquet a gentleman leaned over to Logan and whispered: "Senator Evarts is a very fine speaker, isn't he?" "Yes, indeed," returned the Illinois statesman, "but do you know the little cuss wants to be president?"

It is claimed that Mr. Gladstone's land scheme for Ireland will add at the lowest estimate $200,000,000 to the British debt, which now reaches $4,000,000,000. This is the smallest sum for which the government could purchase such lands in Ireland necessary to carry out Mr. Gladstone's plans, and this is the rock on which the premier's policy is likely to encounter shipwreck.

Col. Ingersoll's religion does not meet the requirements of a large number of people but at the same time there are people who think that his head is cool on some subjects. He is reported as saying: "I have talked with presidents and senators and congressmen and public men of all parties, and I have never yet found one of them who was sincerely for civil service reform as it is advocated and put into practice now."

All the evidence goes to show that the democrats of the house are not at all easy with the elections to be held next fall, which will decide the complexion of the next house. The party is very much demoralized on account of the disagreement with the executive and upon the the internal disputes about the tariff and silver questions. The leading members look upon the situation as very threatening. Added to this there are the constantly widening faction splits in the party organization in almost every state over the jealousies and heartburnings arising from the division of the spoils.

That was a strong speech made by Senator Edmunds on the right of the Senate not only to conduct its own business but to have access to the official files of the departments relating to topics under discussion or consideration. As a climax he brought forth and read a letter from Senator Thurman in 1879, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, making just such a request for papers and information of the Attorney General as the one which the present Attorney General and the President have refused to comply with. The Senate was Democratic then, by a small majority.

At Washington last week the panorama of the second battle of Bull Run was open for the time, when a number of newspaper men, members of congress and were invited to a private view. Among those present was Gen. Cutcheon, who made a close study of the disastrous field of Manassas while engaged in hunting evidence in the Fitz John Porter case. Gen. Cutcheon showed how thoroughly he had studied the field, for though not present at the fight, he was able to indicate every point in the field and give the positions held in that memorable conflict. He did this so well that he won a great deal of praise from a number of federal and confederate ex-officers present, who participated in the fight 24 years ago.

The Knights of Labor at their gathering in Lansing to form a State Assembly, held an informal or preliminary meeting in order, as the Chairman expressed it, to give the orators a chance to relieve themselves, as well as to become acquainted with each other and the wishes and needs of the various sections of the State. Nearly all the delegates that spoke had the same story to tell of members who had entered the Order for political purposes, of others who had been induced to join through curiosity, and of still others whose sole purpose was to betray the men to their employers. But the Order had grown out of babyhood, and expelled many who were mere self-seekers, had suspended the "curios" when their dues ran behind, and were now building from sound material that carried influence, and men determined to secure their own rights as well as to protect the rights of others. The chief danger now seems to lie in the abundance of material and eagerness of new workmen, and Grand Master Workman Powderly, has ordered the suspension of the work of organizing Assemblies of the Knights for forty days. Applications for charters are said to be pouring into the head office at the rate of fifty per day, and this stoppage is ordered lest the Order should run away with itself for lack of discipline in its secret work.

It is generally understood that G. R. & I. railroad capital is at the bottom of the Mancelona furnace syndicate, or at least their "moral influence," and that they have an eye on the Ironton plant. Hence their recent survey.

In October, 1884, Mrs. Jessie Lull and sister died at Horton's Bay, and were buried at that place. Last week their remains were taken up and removed to Van Buren County, the home of their childhood, for final interment.

The Mancelona Furnace Company effected an organization at Grand Rapids last week Friday; capital stock $100,000. The following officers were elected: T. J. O'Brien, president; Jas. Barnett, vice-president; J. C. Holt, secretary and treasurer; Ed Fitzgerald, manager.

DOES FUEL-RAISING PAY.

This depends on circumstances. It is not economical to raise trees for fuel on land worth from $50 to $100 per acre, especially when coal is abundant and cheap. In most cases land is not worth $50 per acre for agricultural purposes except in places that are near a large town and where there are good facilities for transportation. In such localities almost everything produced on farms will have a market value, and coal will be comparatively cheap. It will accordingly be the best economy to raise stock, grain, vegetables, or fruit, to sell them in town, and to purchase coal with a portion of the money received. It takes several years for quick growing trees, such as willows, poplars, and whitewoods, to reach a size that they will afford good fuel. At least twenty years are required to raise hardwood trees of a size that will afford good cordwood. During this time crops of corn, potatoes, grass, and small grains could be produced on the land that is devoted to the production of trees. The product of ten acres of good land would in twenty years produce a fund the interest of which would keep a family supplied with coal for all time.

But on many farms which are worth $50 or upward per acre there is considerable land that is not suitable for cultivation. Some of it is quite certain to be broken, rocky, subject to washing, quite low, or having a soil that does not produce paying crops. This land will produce trees if the proper varieties are selected. The cultivated crops will only grow on fruitful soil, that can be worked to advantage with ordinary implements. But little can be realized from a crop of grass produced on very poor and uneven land. It costs much to cut and cure it for hay, and unless much labor is expended on it the land will not be profitable if devoted to grazing purposes. Still, this land will produce good trees. Observation shows that the land that is the most suitable for cultivated crops is not the best for forest trees. The latter will live and thrive on land that will not produce paying crops of any sort of grain or vegetable. Some of the finest forests in the country shade soil that is unfit for cultivation. Cultivated plants rely for their sustenance on soil within a very few inches of the surface of the ground, but trees send their roots so deep into the earth that the condition of the surface soil is a matter of small importance.

The best disposition to make of land on any farm that is unfit for cultivation is to plant it to trees. If it is too moist to plow or to produce good grass it is quite likely that some varieties of the ash, poplar, willow, or larch will succeed well on it. If it is high, broken, or rocky all kinds of nut-bearing trees, maples, and evergreens will grow well upon it. The trees will improve the farm to some extent, will hide the portions of the soil that had an uninviting appearance, and will beautify the place. The production of the trees will cost very little, as the ground they occupy is useless for other purposes. The trees will supply fuel after a certain number of years, and will reduce the cost of warming the house. Wealthy farmers can enjoy the luxury of an open fire during the winter season if they produce the wood to keep it up on their own places, and can cut and prepare it with the help they ordinarily keep. The open wood fire deserves to rank with the greatest comforts of life, but it can be enjoyed almost without expense by persons who raise trees on their farms. The branches that are removed by pruning a few acres of timber trees will afford fuel enough to support at least one fire.

With [illegible] it pays to raise trees to produce fuel in [illegible] of the country where land is cheap, and where coal is dear on account of the remoteness of the mines or the great cost of transportation. The cost of hauling coal over the poor roads that are common in newly settled portions of the west is considerable. It often happens that a great amount of suffering takes place in consequence of getting out of coal when the common roads are impassable on account of the snow or the railroads are prevented from moving heavy freight. In many places during the past few winters farmers living quite a distance from a railway station have been compelled during the prevalence of long storms to burn corn, of which they had but a small amount, in order to keep from freezing. With only a few acres of trees on their places they would have been comparatively comfortable, notwithstanding the severe cold and the bad condition of the roads. A good wood lot near the dwelling insures a supply of fuel at the time when it is the most needed.

Farmers living a long distance from a good market have to study how they can supply themselves with the necessities and comforts of life without spending much money. If they can raise trees they can have fuel for cooking their food and warming their dwelling without expending money for coal. Wood is the best fuel to use in keeping up a fire to do cooking during warm weather. Especially is this the case when the house is small, as it is likely to be on farms that are not well improved. It requires but little labor to prepare wood for burning in the old-fashioned air-tight or common box stove. Hard coal is scarcely ever used in the west outside of large towns. The choice is between wood and an inferior sort of soft coal. The former is greatly superior for cooking, especially in summer. It is also much better for heating a room that is well finished and furnished, as it is cleaner to handle, while it produces scarcely any smoke. A good wood lot saves the expenditure of money, prevents anxiety, and adds greatly to the comfort of a family.

The Unhappy Gobbler.

And the butcher's just a-looking 'round for him—'round for him,
And the dinner guests for sweetments are a squabbling—are a squabbling,
Then a turkey's life is not a happy one—happy one.
When the day star's shining high above his brother—'bove his brother,
And the hungry newsboy grasps the sugared bun—sugared bun,
Taking one consideration with another—with another
A turkey's lot is not a happy one.

A young Creole named Uilln has just returned to New Orleans after a series of remarkable adventures, extending over a period of twenty years, broken in health, but not in spirits. During his absence he was a lieutenant in the navy, inventor of a machine for which he got 200,000 in Paris, a gambler who spent that money in a year, a soldier in the French army in Mexico, a builder of dredges for the Suez Canal, and now an agent for De Lesseps in Panama. Few men have experienced equal vicissitudes.

Sheriffs' and Judges' Robes.

I recently referred to the fact that an English county gentleman complained that as he looks like an [illegible] sheriff he wished to be spared that indignity. I very much doubt that [illegible] would show a like [illegible] and [illegible] when that he, owing to custom, looked like an ass robed as a judge. Between the sheriff's and the judge's costume there is not much to choose, so far as grotesqueness goes. If anything, the judge's is rather the more absurd. But then his lordship carries it off better, partly, no doubt, because he is more accustomed to it, and partly because he is paid for wearing it. I know, of course, the stock argument in favor of these disguises—the majesty of the law must be maintained. But why, I wonder, does the law (like the African chieftain in the red waistcoat) only care to be majestic by his clothing? A plainly-dressed policeman captures the criminal, a plainly dressed magistrate sends him for trial, and a plainly-dressed hangman finishes him. But at his trial he must have a sheriff with sword and ruffles, and a judge in red cloth, rabbit skin, horse-hair, and black cap. Surely, it would be better to divide these "properties" among the various officers of the law employed in the transaction. Let the policeman (so much exposed to the weather) have the rabbit skin and the magistrate the red cloth. The wig alone would be sufficient to maintain the dignity of the judge, and the black cap obviously belongs to the hangman.

Although as high as 250,000 alligator skins have been tanned in a single year in the United States and Europe, it is said there is not a single tanner of those hides in the Southern states.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life-giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system, carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood, if pure, makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no other. Sold by Dr. Crouter and Perry Weed.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor.

The pronoun "I" will not fall into innocuous desuetude during Mr Cleveland's administration.

A rather apochryphal story is told by a New York Herald relative to Senators Logan and Evarts. During the New Yorker's speech at the Detroit banquet a gentleman leaned over to Logan and whispered: "Senator Evarts is a very fine speaker, isn't he?" "Yes, indeed," returned the Illinois statesman, "but do you know the little cuss wants to be president?"

It is claimed that Mr. Gladstone's land scheme for Ireland will add at the lowest estimate $200,000,000 to the British debt, which now reaches $4,000,000,000. This is the smallest sum for which the goverment could purchase such lands in Ireland necessary to carry out Mr. Gladstone's plans, and this is the rock on which the premier's policy is likely to encounter shipwreck.

Col. Ingersoll's religion does not meet the requirements of a large number of people but at the same time there are people who think that his head is cool on some subjects. He is reported as saying: "I have talked with presidents and senators and congressmen and public men of all parties, and I have never yet found one of them who was sincerely for civil service reform as it is advocated and put into practice now."

All the evidence goes to show that the democrats of the house are not at all easy with the elections to be held next fall, which will decide the complexion of the next house. The party is very much demoralized on account of the disagreement with the executive and upon the the internal disputes about the tariff and silver questions. The leading members look upon the situation as very threatening. Added to this there are the constantly widening faction splits in the party organization in almost every state over the jealousies and heartburnings arising from the division of the spoils.

That was a strong speech made by Senator Edmunds on the right of the Senate not only to conduct its own business but to have access to the official files of the departments relating to topics under discussion or consideration. As a climax he brought forth and read a letter from Senator Thurman in 1879, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, making just such a request for papers and information of the Attorney General as the one which the present Attorney General and the President have refused to comply with. The Senate was Democratic then, by a small majority.

At Washington last week the panorama of the second battle of Bull Run was open for the time, when a number of newspaper men, members of congress and were invited to a private view. Among those present was Gen. Cutcheon, who made a close study of the disastrous field of Manassas while engaged in hunting evidence in the Fitz John Porter case. Gen. Cutcheon showed how thoroughly he had studied the field, for though not present at the fight, he was able to indicate every point in the field and give the positions held in that memorable conflict. He did this so well that he won a great deal of praise from a number of federal and confederate ex-officers present, who participated in the fight 24 years ago.

The Knights of Labor at their gathering in Lansing to form a State Assembly, held an informal or preliminary meeting in order, as the Chairman expressed it, to give the orators a chance to relieve themselves, as well as to become acquainted with each other and the wishes and needs of the various sections of the State. Nearly all the delegates that spoke had the same story to tell—of members who had entered the Order for political purposes, of others who had been induced to join through curiosity, and of still others whose sole purpose was to betray the men to their employers. But the Order had grown out of babyhood, and expelled many who were mere self-seekers, had suspended the "curios" when their dues ran behind, and were now building from sound material that carried influence, and men determined to secure their own rights as well as to protect the rights of others. The chief danger now seems to lie in the abundance of material and eagerness of new workmen, and Grand Master Workman Powderly, has ordered the suspension of the work of organizing Assemblies of the Knights for forty days. Applications for charters are said to be pouring into the head office at the rate of fifty per day, and this stoppage is ordered lest the Order should run away with itself for lack of discipline in its secret work.

The Friant will run to East Jordan and a boat of like proportions will run to Boyne City the coming season.

The Bay View Chautauqua assembly, will publish a daily paper during their session of ten days next summer.

Messrs. Fell, Hill & Co., of Petoskey, who recently lost their shingle mill, are making necessary arrangements for rebuilding, and expect to be ready for business early this spring.

P. B. Wachtel, recently of the firm of Curtis, Wachtel & Co., Bankers, Petoskey, and Attorney E. C. Barnum, have formed a partnership for the purpose of engaging in the insurance business.

The men of Rose & Powell are busy putting wires into the stores and dwellings of Petoskey, and in a short time the yellow light of the kerosene lamps will give place to the white glare of electricity.

It is generally understood that G. R. & I. railroad capital is at the bottom of the Mancelona furnace syndicate, or at least their "moral influence," and that they have an eye on the Ironton plant. Hence their recent survey.

In October, 1884, Mrs. Jessie Lull and sister died at Horton's Bay, and were buried at that place. Last week their remains were taken up and removed to Van Buren County, the home of their childhood, for final interment.

The Mancelona Furnace Company effected an organization at Grand Rapids last week Friday; capital stock $100,000. The following officers were elected: T. J. O'Brien, president; Jas. Barnett, vice-president; J. C. Holt, secretary and treasurer; Ed Fitzgerald, manager.

Mrs. E. C. Campbell has leased her hotel property at Mackinaw City with the intention of locating in Traverse City. At present she is in attendance on the sick bed of her father, Mr. Hazen Ingalls, of Petoskey. Her daughter Miss Clara, has preceded her to Traverse City.

Messrs. Curtis and Wylie of Petoskey have arranged to occupy the brick store of W. J. Orser, on Mitchell-st., for the business of the Petoskey City Bank during the erection of their new block. The front elevation of the new building is very handsome and substantial, and when completed it will be an ornament to the village.

Boyne City Statesman: The Village Treasurer's report will be found in this issue, and it will be seen that there is $60.33 in the treasury. No taxes were received, there being no assessment made, except from saloon licenses granted. The village is out of debt, and much valuable improvement has been made on the streets and in building sidewalks.

At a recent meeting of the Petoskey Business Men's Association, a committee consisting of Messrs. Wachtel, Newberry and Bontecou, of Petoskey, and Messrs. Hampton and Dickenson, of Harbor Springs, was appointed under instructions to ascertain the cost of advertising matter and estimate the cost of circulation, and also, to confer with the business men of Charlevoix and Boyne City with a view to making it a joint enterprise to report at a subsequent meeting.

The vats at the state fish hatchery at Petoskey are alive with young white fish. The season's hatch will amount to 28,000,000, said to be the greatest ever known. The distribution has already begun; 550,000 have been planted in Little Traverse bay; 4,000,000 in Torch lake, and 2,000,000 each in Burt and Mullet lakes, and the balance will be distributed in Lakes Michigan, Huron and Superior. Great results are anticipated by the fishermen from the planting of such a large number of young white fish.

The Old Settlers' Association of the Counties of Antrim, Kalkaska, Charlevoix and Grand Traverse, held its annual meeting at Elk Rapids, Tuesday, March 9th. The Elk Rapids band furnished excellent music for the occasion. A dance, the largest ever held in Elk Rapids, occurred in the evening—some four hundred being present. Prof. Wallace's orchestra making music for the occasion. Officers elected for next year: President, James J. McLaughlin; Vice Presidents, John McDonald; Grand Traverse; W. J. Getty, Kalkaska; C. P. McIntyre, Charlevoix; Alex. Campbell, Antrim; Secretary, Lowell Sours; Treasurer, Moses F. Gates. Orvis D. Wood, of Charlevoix, was elected one of the historians.

Can any one bring us a case of Kidney or Liver Complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure? We say they can not, as thousands of cases already permanently cured and who are daily recommending Electric Bitters, will prove. Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Weak Back, or any urinary complaint quickly cured. They purify the blood, regulate the bowels, and act directly on the diseased parts. Every bottle guaranteed. For sale at 50c. a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

You will notice how quickly a thoroughly successful article is imitated, and also that the imitations are without merit, as they are gotten up by unscrupulous parties. Beware of imitations of Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic. The genuine is sold by Druggists, and promptly cures dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malaria diseases, poor appetite, low spirits, headache, or diseases of the kidneys, stomach and liver. Price fifty cents.

An Enterprising, Reliable House.

Dr. G. W. WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinest; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

DOES FUEL-RAISING PAY.

This depends on circumstances. It is not economical to raise trees for fuel on land worth from $50 to $100 per acre, especially when coal is abundant and cheap. In most cases land is not worth $50 per acre for agricultural purposes except in places that are near a large town and where there are good facilities for transportation. In such localities almost everything produced on farms will have a market value, and coal will be comparatively cheap. It will accordingly be the best economy to raise stock, grain, vegetables, or fruit, to sell them in town, and to purchase coal with a portion of the money received. It takes several years for quick-growing trees, such as willows, poplars, and whitewoods, to reach a size that they will afford good fuel. At least twenty years are required to raise hardwood trees of a size that will afford good cordwood. During this time crops of corn, potatoes, grass, and small grains could be produced on the land that is devoted to the production of trees. The product of ten acres of good land would in twenty years produce a fund the interest of which would keep a family supplied with coal for all time.

But on many farms which are worth $50 or upward per acre there is considerable land that is not suitable for cultivation. Some of it is quite certain to be broken, rocky, subject to washing, quite low, or having a soil that does not produce paying crops. This land will produce trees if the proper varieties are selected. The cultivated crops will only grow on fruitful soil, that can be worked to advantage with ordinary implements. But little can be realized from a crop of grass produced on very poor and uneven land. It costs much to cut and cure it for hay, and unless much labor is expended on it the land will not be profitable if devoted to grazing purposes. Still, this land will produce good trees. Observation shows that the land that is the most suitable for cultivated crops is not the best for forest trees. The latter will live and thrive on land that will not produce paying crops of any sort of grain or vegetable. Some of the finest forests in the country shade soil that is unfit for cultivation. Cultivated plants rely for their sustenance on soil within a very few inches of the surface of the ground, but trees send their roots so deep into the earth that the condition of the surface soil is a matter of small importance.

The best disposition to make of land on any farm that is unfit for cultivation is to plant it to trees. If it is too moist to plow or to produce good grass it is quite likely that some varieties of the ash, poplar, willow, or larch will succeed well on it. If it is high, broken, or rocky all kinds of nut-bearing trees, maples, and evergreens will grow well upon it. The trees will improve the farm to some extent, will hide the portions of the soil that had an uninviting appearance, and will beautify the place. The production of the trees will cost very little, as the ground they occupy is useless for other purposes. The trees will supply fuel after a certain number of years, and will reduce the cost of warming the house. Wealthy farmers can enjoy the luxury of an open fire during the winter season if they produce the wood to keep it up on their own places, and can cut and prepare it with the help they ordinarily keep. The open wood fire deserves to rank with the greatest comforts of life, but it can be enjoyed almost without expense by persons who raise trees on their farms. The branches that are removed by pruning a few acres of timber trees will afford fuel enough to keep it at least one fire.

With little doubt it pays to raise trees to produce fuel in portions of the country where land is cheap, and where coal is dear on account of the remoteness of the mines or the great cost of transportation. The cost of hauling coal over the poor roads that are common in newly settled portions of the west is considerable. It often happens that a great amount of suffering takes place in consequence of getting out of coal when the common roads are impassable on account of the snow or the railroads are prevented from moving heavy freight. In many places during the past few winters farmers living quite a distance from a railway station have been compelled during the prevalence of long storms to burn corn, of which they had but a small amount, in order to keep from freezing. With only a few acres of trees on their places they would have been comparatively comfortable, notwithstanding the severe cold and the bad condition of the roads. A good wood lot near the dwelling insures a supply of fuel at the time when it is the most needed.

Farmers living a long distance from a good market have to study how they can supply themselves with the necessities and comforts of life without spending much money. If they can raise trees they can have fuel for cooking their food and warming their dwelling without expending money for coal. Wood is the best fuel to use in keeping up a fire to do cooking during warm weather. Especially is this the case when the house is small, as it is likely to be on farms that are not well improved. It requires but little labor to prepare wood for burning in the old-fashioned air-tight or common box stove. Hard coal is scarcely ever used in the west outside of large towns. The choice is between wood and an inferior sort of soft coal. The former is greatly superior for cooking, especially in summer. It is also much better for heating a room that is well finished and furnished, as it is cleaner to handle, while it produces scarcely any smoke. A good wood lot saves the expenditure of money, prevents anxiety, and adds greatly to the comfort of a family.

The Unhappy Gobbler.

When the fat Thanksgiving turkey's not a gobbling—not a gobbling;
And the butcher's just a-looking 'round for fifty—round for fun,
And the dining guests for experiments are a squabbling—are a squabbling,
Then a turkey's life is not a happy one—happy one.
When the dog star's shining high above his brother—loves his brother,
And the hungry newsboy grasps the sugared bun—sugared bun,
Taking one consideration with another—with another,
A turkey's lot is not a happy one.

A young Creole named Ulin has just returned to New Orleans after a series of remarkable adventures, extending over a period of twenty years, broken in health, but not in spirits. During his absence he was a lieutenant in the navy, inventor of a machine for which he got $60,000 in Paris, a gambler who spent that money in a year, a soldier in the French army in Mexico, a builder of dredges for the Suez Canal, and now an agent for De Lesseps in Panama. Few men have experiened equal vicissitudes.

Sheriffs' and Judges' Robes.

I recently referred to the fact that an English country [illegible] complained that [illegible] he wished to be spared [illegible] I very much wish that one of our judges would show a like boldness, and boldly admit that he, owing to custom, looked like an [illegible] as a judge. Between the sheriff's and the judge's costume there is not much to choose, so far as grotesqueness goes. If anything, the judge's is rather the more absurd. But then his lordship carries it off better, partly, no doubt, because he is more accustomed to it, and partly because he is paid for wearing it. I know, of course, the stock argument in favor of these disguises—the majesty of the law must be maintained. But why, I wonder, does the law (like the African chieftain in the red waistcoat) only care to be majestic by his clothing? A plainly-dressed policeman captures the criminal, a plainly dressed magistrate sends him for trial, and a plainly-dressed hangman finishes him. But at his trial he must have a sheriff with sword and ruffles, and a judge in red cloth, rabbit skin, horsehair, and black cap. Surely, it would be better to divide these "properties" among the various officers of the law employed in the transaction. Let the policeman (so much exposed to the weather) have the rabbit skin and the magistrate the red cloth. The wig alone would be sufficient to maintain the dignity of the judge, and the black cap obviously belongs to the hangman.—London Truth.

Although as high as 250,000 alligator skins have been tanned in a single year in the United States and Europe, it is said there is not a single tanner of these hides in the Southern States.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life-giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system, carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood, if pure, makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no other. Sold by Dr. Crouter and Perry Weed.

THE month of March is usually the most trying upon delicate constitutions of any month of the year. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

BY TELEGRAPH AND MAIL.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

MONDAY, March 1.—A bill was introduced in the Senate to legalize the incorporation of National trades unions. A message was read from the President concerning his official removals and appointments, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee. In the House bills were introduced: To repeal the patent laws now in force and establish another system of rewards for inventions, to repeal the internal revenue laws; to create a department of industry and bureau of labor; to admit free of duty lumber, salt, coke, coal and iron ore produced or mined in Canada; and for the distribution of the surplus moneys in the treasury, during the next four years, among the respective States in proportion to their representation in the Senate and House. A resolution was introduced to investigate the past and present administration of the Pension Office. A resolution to suspend the rules and pass the Mexican Pension bill, with a proviso excepting from its provisions persons politically disabled, was presented, but no action was taken.

TUESDAY, March 2.—In the Senate a bill was introduced authorizing the President to invite the Presidents of the sixteen American republics to meet in Washington on the 4th of March, 1889, in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the constitution of the parent republic of the United States. The House bill to increase the pensions of widows and dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors was reported with an amendment that the amount be four dollars instead of two dollars a month to minor children. The Educational bill was further discussed. A message was received from the President urging measures to protect Chinamen in the Western States and Territories, and insisting upon the punishment of citizens who commit outrages upon them. In the House the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill and the bill extending until July 1, 1888, the time within which application for arrears of pensions may be filed were reported.

WEDNESDAY, March 3.—Bills were introduced in the Senate to modify the law relating to the sinking fund so that hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall not be required to pay or redeem over $50,000,000 annually of the principal of the debt of the United States, and to allow the sale of goods by sample in any State or Territory or in the district of Columbia by residents of other States or Territories. A petition was presented from citizens of New Jersey for the legal protection of young girls in all localities under the jurisdiction of Congress. The Educational bill and the Pension bill were further discussed. In the House the Army Appropriation bill ($23,887,588) was reported; also a bill to establish agricultural experimental stations in connection with colleges established in the several States. The message of the President on the Chinese troubles was read by the clerk.

FROM WASHINGTON.

THE exchanges at twenty-six leading clearing houses in the United States during the week ended on the 27th ult. aggregated $810,580,438, against $957,391,492 the previous week. As compared with the corresponding week of 1885, the increase amounts to 27.6 per cent.

In the House the Pension Appropriation bill, after a spirited debate, was passed by a vote of 241 yeas, only Mr. Bennett (N. C.) voting against it. Several bills for public buildings at various places were also passed.

THE SENATE DEFIED.

President Cleveland Promulgates a Lengthy Document Flatly Refusing to Furnish Unofficial Papers Bearing on Removals from Office—The Senate Strikes Back by Declining to Confirm Several Nominations.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The President sent to the Senate yesterday a message stating his position in relation to the suspension of officials and defending his action in refusing to send to the Senate papers on file in departments upon which it is assumed by the Senate that the suspensions of certain officials are based. The message was read in the open session of the Senate. It is as follows:

TO THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES: Ever since the beginning of the present session of the Senate the different heads of the departments attached to the executive branch of the Government have been plied with various requests and demands from committees of the Senate, from members of such committees, and at last from the Senate itself, requiring the transmission of reasons for the suspension of certain officials during the recess of that body, or for the papers touching the conduct of such officials, or for all papers and documents relating to such suspensions, or for all documents and papers filed in such departments in relation to the management and conduct of the offices held by such suspended officials. The different terms from time to time adopted in making these requests and demands, the order in which they succeeded each other, and the fact that when made by the Senate the resolution for that purpose was passed in executive session, have led to a presumption, the correctness of which will, I suppose, be candidly admitted, that from first to last the information thus sought and the papers thus demanded were for use by the Senate and its committees in considering the propriety of the suspensions referred to.

Though these suspensions are my executive acts, based upon considerations addressed to me alone, and for which I am wholly responsible, I have had no invitation from the Senate to state the position which I have felt constrained to assume in relation to the same, or to interpret for myself my acts and motives in the premises. In this condition of affairs I have forborne addressing the Senate upon the subject lest I might be accused of thrusting myself unbidden upon the attention of that body. But the report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, lately presented and published, which censures the Attorney-General of the United States for his refusal to transmit certain papers relating to a suspension from office, and which also, if I correctly interpret it, evinces a misapprehension of the position of the Executive upon the question of such suspensions, will, I hope, justify this communication.

The President refers to the resolution of the Senate calling for the Duskin papers and the reply of the Attorney-General thereto, and says:

Upon this resolution and the answer thereto the issue is thus stated by the Committee on the Judiciary at the outset of the report:

"The important question, then, is whether it is within the constitutional competence of either House of Congress to have access to the official papers and documents in the various public offices of the United States created by laws enacted by themselves." * * * While it is by no means conceded that the Senate has the right in any case to review the act of the Executive in removing or suspending a public officer upon official documents or otherwise, it is considered that documents and papers of that nature should, because they are official, be freely transmitted to the Senate upon its demand, trusting the use of the same for proper and legitimate purposes to the good faith of that body. * * *

The letter of the Attorney-General in response to the resolution of the Senate to the particular case mentioned in the committee's report was written at my suggestion and by my direction. There had been no official papers or documents filed in his department relating to the case within the period specified in the resolution. The letter was intended, by its description of the papers and documents remaining in the custody of the department, to convey the idea that they were not official; and it was assumed that the resolutions called for information, papers and documents of the same character as were required by the requests and demands which preceded it. Every thing that had been written or done in behalf of the Senate from the beginning pointed to all letters and papers of a private and unofficial nature as to the objects of search, if they were to be found in the departments, and provided they had been presented to the Executive with a view to their consideration upon the question of suspension from office.

Against the transmission of such papers and documents I have interposed my advice and direction. This has not been done, as is suggested in the committee's report, upon the assumption on my part that the Attorney-General or any other head of a department "is the servant of the President, and is to give or withhold copies of documents in his office according to the will of the Executive and not otherwise," but because I regarded the papers and documents withheld and addressed to me or intended for my own use and action purely unofficial and private, not infrequently confidential, and having reference to the performance of a duty exclusively mine. I consider them in no proper sense as upon the files of the department, but as deposited there for my convenience, remaining still completely under my control. I suppose, if I desired to take them into my custody, I might do so with entire propriety, and if I saw fit to destroy them, no one could complain.

The papers and documents that are now the objects of the Senate's quest consist of letters and representations addressed to the Executive or intended for his inspection; they are voluntarily written and presented by private citizens who are not in the least instigated thereto by any official invitation or at all subject to official control. While some of them are entitled to Executive consideration, many of them are so irrelevant, or, in the light of other facts, so worthless, that they have not been given the least weight in determining the question to which they are supposed to relate. Are all these, simply because they are preserved, to be considered official documents and subject to the inspection of the Senate? If not, who is to determine which belongs to this class? Are the motives and purposes of the Senate, as they are day by day developed, such as would be satisfied with my selection? Am I to submit to theirs at the risk of being charged with making a suspension from office upon evidence which was not even considered? Are these papers to be regarded official because they have not only been presented but preserved in the public offices? Their nature and character remain the same whether they are kept in the executive mansion or deposited in the departments. There is no mysterious power of transmutation in departmental custody, nor is there magic in the undefined and sacred solemnity of department files. If the presence of these papers in the public offices is a stumbling block in the way of the performance of Senatorial duty, it can be easily removed.

The papers and documents which have been described derive no official character from any constitutional, statutory, or other requirement making them necessary to the performance of the official duty of the Executive. It will not be denied, I suppose, that the President may suspend a public officer in the entire absence of any papers or documents to aid his official judgment and discretion. And I am quite prepared to avow that the cases are not few in which suspensions from office have depended more upon oral representations made to me by citizens of known good repute, and by members of the House of Representatives and Senators of the United States, than upon any letters and documents presented for my examination. I have not felt justified in suspecting the veracity, integrity and patriotism of Senators, or ignoring their representations, because they were not in party affiliation with the majority of their associates; and I recall a few suspensions which bear the approval of individual members identified politically with the majority in the Senate. While, therefore, I am constrained to deny the right of the Senate to the papers and documents described, so far as the right to the same is based upon the claim that they are in any view of the subject official, I am also led unequivocally to dispute the right of the Senate, by the aid of any documents whatever, or in any way save through the judicial process of trial on impeachment, to review or reverse the act of the Executive in the suspension during the recess of the Senate of Federal officials.

I believe the power to remove or suspend such officials is vested in the President alone by the constitution, which in express terms provides that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America," and that "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." The Senate belongs to the legislative branch of the Government. When the constitution by express provision superadded to its legislative duties the right to advise and consent to appointments to office and to sit as a court of impeachment it conferred upon that body all the control and regulation of executive action supposed to be necessary for the safety of the people; and this express and special grant of such extraordinary powers, not in any way related to or growing out of general Senatorial duty, and in itself a departure from the general plan of our Government, should be held, under a familiar maxim of construction, to exclude every other right of interference with executive functions.

In the first Congress which assembled after the adoption of the constitution, comprising many who aided in its preparation, a legislative construction was given to that instrument in which the independence of the Executive in the matter of removals from office was fully sustained. I think it will be found that in the subsequent discussions of this question, there was generally, if not at all times, a proposition pending to in some way curtail this power of the President by legislation, which furnishes evidence that to limit such power it was supposed to be necessary to supplement the constitution by such legislation.

The first enactment of this description was passed under a stress of partisanship and political bitterness which culminated in the President's impeachment. This law provided that the Federal officers to which it applied could only be suspended during the recess of the Senate when shown by evidence satisfactory to the President to be guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or when incapable or disqualified to perform their duties, and that within twenty days after the next meeting of the Senate it should be the duty of the President "to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case." This statute, passed in 1867, when Congress was overwhelmingly and bitterly opposed, politically, to the President, may be regarded as an indication that even then it was thought necessary by a Congress determined upon the subjugation of the Executive to legislative will to furnish itself a law for that purpose, instead of attempting to reach the object intended by an invocation of any pretended constitutional right. The law which thus found its way to our statute-book was plain in its terms, and its intent needed no avowal. If valid and now in operation it would justify the present course of the Senate and command the obedience of the Executive to its demands. It may, however, be remarked in passing that under this law the President had the privilege of presenting to the body which assumed to review the Executive acts his reasons therefor, instead of being excluded from explanation or judged by papers found in the departments.

Two years after the law of 1867 was passed, and within less than five weeks after the inauguration of a President in political accord with both branches of Congress, the sections of the act regulating suspensions from office during the recess of the Senate were entirely repealed, and in their place were substituted provisions which, instead of limiting the causes of suspension to misconduct, crime, disability or disqualification, expressly permitted such suspension by the President "in his discretion," and completely abandoned the requirement obliging him to report to the Senate "the evidence and reasons" for his action. With these modifications and with all branches of the Government in political harmony, and in the absence of partisan incentive to captious obstruction, the law, as it was left by the amendment of 1869, was much less destructive of Executive discretion; and yet the great General and patriotic citizen who, on the 4th day of March, 1869, assumed the duties of Chief Executive, and for whose freer administration of his high office the most hateful restraints of the law of 1867 were, on the 5th day of April, 1869, removed, mindful of his obligation to defend and protect every prerogative of his great trust, and apprehensive of the injury threatened the public service in the continued operation of these statutes, even in their modified form, in his first message to Congress advised their repeal and set forth their unconstitutional character and hurtful tendency. I am unable to state whether or not this recommendation for a repeal of these laws has been since repeated. If it has not, the reason can probably be found in the experience which demonstrated the fact that the necessities of the political situation but rarely developed their vicious character.

And so it happens that, after an existence of nearly twenty years of almost innocuous desuetude, these laws are brought forth, apparently the repealed as well as the unrepealed, and put in the way of an Executive who is willing, if permitted, to attempt an improvement in the methods of administration. The constitutionality of these laws is by no means admitted. But why should the provisions of the repealed law, which required specific cause for suspension and a report to the Senate of "evidence and reasons," be now, in effect, applied to the present Executive instead of the law, afterward passed and unrepealed, which distinctly permits "suspensions by the President" in his discretion, and carefully omits the requirement that "evidence and reasons for his action in the case" shall be reported to the Senate?

The requests and demands which by the score have for nearly three months been presented to the different departments of the Government, whatever may be their form, have but one complexion. They assume the right of the Senate to sit in judgment upon the exercise of my executive function, for which I am solely responsible to the people from whom I have so lately received the sacred trust of office. My oath to support and defend the constitution, my duty to the people who have chosen me to execute the powers of their great office and not to relinquish them, and my duty to the chief magistracy, which I must preserve unimpaired in all its dignity and vigor, compel me to refuse compliance with these demands. To the end that the service may be improved the Senate is invited to the fullest scrutiny of the persons submitted to them for public office, in recognition of the constitutional power of that body to advise and consent to their appointment.

I shall continue, as I have thus far done, to furnish, at the request of the confirming body, all the information I possess touching the fitness of the nominees placed before them for their action, both when they are proposed to fill vacancies and to take the place of suspended officials. [illegible]

[illegible]

Neither the discontent of party friends, nor the allurements constantly offered of confirmations of appointees conditioned upon the avowal that suspensions have been made on party grounds alone, nor the threat proposed in the resolutions now before the Senate that no confirmations will be made unless the demands of that body be complied with, is sufficient to discourage or deter me from following in the way which I am convinced leads to better government for the people.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C., March 1, 1886.

When the President's message had been read Mr. Edmunds asked that [illegible] the communication of the President to Parliament. He also said he had been unintentionally no doubt, misrepresented [illegible]

"I think I am safe in saying that it is the first time in the history of the country that any President of the United States has undertaken to interfere with the deliberations of either house of Congress on questions pending before them otherwise than by message on the state of the Union which the constitution commands him to make from time to time. This message is a devotion to a question for the Senate itself [illegible] that it has under consideration. [illegible] singularity. I think the people in this country will see it is extraordinary, if in these days of ruling at the Senate [illegible] all can be thought extraordinary of the United States [illegible] the heads of departments, the departments, but the offices created by law—directs them [illegible] certain official papers, [illegible] President of the United States can change the question [illegible] the Senate of his reasons for suspending a civil officer, and not [illegible] "under arrest"—with respect to which [illegible] not undertaken to [illegible] any question at all, [illegible] he has sent to the Senate all [illegible] public papers [illegible] Senate to advise and consent to the removal of one officer and the appointment of another. This is what [illegible] the Senate, in calling for [illegible] wider consideration [illegible] deficiencies [illegible] the condition of [illegible] their officers."

After a little parrying [illegible] the message, the motion of Mr. Edmunds was agreed to, referring it to the Judiciary Committee and ordering it to be printed.

Mr. Pugh, representing the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the views of the minority on the resolution referred to that committee concerning the removal of Mr. Duskin from the office of the District Attorney for the southern district of Alabama. It was ordered printed in the Congressional Record and also in separate form.

The report says that when President Cleveland came into office he found about ninety-five per cent. of the offices filled by Republicans appointed as a reward for party services. The party to whom the President owed his nomination and election had been exiled from all participation in the civil administration of the Government for nearly a quarter of a century. The friends and supporters of the President made application for a redistribution of the public trusts. No other President had ever been subjected to such a severe trial, or had to meet so many grave difficulties, and no other had such an abundant supply of valid reasons and causes urging him to a free exercise of his power of removal from Federal offices. And no other ever resisted with more firmness the just claims of his supporters or used his power of removal more conscientiously, cautiously and sparingly. Notwithstanding these facts the six hundred and fifty nominations sent to the Senate in the suspension cases had been allowed to remain before the committees without consideration and final disposition. Duskin has made no complaint to the Judiciary Committee, the President or the Attorney-General that he was wronged by the suspension. The committee was fully informed that Burnett was recommended to the President by all the members of Congress from Alabama on personal knowledge of his high character. Stripped to the naked truth, without any special pleading, the case made for the Senate on their resolution, and the answer of the Attorney-General is whether the Senate has the right to demand of the Attorney-General the transmission, against the order of the President, of the only paper or document of the description mentioned in the resolution when that paper or document is stated in the refusal to relate exclusively to the removal of Duskin by the President, and for that reason alone is not transmitted. The President holds that it is not a public document, and there can be no doubt about the correctness of his decision, and it must be accepted as conclusive. The only rightful custodian of such papers is the President.

The report denies the right of the Senate to try the President for an alleged violation of his public pledges. It admits that the President did declare that he would not remove officials merely because they were Republicans, but says he at the same time declared that he would decapitate office-holders who had been guilty of offensive partisanship. The President, it says, declines to submit voluntarily to the decisions of a tribunal having no jurisdiction over the question, the sufficiency of such cause for suspensions, especially when his fear is that such conduct in the officer might be regarded by the Republican majority as a reason for the retention of the incumbent in office.

The Senate, in executive session, rejected the nomination of Messrs. Pillsbury and Chase to be collectors of internal revenue at Boston, Mass., and Portland, Me., respectively. The nomination of Surveyor-General Beeman of Utah was reported adversely.

BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Three Men Torn to Shreds by the Explosion of the Dry-House at the Powder Mills Near Xenia, O.—Disastrous Effect of the Catastrophe in the Region Round About.

XENIA, O., March 2.—A terrible explosion occurred at the works of the Miami Powder Company yesterday morning at ten o'clock. The dry house, containing fifty thousand pounds of powder, in which Christy McCann, aged fifty, Michael Haney, aged thirty-five, and Henry Franklin, aged thirty, were at work, exploded with a terrible report, heard for a distance of one hundred miles. The three men were blown into atoms and parts of their bodies blown a distance of two miles. Nothing larger than part of a hand was found of either of the bodies. A horse standing near the mill was instantly killed, and a heavy car to which it was attached carried a distance of five hundred feet and landed on the opposite side of the Miami river. All of the buildings at the mills were injured, some entirely demolished. Many farm-houses for miles about had all the window glass broken, and in some cases were unroofed. The house and barn of Andrew Holland, one mile from the mills, was completely demolished, and several of the family seriously injured, one daughter perhaps fatally. Mrs. [illegible] Cromwell, sister of Sheriff Lockhart, who lived in a small house about half a mile from the mills, was at home with five children. The windows and doors were all smashed in, the furniture all destroyed, and Mrs. Cromwell hurled to the floor and one of her arms broken. About a dozen persons sustained injuries, but none of them fatal. The road from this city to the mills, a distance of five miles, is marked with evidences of the explosion. In every house along the route all the window-glass is broken out. The shock in this city was terrible. The people were thrown from chairs, and in many instances sustained injuries.

This is the most destructive explosion that has occurred at the works for years, and at this time it is impossible to estimate the loss of the company, but it will be very heavy. The loss on private property is also very extensive, and will be up in the thousands.

Specials to the afternoon papers from many points in Ohio and Kentucky reported the explosion as a shock of earthquake.

A SMITTEN STATESMAN.

Senator Jones' Infatuation for a Michigan Heiress—Rejected by the Lady He Asks the Intercession of Church Officials.

DETROIT, Mich., March 2.—The story of United States Senator Jones' singularly persistent pursuit of Miss Victoria Palms, whose hand he seeks in marriage has so turned as to make it common property. The facts are thus related by a gentleman who is acquainted with them minutely:

Three years ago ex-Mayor Thompson, while on a pleasure trip East, met Senator Jones for the first time at the Ocean House, Newport. Jones seemed a good fellow, bright and somewhat intellectual, and Mr. Thompson, in an off-hand, hospitable way, invited him to visit him in Detroit and see how he ran things as mayor of the city. Jones visited Detroit, and during a social evening at the mayor's home was introduced to Miss Palms. He was a widower and a United States Senator. She had youth and money. He was smitten. A week after he called upon the young lady, summarily proposed marriage, and was as summarily rejected. I understand from relatives that he never had another interview with her. However, he was not dismayed by her refusal, and continued to prosecute his suit by letter. After he left the city the young lady was fairly inundated with love letters, and I don't think I exaggerate much when I say she received from Washington nearly a ton of the Senator's speeches delivered during his twelve years in the Senate. Early last June the Senator revisited Detroit to again prosecute his suit in person. He called constantly at the house, but never found Miss Palms 'at home' to him. His importunities continued with relentless perseverance until two months ago, when her father forbade him ever entering the house. But the most astonishing part of the persecution—for such I must call it—remains to be told. Miss Palms is a stanch Roman Catholic. The Senator belongs to the same faith. Now, refused by the young lady herself, he seeks the assistance of the Church. Just think of it! Not content with quarreling with two priests whom he offended by the bare suggestion of their interference, he quietly appealed to no less august a personage than the Rt. Rev. Bishop Borgess. The Bishop was appalled, and his answer to a letter from the Senator was one of the most scorching replies ever penned. Throughout the whole affair the lady has conducted herself with the same quiet, womanly dignity that has graced her everyday life. She is keenly mortified at the notoriety the Senator's importunities have thrust upon her. There is no truth in the story that Senator Jones was smitten with a widow. His only love affair—one-sided to be sure—was the one I have told.

Miss Palms is the daughter of Francis Palms, who is commonly reputed to be the wealthiest man in Michigan. He is long past seventy years, and his fortune of $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 is likely to go in bulk to the daughter whom the smitten Senator has so long pursued.

Blaze in a Lumber-Yard.

NEW YORK, March 2.—Fire started in Rodine Bros.' lumber yard, at West Brighton, L. I., yesterday afternoon, with a still gale blowing. Engines from neighboring towns were called to assist in fighting the flames. At ten o'clock the fire was thought to be under control. The loss will reach $75,000; insurance, $31,000.

JUSTICE FOR JOHN.

President Cleveland's Message Denouncing the War Against the Chinese—He Thinks the Victims are Without Legal Redress, but Suggests That They Be Reimbursed by a Bounty Measure.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The President yesterday sent to Congress a message treating on the Chinese outrages in Wyoming. After referring to the restrictive legislation of 1880 the President says the condition of the Chinese question in the Western States and Territories, despite this restrictive legislation, is far from being satisfactory. The recent outbreak in Wyoming Territory, where numbers of unoffending Chinamen, indisputably within the protection of the treaties and the law, were murdered by a mob, and the still more recent threatened outbreak of the same character in Washington Territory are fresh in the minds of all, and there is apprehension lest the bitterness of feeling against the Mongolian race on the Pacific slope may find vent in similar lawless demonstrations. All the power of this Government should be exerted to maintain the amplest good faith toward China, in the treatment of these men, and the inflexible sternness of the law in bringing the wrong doers to justice should be insisted upon.

"Every effort has been made by this Government to prevent these violent outbreaks and to aid the representatives of China in their investigation of these outrages, and it is but just to say that they are traceable to the lawlessness of men not citizens of the United States and who are engaged in competition with Chinese laborers. Race prejudice is the chief factor in originating these disturbances, and it exists in a large part of our domain, jeopardizing our domestic peace and the good relationship we strive to maintain with China."

Referring to the Rock Spring outbreak in the light that all citizens are entitled to protection whether stipulated by treaty or not, the President remarks: "The facts which so far are not controverted or affected by any exculpatory or mitigating testimony, show the murder of a number of Chinese subjects in September last at Rock Springs, the wounding of many others and the spoliation of the property of all when the unhappy survivors had been driven from their habitations. There is no allegation that the victims by any lawless or disorderly act on their part contributed to bring about a collision; on the contrary, it appears that the law-abiding disposition of the people who were sojourning in our midst under the sanction of hospitality and express treaty obligations was made the pretext for the attack upon them. This outrage upon law and treaty engagements was committed by a lawless mob. None of the aggressors—happily for the National good fame—appear by the reports to have been citizens of the United States. They were aliens engaged in the remote district as mining laborers, who became excited against the Chinese laborers as it would seem because of their refusal to join them in a strike to secure higher wages. Were there no treaty in existence referring to the rights of Chinese subjects; did they come hither as all other strangers who voluntarily resort to this land of freedom, of self-government and of laws, here peaceably to win their bread and to live their lives, there can be no question that they would be entitled still to the same measure of protection from violence and the same free forum for the redress of their grievances as any other aliens."

Coming down to the question of damages which the Chinese Minister, in his correspondence with Secretary Bayard, claims, the President denies that there is any expressed or implied obligation in the treaty or international law which would require the United States to indemnify these Chinamen for losses sustained. While holding this view, the President says that "in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection; and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims," the Executive should "bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country, with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent; is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless."

TOO MUCH SILVER.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Secretary Manning yesterday sent to the House a communication, in reply to the Bland resolution of last month, asking for information concerning the circulation of the standard dollar and the Government's policy in regard to the payment of silver. On the general subject of silver circulation, and in response to the inquiry "whether or not the same policy, as to the payment of silver, is to be pursued in the future as in the past," the Secretary says:

"No kind of currency issued by the United States has been, at any branch of the treasury, disparaged and discredited by withholding another kind of currency to which it was made by law equivalent. I have labored to promote the circulation of silver with unremitting energy. I have pressed its circulation at a constant expense to the treasury when other forms of lawful money could have been circulated without such cost. The operations of the United States Treasury under existing laws can with difficulty be prevented from forcing the Government, in its relation to the people and National banks, to a silver basis. Forcing the silver and silver certificate circulation by too large payments therewith of interest-bearing or other debt would exclude the gold circulation and precipitate a silver basis.

"Forcing the silver accumulation is an addition of $24,000,000 per annum to the vast sum of our Federal taxation. Forced silver circulation, forced silver accumulation—these are the alternatives to which silver coinage has brought us now. But the term when a choice will remain possible between these bad alternatives, silver storage, or a silver basis, is narrowing. Reduction of superfluous taxation, unless the reduction shall include the $24,000,000 spent for silver; reduction of the surplus, if silver debt payments shall surcharge the circulation, will drive us over the ruinous fall from silver storage to a silver basis.

"By careful management, so as neither to contract the currency nor to force a silver basis, silver dollars might be applied to cancel United States notes. By slightly deferring payment of the 3 per cents and by a reduction of the annual interest charge on the 4½ and 4 per cents, the funded loans of 1891 and 1907 (say $500,000,000), we ought pay and cancel every United States note before 1889, the close of the first century under the present constitution, and yet very largely reduce also the present annual burden of taxation."

As to the future silver policy of the department, the Secretary says he will endeavor to comply with the letter and spirit of existing law and exercise all his discretionary power so as to maintain every other dollar created by Congress in such use and circulation "as consists with the preservation of their commercial parity with the gold dollar, leaving that equality exclusively to the sole unit of value."

The Secretary devotes considerable space in his communication to an argument in favor of bimetallism. He says:

It is now become plain to all who take comprehensive and practical views of public policy that the United States can do no better than return at the earliest possible date to a bimetallic unit of value. By this I mean:

1. The monetary unit embodied in coins both of silver and of gold.

2. The monetary unit of value embodied in the silver coin to be made and kept in that successive and simultaneous equivalence with the present and prior unit of value which has been [illegible] since the constitution was framed.

3. Open mints for the free coinage of gold and silver at a fixed ratio to every citizen of the United States bringing either metal, and the right to have his coins received in every sale and payment as full legal tender dollars.

He closes his communication with the remark that it is useless to discuss the methods of restoring bimetallism until Congress shall determine to stop the coinage and place that indispensable condition of negotiation in the hands of those who must execute its will.

An Old Swindler in the Toils.

DETROIT, Mich., March 3.—John Fink, arrested at Philadelphia for swindling the machine screw works of this city, has swindled many people under various aliases in Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Colorado, New England, the Middle and Southern States, and in Canada. He claimed to sell a recipe for a cheap and wonderful lubricator, pretending to furnish a barrel already prepared. The recipe was useless, and the barrel contained ordinary oil slightly doctored to change its appearance. It is estimated that he has obtained $50,000 from his victims.

Exodus of Colored People.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., March 3.—Agents who have been thoroughly canvassing North and South Carolina for colored emigrants say that the colored exodus from the Southern States to the extreme West has only fairly begun. At least three thousand are reported to be now making arrangements to leave during the present season, fully as many having already gone. They state they are going because they are offered regular wages as farm-hands and are becoming impoverished in the South by high rents and small margins.

THE LAND OF THE IDEAL.

Have you been to the land that is over the border—
That wonderful border where real things end?
Do you know the fair land with its infinite order,
Its blessings that ever come trooping to hand,
Where naught is imperfect, but nothing is real;
The beautiful land of the pure ideal?

THE STRANGER MARTYR.

Helpless Children, the Jewels of His Death-Crown.

In a little farming town in the State of New York, I discovered a monument, which from its singular situation, and more singular form, attracted my attention. It stood entirely by itself on a slight conical elevation, and the field around it was cleared of every stick and stone. This, too, notwithstanding the town was new, and the fields generally covered with stumps.

The monument itself was of the whitest Vermont marble, with a granite base. It was plain, as the plot of ground on which it stood, with not the least attempt at ornament, and bore the single inscription "The Stranger Martyr." As I rode leisurely through the town, there was something in this grass-plot, with its plain marble column, which excited my curiosity, and stopping at the nearest farm-house, I received the following version of the stranger's story from the kind old man whom I found there.

It was one of the last days of the month of May, 18—, that a stranger called at my house and wished to get employment as a day laborer. He carried a little bundle upon his shoulder, was dressed in the usual careless manner and coarse clothing, and spoke with a directness and accent that told me plainly enough that he was a New England man. As I was then in possession of some four hundred acres of land, and had made but a small beginning in clearing it up, I was in need of more help than I could procure, and engaged the man at once. Indeed, he accepted my terms without a single word about their being low. It was evident to me that he was the son of some enterprising farmer of the East, just striking out into the world in search of fortune.

I cannot describe the man, for I never became acquainted with him myself. It was a busy season when he arrived, and as I worked in the fields with my help, doing always a full day's labor with them, besides managing my business and being, moreover, very much occupied with my thoughts and plans on the evening of his arrival, I gave little attention to his personal appearance. I only know that he had a very frank, open countenance, with light hair and eyes, of medium height, and not heavy in his build. The impression which he made on me was favorable, and beyond this impression I did not have the time or inclination to go.

Early the following morning, before any one was astir in the house, I arose, and left to attend to some business in the village, which was four miles away. My business detained me until eleven o'clock, when I set out to return in company with Mr. Hadley, a neighbor of mine. He walked to the village for a like purpose as myself, and having completed his purchases, gladly accepted my invitation to ride home in my wagon.

"Have you noticed the smoke here to our right?" said Hadley, as he seated himself. "If the wind continues to freshen, and we get no rain to-day, we shall have something to do besides planting corn, I think. I have been watching it this hour and more, and if it continues to move as rapidly as it has done, we have no time to lose. I have come to dread those fires as I dread nothing else which we have to encounter here." Involuntarily I touched the horses with my well-worn whip. I had a horror of the spring fires, as I had abundant reason. Twice my barns had been burned to the ground, and once my house had been swallowed up by the same devouring element. The soil was sandy, and the timber pine, spruce and hemlock mainly, through which the fire went with tremendous rapidity. Under the pressure of a strong wind nothing could stop it. It took hold of the scurf, climbed trees, leaped through the fallen brush with a velocity and fury which no one will credit who has not seen the like. A prairie on fire is a grand sight, no doubt, yet nothing to a forest on fire—a forest of timber, where the flame has tenfold as much to feed upon, and where no little circle of safety can be made by burning a space clear of everything that will burn.

There had now been two weeks during which not a drop of water had fallen, and the whole spring had been uncommonly dry. The fires which had troubled us heretofore had usually been earlier in the season, sometimes even coming in the last days of April. We had hoped, therefore, having escaped so long, to escape altogether this season. But now it was evident that the woods were on fire, and the wind was fast rising.

"I hope," I replied to Hadley, "that the fire will be unable to make serious headway at this late day in the season. Already there is a considerable growth of vegetation on the ground, and even the trees begin to look green. We may have something of a blaze, but nothing, I think, which will endanger our property."

"Suppose that we drive around and examine a little for ourselves," said Hadley. "It is late in the season truly, but uncommonly dry for the time, and I suspect there is a chance for mischief yet. I can't say that I like the looks of that smoke. It is too fierce and hot. There is a fire at the bottom of it, you may be sure, and growing more serious every hour."

"There is at all events no harm in making observations," I replied, at the same time reining my horses to the right. "It may be that there is more to feel the flame that I have supposed. The smoke certainly has the same old look of vengeance, and it is already evident that we are to have a powerful wind to help it on."

We took a circle of a mile and a half to the right, where we found that the fire had not only swept through old fences, but that it had got a firm lodgment in the great forest which bounded the road running north and south through the town, and which lay to the west of the principal buildings in the settlement. Several men were engaged in bringing water, and digging earth to prevent the destruction of the log house and barn, which a new settler had built the previous summer.

Mr. Hadley and myself joined the group of begrimed laborers, and worked for an hour to ward off destruction from the little fortune of our neighbor, and left only when farther labor was evidently unavailing, the building being in flames, and the very ground beneath our feet alive with coals.

In the hour which we spent at work, the wind gathered fresh energy. As yet there was not a cloud in the sky—not even a speck upon the horizon—it was clear, hot, and fearfully windy. Fearfully so, in view of the perils which it involved. I do not think the wind was serious of itself; probably it would have been thought nothing uncommon, only that the fire lent it an importance and magnified it in the imaginations of all of us. It seemed to be a terrible wind.

In returning, as in going, we followed the road which wound through the valley of a little stream, the hills being high enough to hide the fire from our view, till we ascended directly into the main road, from which we had first made the divergence.

"We have never had anything like this," said Hadley. "Great heavens! What a sight!"

"It is indeed terrible! I can not reconcile my mind to these awful visitations. See how the flame leaps from tree to tree! The whole forest is a boiling caldron of liquid flame. It is terrible!"

Directly in front of us was one vast volume of smoke, through which the wind drove blazing cinders, and to our right was a sea of fire. I hesitate to speak what I know to be true, for I am aware that in few places in the world would the fire go into a forest as it went into that, on that hot afternoon in May. The flames darted up trees, rolled from clump to clump of pines, and timber fell as rapidly as though it were but grass and the flame a mower. A bay full of ships and the ships on fire, could not have presented a grander sight than that old forest in the hot sun and burning flame. The fire became seated in the scurf, in fallen trees, in dry trees standing, of which there were a great number owing to previous fires, and from these fires seats it devoured even the green trees. It ate the earth from their roots, and it swept over them by the wind. It climbed to their tops and lit millions of candles in their branches. It hovered around the clumps of pitch pines, sending off the fiercest heat, and the whole roaring like the ocean in a storm.

"You will have to drive carefully," said Hadley, as I lashed the horses into the smoke which covered the road. "The neighbors have had the wisdom to take away the fences and place the rails in the road. It is better for the rails, but not so well for us."

"But go through we must, rails or no rails," I replied. "There is but one course for us."

"Yes, go, for Heaven's sake, and quick, too, or we shall be too late to be of any service. I have never——"

The density of the smoke was too much for him, and not another word was spoken in all that fearful ride. For a mile and a half we pressed through the hot, blinding smoke over a road filled with rails. How we accomplished the feat I am unable to say, only I know that we accomplished it, and actually came out through the smoke—or the denser part of it—directly in front of Hadley's residence.

Here we found a body of citizens engaged in removing everything from the house, and placing them upon a plowed field, where it was thought they would be in safety. And here I noticed among the number at work, the young man whom I had hired the evening before. No other one of my men was there, and this man (whose name even I had not learned) seemed to act as leader, working with his own hands, and also giving directions to others. As we drove up to the house, he came to me and said, frankly:

"I saw the fire below, here, and thought it my duty to leave my work and come to the assistance of those in more immediate danger. I have done what I could, and as now the fire is evidently making through the woods in all directions, I am at your service."

"You have done right, quite right! Just as I should have ordered you to do. What do you think, is there help enough here to protect the buildings?"

"I think so. We have cleared the house, taken down the fences, and by my directions a ditch is to be begun at once around the buildings. The house can be saved I feel assured."

"Then we had better get home as soon as we can."

"One moment, sir. The school-children have all come down from the school-house, and are all here. So long as the buildings stand they are safe; but in case of disaster to them, I know not how they will escape. I know not the danger they might be exposed. They can not fight their way through this fire, and they ought to be taken beyond its reach."

The frightened faces of two of my own children, who at that moment came running out to meet me, convinced me of the justness of his observation. They had seen similar fires before, and knew enough of their horrors to feel alarmed at the first appearance of danger. There was no road to the east, and the one to the north was already enveloped in flame, as both Mr. Hadley and myself knew but too well. There was only the road to the south, and the fire was rapidly drifting toward it.

"How many are there?" I asked.

"I can not tell you, sir. But do you see the fire moving to our right? We have no time to lose."

"Can we carry them all in this wagon?"

"I think so. I will get them together and see."

He called them together, and they climbed into the large box of the wagon, some crying and all giving evidence of being most sadly frightened, as well they might. They had seen fires before. When they were all in, the vehicle was filled completely, and no place was left for my hired man and myself.

Just then a shower of burning cinders fell over the buildings, and over us all. In an instant, under the fanning of the wind, the roof of the house was in flames, and on the impulse of the moment I sprang to the rescue.

"It is vain, sir, entirely. Let us lose no more time. Look yonder!"

"Drive on, drive on! I will work here a few minutes, and overtake you if I can," were my words, as I sprang toward the house.

He had hardly started with his precious freight, when all the men came away from the house in despair. Its destruction was inevitable. The roof of the barn had already caught, and it was evident that further effort would be unavailing. The smoke was not blinding where we stood, as there was a swamp directly west of us into which the fire had not as yet penetrated. But north of us it held complete possession of the road. The rails were burned to ashes, though detached and in the middle of the highway. Even the bedding and furniture which had been carried from the house, and placed upon the freshly plowed field were all on fire. The falling cinders had spared nothing.

Our personal safety at that moment was really a serious question, as we could not travel easterly so fast as the fire would travel, and to the south the smoke and cinders were rolling across the road at a distance of not more than a mile. True, the fire had not yet reached it, yet it was rapidly nearing it, and would certainly cross it too soon for our purpose.

The picture which we looked upon in that moment was one of intense interest to us all. Directly in front of us, and not yet more than half a mile away, was the stranger driving his horses at full gallop, seemingly into the jaws of death. A wind, full a mile to the south of us, had furnished peculiar advantages to the fire, and it swept through with incredible velocity. And there was hardly a man who stood there in that spell-bound group but had a child in the wagon which had been given into the care of the stranger.

We watched with breathless interest. Whether to wish him to make the attempt to go on, or to return, we could not tell. The only avenue of escape he was manfully trying, yet that avenue seemed blocked up with coals of fire.

"He will never get through, never," said Hadley.

"Let us hasten, then," I answered. "All is lost if he is lost!"

"Oh, this terrible fire!" almost groaned another. "My child, my poor little child! See! the fire has already crossed his path. He will come back—he can not, he will not venture into that."

But at intervals the horses were still seen going at full speed, and the dauntless driver urging them to still greater effort.

We went over the road as rapidly as we could move, and had gone a quarter of a mile—I do not think it was more than that, for these events transpired with wonderful rapidity—when we were startled by hearing one of our companions exclaim:

"The wagon is in flames! I saw it! I saw it!"

The smoke had begun to drive across our path, and all paused to look eagerly for a confirmation of this startling announcement. In a moment we saw through the smoke dimly, it was true, yet distinctly enough to convince us that there could be no mistake, we saw the wagon actually on fire.

"Oh, it is horrible!" said Hadley, "that even my children could not be spared me!"

"Bravely, men, bravely; we must go through and save them."

"Well spoken," said another, "bravely is the word now, or we all perish together."

"We will accept nothing as inevitable but what we are compelled to accept. Bravely, men! Follow me, and you shall save your children or perish with them."

These words, spoken by a man who was more interested than any other, and with some slight degree of confidence, had the effect to reassure us, so far at least, as to induce us to act like men. We went forward determinedly and silently. Indeed, we were compelled to do both if we went forward at all, as conversation was impossible in the smoke which now enveloped us, and without determination no man could go through what we were then encountering.

Through the heated smoke, sometimes crawling on our hands and knees to avoid it, and through the flying fire, and over the burning earth beneath our feet, we went bravely, bravely! Moments were hours, but yet we went on. The most horrid fancies crept into our minds, yet we went on. We were burned, blackened, suffering in body and mind, yet before us was the wagon in flames, and in that wagon our flesh and blood. Is it a wonder that we went on?

And we found our treasures. Every child entrusted to the care of the stranger was safe, and the stranger himself breathing his last. When the flames took hold of the wagon, he had taken the children out, and placing them in a group in the middle of the road, had fought the fire for their protection. With the strength of a hero he had torn the scurf in the vicinity away with his hands. Then he had watched the falling cinders, and bringing the moist sand from the roadside, had extinguished the flame as often as it caught in the clothing of his charges. And so rapidly fell the fire, that it was only by the most herculean efforts that he was able to protect the dear ones, giving him not a moment to protect himself. So the sparks caught in his clothing, and burned his own flesh to a crisp, while he labored for the flesh of others. Noble soul! His efforts were too much for his strength. It was not the fire that killed him, though he was shockingly burned, but the work he did in the heat of that terrible day.

He died calmly and peacefully, without a groan or a murmur. He did not even speak. But he dropped quickly into the sea of a wondrous future, with the group of children for the jewels of his dying chamber, and we, the fathers of those children, as sincere mourners as ever stood around a corpse.

And so we erected a monument over the spot where he died, with the single inscription "The Stranger Martyr."—Charles Cutterfield, in Ballou's Magazine.

"Undoubtedly," replied the lawyer.

"Can't we get our share, then?"

A SINGULAR CASE.

Family Peculiarities Which Reappeared in the Fifth Generation.

A singular and actual case of mistaken identity was related recently to the historian. A gentleman living in one of our suburban towns had an intimate friend whom he was in the habit of meeting at the depot in Boston every evening, and they generally occupied seats together on the ride home. One evening he entered the train as usual, and saw, as he supposed, his friend seated there. He took the vacant place beside him, and greeted his friend with: "Good evening, Walker."

His salutation was returned, it was his friend's voice, but the speaker looked a little puzzled. While engaged in conversation upon general subjects, in which the gentleman noticed a rather constrained manner in his friend, he chanced to glance behind him. To his astonishment there was another "Walker" sitting a few seats back. Wonderful! In face and form they were identical. The voice was that of his friend, also. Only by a slight peculiarity in dress did he realize that the person in the rear seat was the friend he was looking for. A more perfect "double" was never seen. He rose and seated himself by the other.

"Walker, is this really you?"

"Of course it is, Jones. What is the matter with you?"

"Good gracious! If this is you, who is that over there?" and he pointed to the seat he had just quitted.

Walker looked a moment. It seemed as if he were before a mirror, so exact was the resemblance. Then he rose and seated himself by the stranger.

"I beg your pardon, sir, but may I ask your name?" he said.

The gentleman looked at his double, started in surprise, and then said:

"Certainly, sir. My name is—Walker."

This capped the climax.

"I knew it, I knew it!" broke in Jones, excitedly. "How could it be anybody else?"

Explanations followed. It appears that the doubles, although now meeting for the first time, were natives of the same place, and, though not immediately related, they finally succeeded in tracing their origin to a common ancestor some four or five generations back. It is thus that family peculiarities of feature and voice will sometimes reappear in successive generations in totally distinct branches of the same parent stock.—Boston Record.

WANTED HIM.

A Superintendent Rewards an Honest Applicant for Employment.

The general superintendent of a great railroad was sitting in his office when a well-dressed man entered.

"This the superintendent?"

"Yes."

"Glad to see you, sir. My name is Balkers and I want a job."

"In what department?"

"Want a position as conductor of a passenger train."

"Do you understand your business?"

"Try me once."

"I suppose you would turn in every cent that belonged to the company?"

"No, sir, I'd whack up."

"About how much would you take per day?"

"Owing to business."

"You'd always make it a point to bring in some little money, wouldn't you?"

"Well, I'd help myself first and then—"

"My friend," said the superintendent, "I want you. You have told me the first truth that I have heard for years."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Financial Regularity.

Merchant—Upon investigation I find I can not give you the clerkship. You were charged by your former employer with financial irregularity.

Clerky Applicant—It was a false charge, sir.

"The jury didn't seem to think so, for they convicted you; the judge did not seem to think so, for he sentenced you."

"Nevertheless it was a false charge. There was no irregularity about it. I kept up the pilfering without any intermission."—Philadelphia Call.

POSITIVE.

How Mr. Bullion Was Cured of the Bad Habit of "Knowing" Too Much.

"When I was a young fellow," said Mr. Thomas Bullion, of the well known firm of Bullion, Silverley & Co., "I was the most positive man alive—never let anybody else say a word when once I'd made up my mind about any thing. If I'd heard Nelson talk about sea-fights or Soyer about cooking, I'd have been sure to contradict them and make out I knew more about it than they did. Somebody said once to my poor brother Jack, the lawyer—who was rather a dictatorial sort of a chap himself—that he did well to lay down the law, for he certainly hadn't gained much by taking it up. But I was every bit as bad as he was, and worse too."

Mr. Bullion brought out this last confession with that self-complacent emphasis wherewith an Englishman will sometimes own himself guilty of things which, if laid to his charge by any other man, would probably impel him to punch that other man's head on the spot.

"You remember that story," he proceeded, "about the argumentative man who, hearing a watchman calling out under his window one bitter January night: 'Past one o'clock, and a fine starlight morning!' jumped out of bed, rushed to the window, threw it up and bawled out to him: 'Yes, but is it past one o'clock?' Well, sir, that's just the sort of fellow that I was when I first started; but I've had a lesson about contradicting and being positive that will last me all my life.

"This was how it happened. One cold morning in the early spring (I don't exactly remember what year it was, but anyway more years ago than I'd particularly care to count now), I was going to the city as usual by omnibus. There were four or five other men in the same line of business as myself, who generally went in about the same time as I did; and when I got into the 'bus that morning, I found the whole lot of 'em together. The only man there that I didn't know was a queer-looking chap who sat in the far corner, with his hat so pulled down over his eyes and the collar of his gray cloak so turned up around his neck, that his face could hardly be seen at all; and he kept so still that I made sure he must be asleep, and thought no more about him.

"Well, we all began talking, and somehow or other we came around to the battle of Waterloo, and there got up a dispute about whether the gate of Hougomount had really been shut against the French by one man or not. Sam Lockitt, of Lockitt & Redwood (he's dead now, poor fellow!), stuck out that he had, and I, of course, contradicted him flat, and said that it was all bosh, and that no one man could be strong enough to do it.

"'Ah, we all know your ways, Tom,' says Sam; 'you'd say black was white, if anybody else said it wasn't. Did you happen to be engaged at Waterloo yourself without knowing it?'

"'Never you mind,' said I, 'if I wasn't I've known them that were, or that have met others who were, which is the same thing.'

"'Of course it is,' says Sam, winking at the rest. 'Why, Tom, you're as good as that countryman in the story, who, when they asked him if he had ever seen the King, replied: "Noa, I niver saw the King, but I've got a cousin as once coom 'very nigh seein' the Dook o' Wellington."'

"Well, then I got quite savage, for in those days I could never abide being laughed at, but before I could break out, one of the other fellows struck in suddenly:

"'Look here; we're just three to three—Sam and we two against Tom and you two. This gentleman here' (pointing to the man in the gray cloak) 'has the casting vote. Beg pardon, sir, which way do you say it was?'

"The gray-cloaked man turned his head slowly round, just like that moving wax figure in Madame Tussaud's, and said, in a sharp, chopping kind of voice, as if he were giving orders to some somebody: 'It was shut. One man shut the gate. It was Colonel McDonnell.'

"'Oh, indeed,' says I, 'You don't happen to be a friend of Colonel McDonnell, do you? or perhaps you're Colonel McDonnell himself, and we're to take your own word that you did it, I suppose? What do you know about Waterloo, I should like to know.'

"The man never answered a word, but just turned down the collar of his cloak, lifted his hat about an inch off his head, and looked me full in the face.

"Talk of being hit by a thunder-bolt! If half a dozen thunder bolts had gone down my throat, one after the other, I couldn't have been more utterly floored. There wasn't any more contradicting, and bullying, and asking what he knew about Waterloo, for the man was—the Duke of Wellington himself!

"I've never been positive since that day, and, what's more, I don't think I ever shall again."—David Ker, in Harper's Young People.

JACK.

His Account of Himself, and His Opinion of Cats, Etc.

I am a dog. Please note that I do not say "only a dog." No, indeed. I leave such remarks for the half-starved black and tan terrier that sometimes comes to play with me.

Why should I say it? I am a fine bird-dog, worth considerable, have been stolen, and, in fact, have had a great many adventures because of my value. Then I am handsome. You needn't think because I tell it that I am vain. No, I am only honest enough to say outright what you human beings all think. Else why do you fill your house with mirrors, look at yourselves so much, then say: "Oh, whenever I see any thing homely I just shut my eyes and look at the clouds."

I also like cats. At least, I like our cat. But what is he good for? He is so lazy and aristocratic. All he does is to come down to breakfast somewhere between eleven and twelve, then he goes back upstairs again and sleeps all the afternoon; takes his tea when the milkman comes, and as he is gone till two or three in the morning, I suppose attends—or possibly helps give the nightly concerts that occur in our neighborhood.

Oh! how I do love to bark at those cats. But about nine my mistress says: "Jack, Jack! It's time to come in," and as I can't climb a tree and crawl in by the back window, as the cat does, I have to obey.

I not only like to bark at cats, but at people. But much as you people think you know, you do not seem to be aware that I have different kinds of barks. Some are respectful, others—well, you should just hear me bark at the "preps" or the little boys that laugh and throw stones at me. I should like to bite some of them, but they are so very dirty, often, that I don't, and then I am a deacon's dog and it wouldn't look well.

When a college professor goes by I bark, but it is only to show how much I admire his plug hat and respect his learning.

I do not like the "sophs." They think they know more than they do. But they are really pretty good judges of the dainty little canes they swing so jauntily, and their smiles are irresistible—to the girls. However, there is one of them I don't hate. Because last spring term there was a young lady coming to our house that this "soph" was quite devoted to. So one day just before she came he went by, saw me in the yard, called me to him and petted me. He even did not scold when I put my dirty paws on his clothes simply to show how honored I felt at his noticing me. I suppose he was afraid I might bark too loudly some evening when he came to call.

I am afraid you will begin to think I spend all my time philosophizing, but I don't. No, I am a true American, and I work occasionally—when I can't help it. My little master has taught me how to draw a sled or wagon. He helps in his father's store, and when they are very busy we help deliver goods.

They harnessed me up the other day to draw a load. The weather was hot. I was tired, my master was cross, and I wanted to stay in the shade and eat flies instead of working. Finally I trotted off, had the wagon emptied, turned toward home and then stopped. I wanted to ride. I couldn't see why a dog shouldn't ride sometimes as well as a boy. So I stopped. Well, at last my master comprehended what I wanted, unharnessed me, told me to get in and drew me to the store. Oh! I rode down in the store, my head up, my tail flying and my horse making good time.

The next day it was hot again, so when it was time to go to the store I went out in the back-yard and lay under an apple-tree till they were gone. Then I came around in front, scratched up a lot of good-for-nothing pansies that grew in the nicest, shadiest place in the whole yard. Oh! I had a good time then. The dirt was so soft and cool, the flies had not found me, and I was thinking of how pleasant it was to live, when the owner of the flower-bed came out. I started, but not quick enough, for she boxed my ears and scolded me awfully. And now they have put back the old pansies and stuck a lot of horrid little sticks in the bed that I can neither scratch up nor lie down on. What do they want of those pansies, anyhow? They can't draw a wagon nor keep burglars out at night. However, I don't always do that either, for the other night one got in up-stairs in the front room when I was down-stairs in a back room, and yet in the morning they said: "Where was Jack?" Now, you see, if they would only let me stop out nights as I want to, I would have seen the man and kept him away. My paw is getting tired of writing, and as I am only six years old I think this is rather a long letter for me to write. So I will go and see whose yellow cat that was that just went in the barn. Ever yours,

JACK CADY.

A BARBER'S INVENTION.

Decidedly Novel Method of Manipulating Railway Trains in Stations.

A. F. Godfrey, a hair-dresser and dealer of St. Louis, has invented a method of taking up and discharging passengers and goods from railway trains which is decidedly novel. The working model and drawings show a main track on the level and an elevated track in front of an elevated station with inclined tracks leading to it. The idea is to start a train from one terminus and not have to stop or slacken speed until it reaches the other. At the same time passengers may be taken up or discharged at any station. As a train reaches a station on the main track, the rear car switches off and runs up the inclined plane to the elevated station, and at the same time another car run down the other inclined plane, is caught by the passing train, whirled on to the main track, and becomes a part of the train. The passengers who desire to stop at the next station pass to the rear car, which is side-tracked as was the previous one, and another car load of passengers is taken on. By a very simple contrivance, which acts automatically, when a train gets within a certain distance of a station it releases the car in waiting, which starts down the inclined plane just as the last car of the train is switched off and starts up on the other side. This transfer is made without jerking or danger of derailing, and the passengers would not be aware of the operation of coupling and uncoupling.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The wild horses of our plains are fourteen hands high, brown, chestnut or bays, and usually weigh from eight hundred to one thousand pounds.

THE STRIKE.

Situation Unchanged on the Texas Pacific and Only Passenger Trains Running.

An Order Laying off all Men in Departments Where Business is Slack Issued—Wabash Switchmen Will Join the Strike.

THE GOULD SYSTEM STRIKE.

ST. LOUIS, March 10.—The situation in railroad circles yesterday was practically the same. The greatest difficulty is now experienced in getting passenger trains in and out of the Union depot, mail trains being the only ones in which any interest was taken by the strikers. Reports from all over the line show a complete stoppage of work. The impression sought to be made that there is trouble between the engineers and the Knights is entirely erroneous. There is undoubtedly a thorough sympathy and a complete understanding between the Knights and the engineers, and if the power of the latter two classes is needed it will be brought into play.

The statement from Cleveland that P. M. Arthur will order the neutrality of the engineers is laughed at. He is not the autocrat of the society, and it is quite possible that the engineers of the Gould system, when they see fit to throw their weight of influence into the fight will do so, as within their own jurisdiction they have the power to act.

Mr. Hoxie's order, promulgated yesterday, laying off all men in departments where a lack of business allows a reduction of force, is causing much dissatisfaction among the persons affected.

A visit to the Union depot yards yesterday disclosed one solitary foreman watching the switches, not a wheel was moving and many of the passenger trains which came in yesterday standing exactly where...

TRAINS STAND IDLE.

Two Fruitless Efforts Made to Send Out Freight Trains from St. Louis—Texas Pacific's Officials Refuse a Proposition for Arbitration—No Material Change to the Situation.

ST. LOUIS, March 12.—It was expected that the Missouri Pacific officials would attempt to move their blockaded freight yesterday morning, but no such action was taken, and the yards of that company remained quiet until the afternoon. On the Iron Mountain road a freight train was made up early in the morning and started toward Carondelet with the engine under a full head of steam and passed through that city at express-train speed. This action by the railway company seemed to take the strikers unawares, for no opposition was attempted at any point until the train reached De Soto, Mo., where a delegation of Knights boarded the train, side-tracked it and afterward "killed" the engine. No opposition was offered by the crew to the action of the Knights and no conflict occurred.

In the afternoon the Missouri Pacific engineers held a secret session and decided to return to work. It was then decided by Superintendent Kerrigan to send a freight train west, and preparations were immediately made to make up a train. After considerable delay a locomotive came down the track manned by Engineer Marvin and Fireman Harrison. When the train was almost ready to start two men appeared on the scene, one of whom proved to be John D. Williams, vice-president of the local executive committee of Knights of Labor. The latter immediately entered into a low-toned conversation with Engineer Marvin, and, after considerable talk and evident pleading, the engineer stepped from his cab and announced that he would not take out the train. The locomotive was returned to the round-house. Superintendent Kerrigan stated that no further effort would be made to move trains at present, and thus ended the first effort to resume traffic on the Missouri Pacific road.

ST. LOUIS, March 12.—Martin Irons, chairman of the Executive Board of District Assembly No. 101, Knights of Labor...

A CALM REVIEW.

Senator Edmunds Criticises the President's Stubborn Attitude Regarding Suspensions from Office.

On the 9th inst. Senator Edmunds delivered a noteworthy speech on the resolutions reported from the Judiciary Committee condemning the Attorney-General for refusing to transmit to the Senate documents called for by that body. A synopsis is given below.

Mr. Edmunds said the calm and orderly administration of a constitutional Government is a subject in which the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the President and the people are equally interested and for which they are all, in their respective stations and places, equally responsible. It was in support of that calm and orderly constitutional exercise of the functions of Government that he now addressed himself to these resolutions. It has been, he said, at least forty years ago any occasion of this kind has arisen between the Executive Department of the Government and the Senate. Now, again, after almost half a century, the Senate found itself confronted by the refusal of the head of the Department of Justice to transmit copies of official papers and documents relating not to persons, but to things, relating, not to officers, but to offices, on file in the department. In order that the Senate might perfectly understand how the question stood, he caused to be read the statutes relating to the tenure of office and recess suspensions. (Sections 1,767 and 1,768.)

After reading the statutes bearing on appointments and removals, as well as the correspondence which had taken place between the Senate Committee and the Attorney General about Duskin's suspension, and having thus formulated his case, Mr. Edmunds proceeded to argue that the President had not removed Mr. Duskin, but had merely suspended him, and that Mr. Duskin still continues to be a United States attorney. He stood in the attitude of a military officer under arrest, as the President might place General Sheridan to-day, but this would not take General Sheridan out of the army.

When the nomination of Mr. Burnett was sent to the Senate Mr. Duskin was the United States Attorney for Southern Alabama, and the proposition now made to the Senate was that he should be removed. In spite of sundry misstatements made in the case by the public press, the President and the minority of the Judiciary Committee, he said, the case as it stood was that the President had asked the Senate to consent to the removal of...

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, with all its malignant ... Dyspepsia, Female Weakness, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Eruptions, Scrofulous Sores, Malassimilation of Food, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, a purely vegetable tonic, the Best Known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does actually removes all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Ninth Discourse of the Series on "The Marriage Ring."

The Domestic Circle—Home Life as a Test of Character, a Refuge, a Political Safeguard, a School and as a Type of Heaven on Earth.

Below we give Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's ninth discourse of "The Marriage Ring" series, delivered at Brooklyn Tabernacle. The subject, "The Domestic Circle," was illustrated from the following text:

Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee.—Mark, v. 19.

There are a great many people longing for some grand sphere in which to serve God. They admire Luther at the Diet of Worms, and only wish that they had some such great opportunity in which to display their Christian prowess. They admire Paul making Felix tremble, and they only wish that they had some such grand occasion in which to preach righteousness, temperance and judgment to come; all they want is only an opportunity to exhibit their Christian heroism. Now the apostle comes to us and he practically says: "I will show you a place where you can exhibit all that is grand, and beautiful, and glorious in Christian character, and that is the domestic circle."

If one is not faithful in an insignificant sphere he will not be faithful in a resounding sphere. If Peter will not help the cripple at the gate of the temple he will never be able to preach three thousand souls into the kingdom at the Pentecost. If Paul will not take pains to instruct in the way of salvation the jailer of the Philippian dungeon, he will never make Felix tremble. He who is not faithful in a skirmish would not be faithful in an ...

... head on the knapsack, we sleep until the morning bugle calls us to marching and action. How pleasant it is to rehearse the victories and the surprises and the attacks of the day, seated by the still camp fire of the home circle.

Yes, life is a stormy sea. With shivered masts and torn sails and hulk aleak, we put in at the harbor of home. Blessed harbor! There we go for repairs in the dry-dock of quiet life. The candle in the window is to the toiling man the lighthouse guiding him into port. Children go forth to meet their fathers as pilots at the "Narrows" take the hand of ships. The door-sill of the home is the wharf where heavy life is unladen.

There is the place where we may talk of what we have done without being charged with self-adulation. There is the place where we may lounge without being thought ungraceful. There is the place where we may express affection without being thought silly. There is the place where we may forget our annoyances and exasperations and troubles. Forlorn earth pilgrim, no home? Then die. That is better. The grave is brighter and grander and more glorious than this world with no tent from marchings, with no harbor from the storm, with no place of rest from this scene of greed and gouge and loss and gain. God pity the man or the woman who has no home.

Further, I remark that home is a political safe-guard. The safety of the State must be built on the safety of the home. Why can not France come to a placid republic? Ever and anon there is a threat of national capsize. France as a nation has not the right kind of a Christian home. The Christian hearth-stone is the only corner stone for a republic. The virtues cultured in the family circle are an absolute necessity for the State. If there be not enough moral principle to make the family adhere, there will not be enough political principle to make the State adhere. "No home" means the Goths and Vandals ...

... gone out on the heart's altar and memory has emptied its urn into forgetfulness. Then, home of my childhood, I will forget thee; the family altar of a father's importunity and a mother's tenderness, the voices of affection, the funerals of our dead father and mother, with interlocked arms like intertwining branches of trees making a perpetual arbor of love and peace and kindness—then I will forget them—and only then. You know, my brother, that a hundred times you have been kept out of sin by the memory of such a scene as I have been describing. You have often had raging temptation, but you know what has held you with supernatural grasp. I tell you a man who has had such a home as that never gets over it, and a man who has had a bad early home never gets over it.

Again I remark that home is a type of Heaven. To bring us to that home Christ left his home. Far up and far back in the history of Heaven there came a period when its most illustrious citizen was about to absent Himself. He was not going to sail from beach to beach; we have often done that. He was not going to put out from one hemisphere to another hemisphere, many of us have done that. But He was to sail from world to world, the spaces unexplored and the immensities untraveled. No world had ever hailed Heaven, and Heaven had never hailed any other world. I think that the windows and balconies were thronged, and that the pearline beach was crowded with those who had come to see him sail out of the harbor of light into the oceans beyond. Out and out and out, and on and on and on, and down and down and down he sped, until one night, with only one to greet him, he arrived. His disembarkation so unpretending, so quiet, that it was not known on earth until the excitement in the cloud gave intimation that something grand and glorious had happened. Who comes there? From what port did he sail? Why was this the place of his destination? ...

Another Life Saved.

About two years ago, a prominent citizen of Chicago was told by his physicians that he must die. They said his system was so debilitated that there was nothing left to build on. He made up his mind to try a "new departure." He got some of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and took it according to directions. He began to improve at once. He kept up the treatment for some months, and is to-day a well man. He says the "Discovery" saved his life.

Are the months in which to purify your blood, and for this purpose there is no medicine equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, removing all trace of scrofula or other disease. It creates an appetite and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body. It is the ideal spring medicine. Try it this season.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla for a spring medicine, and I find it just the thing. It tones up my system and makes me feel like a different man. My wife takes it for dyspepsia, and she derives great benefit from it. She says it is the best medicine she ever took." FRANK C. TURNER, Hook & Ladder No. 1, Friend Street, Boston, Mass.

"When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was dizzy in the morning, had a headache, and no appetite, but now I can hardly get enough cooked to eat." EMMA SHEPARD, 1 Vernal Street, Worcester, Mass.

"I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla in my family and consider it a splendid blood purifier." J. C. WILLSMITH, North 7th Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"We know a gentleman in this county who, six months ago, was almost a hopeless cripple from an attack of rheumatism. He could scarcely hobble across the room, used crutches, and said himself that he had little if any hope of ever recovering. We saw him in our town last week, walking about as lively as any other man, and in the finest health and spirits. Upon our inquiry as to what had worked such a wonderful change in his condition, he replied that S. S. S. had cured him. After using a dozen and a half bottles he has been transformed from a miserable cripple to a happy, healthy man. He is none other than Mr. E. L. ..."—Sylvania Telephone.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

Saturday, March 6.—The Senate was not in session. In the House the session was occupied in a debate on the silver question.

Monday, March 8.—In the Senate a large number of petitions were presented from the Knights of Labor for the [illegible] of the Hennepin canal. Senator Vance presented a resolution directing the Committee on Civil Service to report to the Senate his bill repealing the Civil-Service law. Mr. Bowen spoke at length on his bill "to provide a new basis for the circulation of National banks." The death of Senator Miller was announced, and the Senate adjourned out of respect to his memory. In the House bills were introduced: By Mr. Symes, to provide for an equitable exchange of business of railroads engaged in inter-State commerce; by Mr. Clardy, to regulate the transportation of live stock; by Mr. Bennett, repealing the Civil-Service law. Mr. Reagan reported the bill on inter-State commerce. Mr. Morrow announced the death of Senator Miller, and the House adopted resolutions of respect and adjourned.

Tuesday, March 9.—The Senate took up the resolutions reported by Senator Edmunds from the Judiciary Committee which, among other things, condemn the Attorney-General for refusing to transmit to the Senate papers called for, and condemn the discharge from the Government service of ex-Union soldiers. Senator Edmunds spoke at great length upon the subject, but the Senate adjourned without any action being taken. In the House a bill was passed by a vote of 249 to 8 forbidding the hiring out of the labor of Federal prisoners. Mr. Eldridge reported a bill granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war. The Indian Appropriation bill ($5,5[illegible]) was considered.

Wednesday, March 10.—In the Senate the debate in regard to the suspension of [illegible]

Nearly $80,000 shortage was on the 10th discovered in the accounts of S. S. Hollingsworth, the late treasurer of Knox County, Ind.

A resolution has been passed by the Ohio Legislature for the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the first permanent settlement in the State by an exposition on the fair grounds in Columbus in September of next year.

Officials of the Missouri Pacific railroad on the 10th notified the strikers to leave the company's premises. The shops at St. Louis were guarded by thirty-five armed detectives. It was the intention of the superintendent to send out several freight trains, and if the strikers interfered the Governor would be asked for a military guard.

A resolution was adopted by an anti-Chinese convention, composed of delegates from all parts of California, at Sacramento on the 10th, discountenancing the illegal expulsion of Chinamen.

SLAIN BY A SON.

Terrible Butchery of an Entire Family in Kansas—A Young Boy in Jail on Suspicion of Having Murdered His Father, Mother, Brother and Sister.

Osage Mission, Kan., March 9.—Mr. Mendell, living thirteen miles northwest of town, was awakened about three o'clock yesterday morning by a [illegible]. He went to the door and was met by Willie Sells, the son of a neighbor, J. W. Sells. The boy cried out: "Mr. Mendell, a man is at our house with a hatchet and has hurt father and mother, I don't know how badly." Mr. Mendell went with the boy, arousing J. I. Rice, another neighbor, on the way. Upon reaching Sell's house a most horrible sight met their eyes. In the bed in the north room lay Walter Sells, aged nineteen, his throat cut and the entire top of his head chopped off, exposing the brain and his left eye hanging upon his cheek. Passing into the south and main room, where a light was burning, they stumbled over the prostrate form of Mr. Sells. His head was crushed and almost severed from his body. Near by lay Mrs. Sells, a woman forty-three years old. Her head was [illegible] and there was a fearful gash in her throat. On the bed in the southeast corner of the room lay Ina Sells, aged fourteen, killed in the same manner as the other three.

Lying near Mr. Sells' head was a bloody butcher-knife, and on a chair a hatchet, matted with hair and blood. The boy said that he had been awakened by something, and looking up saw a low, heavy-set man with dark hair, cut close, standing in the door. This man stepped into the room, and reaching over Willie struck Walter, who lay in the back of the bed. Willie jumped out and dressed while the man was still in the room. The man rushed out of one door, while Willie went out of the other, and started up the road on a run, Willie after him. A short distance off stood a man on horseback, holding another horse, upon which the man vaulted, and both rode off. Willie then went on to Mendell's.

After the bodies had been discovered Rice took Willie home with him, where he slept soundly till morning. A coroner's jury was impaneled and the subsequent investigation brought forth much from the boy [illegible]

BAD HOOSIERS LYNCHED.

A Mob of Determined Men Take the Three Members of the Notorious Archer Gang of Murderers and Outlaws from the Jail at Shoals, Ind., and Hang them to Trees.

Shoals, Ind., March 10.—The members of the notorious Archer gang, who have been confined in the county jail here for several weeks past on a charge of having been concerned in several brutal and unprovoked murders but more especially for the killing of old man Hunch, expiated their crimes just before one o'clock this morning at the hands of a mob of determined men, all armed and thoroughly prepared to carry out their purpose. The mob was composed of many of the farmers of the surrounding country, and was quiet and orderly. On reaching the city the men passed rapidly along through the streets until the jail, situated in West Shoals, was reached. The keys were at once demanded of the jailer, but were refused. Without tarrying a moment for a colloquy the spokesman of the mob pushed the jailer aside, and, crying out to the men to follow him, led the way up to the door. A few vigorous strokes against it, and it fell in with a crash. In an instant the excited men were before the iron gratings of the cells. These were speedily broken open by a hammer, and the doomed prisoners led out into the court-yard adjoining the jail. The mob was silent as death. From the court-yard the prisoners were led a short distance up the road to a place where three trees had been extemporized into three ghastly gallows. Here the prisoners were given a few moments in which to exchange parting greetings or to make a confession of their crimes. But the men made no sign, and as the three nooses were slip[illegible]

A Demented Person Places Paris Green in the Coffee Furnished a Pennsylvania Almshouse—One Hundred Persons Taken Violently Ill and Twelve Likely to Die.

Lebanon, Pa., March 12.—The interior of the county almshouse, about a mile from here, was the scene of horrible suffering Tuesday morning, when 100 of the 105 inmates [illegible] lay writhing in terrible convulsions on the floor, their bodies doubled up in pain and their faces ghastly with the look of agony and despair. They had just left the breakfast table, at which hot coffee had been served. All except five had drunk heartily of the steaming fluid, and as they passed from the dining room into the large hall several of them complained of feeling ill and sat down. Soon two of them fell helpless to the floor, others followed, and in a few moments the floor was covered with the prostrate inmates, who retched and purged in a horrible manner and groaned aloud with pain.

The attendants in the house ran at once to the assistance of the apparently dying persons, the house physician was called in, and vigorous measures were taken to counteract the effects of what was obviously poison. Search was then made for the cause of the trouble, and it was found that a large quantity of paris green had been placed in the kettle in which the coffee had been boiled. The poisonous stuff had been purchased months ago to kill potato bugs, and was supposed to be locked securely in a closet. Finally a simple-minded fellow, an inmate of the insane department, confessed that he had poured the poison into the boiling coffee while no one was present in the kitchen.

Most of the unfortunate victims are in a fair way to recovery, although a dozen are [illegible]

AN AVALANCHE.

It Attacked the Man Who Knew Too Much for His Own Good.

[N. Y. Sun.]

You may have, at some time or other, met a man whom you wanted to kick on sight. Just the minute you got hold of him you felt that you could never be supremely happy again unless you could bump his anatomy with your calf skin. There was just such a man with us at Chicago Junction, where five or six passengers had to wait for two hours for the train on the Baltimore & Ohio road. It was a wretched room, cold weather, and the fire in the stove wouldn't have warmed the legs of a flea.

This man whom we all wanted to kick on sight had a [illegible] voice. He was undersized, conceited in speech and looks, and he played hog on the stove. The man who is impatiently waiting for a train at a junction should never whistle. He whistled. A half frozen and thoroughly disgusted man should never sing. He sang. Therefore the rest of us began to hate him. We hoped there was a mortgage on his home, and that the man who held it would foreclose. We hoped that he would reach home to find that his wife had eloped. We would have been happy to learn that all his children were down with the measles.

"Gentlemen," said the man, having not the least suspicion of our feelings toward him, "last year at this time—just a year ago to-day—I was the victim of an adventure such as few people have ever encountered and lived to relate. I was in Silver Gulch, Col. A partner named Alf Simmons and myself occupied a cabin about half way up a long slope reached by a private trail. It had been snowing for [illegible]

SMITH & F[illegible]LEE, Editors and Proprietors.

CHARLEVOIX, : MICHIGAN.

A LESSON FROM THE CRADLE.

The little one sits in his cradle,
With his playthings strewn all around,
He handles them gently, one by one,
Then drops them down to the ground.

For his dear, little, helpless fingers
Not one of his treasures can keep;
They vanish all from his feeble clasp—
And the baby is fast asleep.

Our life at its best is so narrow,
Its limits so quickly are found;
As the cradle shuts in the baby,
So closely it bounds us around.

We sit in the midst with our treasures,
And hold them with tenderest care,
But our clinging hands can not keep them
And our arms grow empty and bare.

Yet could we but know—they are nearer,
We shall have them to love and to keep,
We shall hold them again when we waken—
For we, too, must lie down and sleep.

A GAS-PIPE ROMANCE.

Why "Teddy Jones" Is "Sot Against" Literary People.

"Literary people! Faugh! don't speak of them. If there's any thing I detest more than another, it's a man or woman who writes."

I looked at my friend Teddy Jones and smiled. What in the world could have caused this outburst against the fraternity to which it was the height of my ambition to belong and from Jones!

Jones and literary people! What could be more absurd! Fancy it! Jones and men and women who spend their time reading Emerson, wondering at Carlyle's "immensities" and "eternities," and asking how far George Eliot really went in her [illegible]

[illegible] for a nap. Presently I heard a queer noise. First I couldn't think what it was, but it seemed to come from the gas fixture. I listened again, and then I made up my mind that somebody was playing on the [illegible] below as if it were a piano. I've always said her actions were very strange, and Mrs. Smith says so, too. Fancy it—quarreling with her mother, and writing like wild fire, talking to herself, and playing tunes on a gas fixture—I tell you that's it, Ted. I tell you, Edward, that that beautiful young girl, with golden hair, great open blue eyes, and a forehead just like that of a Madonna! (the idea!), is crazy—stark staring crazy!"

"Fiddlesticks, Eliza," I cried. "You're crazy. I tell you there's nothing wrong about that girl's mind any more than there is about mine." We argued, and argued, and argued. But of course I didn't convince Eliza, and she didn't convince me.

"Now I must tell you, Bradford, how our rooms were situated in that boarding-house. Old lady Marvin, being an invalid, couldn't go up and down stairs, so our landlady had given her a back room on the first floor. Eliza and I occupied the back room on the second floor. Above our heads, on the third floor, was Will Graham's room. We had often seen him going in and out of the door just at the head of the staircase, and Eliza always brought up as an evidence of his love for Miss Emily the way he tramped up and down that room at all hours of the night with his boots on.

"As a matter of course I paid no further attention to what I felt certain was Eliza's nonsense about Miss Emily's mind being out of order. But one evening I went hurriedly up to my room after dinner. I had just seen Miss Emily leave her mother at the table and disappear up-stairs. The moment I got into our room I heard a most peculiar noise. What on earth was it! It sounded like 'Tick tick tick—tick—tick tick tick tick tick tick tick tick tick,' and it came from the gas pipe. 'Ha!' thought I, 'there's Eliza's notion. She did hear something after all. Somebody is knocking on that gas fixture.' 'Playing a tune,' Eliza called it. Then all of a sudden a strange thought came over me. 'Flew!' I gasped. 'It's so, it's so, just as sure as you're born!'

"Now I must tell you, Bradford, that among my earlier experiences in this life I was once a telegraph operator. I didn't work at the business long, and I was extremely stupid at it; but I did learn the sounds; I knew them all, dots and dashes, just the horrid tick and succession of ticks, and spaces between the ticks, that are [illegible]

"'I'm going to do it now, too. I've dallied over it a dreadful while and I'm going to have it over by midnight. Then I'll [illegible]. There'll be nothing more but the marriage, and after that I can rest.'

"Was she a fiend! A red [illegible]! Apparently they both were.

"'All right, go at it.' This from above. 'Do it up brown. I'll help you spend the money.'

"I could stand it no longer. 'Eliza!' I shrieked, 'there's murder! murder! murder! going on in this house. Get up! get up!'

"I simply flew up. In two seconds I had on a pair of trousers and a coat. Eliza tried to hold me, but I flung her off. There was no time to be lost. I expected the sound of a pistol shot before I could get down stairs.

"I went down three steps at a time. On my way I met a party of people coming from the front room, where they had been playing whist.

"'Mr. Jones!' shrieked our landlady, seeing my excited face, and glancing at Eliza, who was hurrying after me in her night dress.

"'Madam!' I cried, 'there's murder going on in your house. Come at once—come! To the rescue, I command you!'

"'With the whole house following, I rushed to the door of Miss Marvin's room. I flung my whole strength against the wood. A series of shrieks came from within.

"'It's locked! it's locked! It's locked!' I cried.

"'Of course it's locked, you indecent man,' cried our landlady. 'The ladies are gone to bed. What do you mean?'

"'Mean, madam!' I cried; 'I mean there's murder going on behind that door.'

"By this time I had succeeded in convincing somebody that some foul deed was under way, for the two young men from the drug-store and both servants came rushing up. One had the fire tongs, the other the shovel, and one of the servants had seized a decanter, which she evidently meant to use as a bludgeon.

"Bent on saving that poor old lady from a dreadful death at her daughter's hands, I threw my whole strength against the door. The drug clerk helped me. There was a straining of the wood, a bursting of the latch, the door gave way, and there we stood in the midst of the room. I gave one spring toward the murderess, and pinioned her in my arms."

At this point Mrs. Jones, who had listened with the utmost interest to her husband's narrative, burst into a peal of laughter. I laughed too and then meekly inquired of [illegible]

He is living near the home of his grandson. Mr. Jones' father was a distinguished lawyer at Alabama, and a very devout man. Sam Jones was given a thorough English and a partially classic education preparatory to entering college, but the coming on of the war prevented it. He studied law and was admitted to the bar and practiced for a while. He was married about sixteen years ago to Mrs. McIllwaine, of Kentucky. For several years he was wayward in his life, and dissipated periodically, but on the death of his father in 1872 he was brought to a knowledge of his situation and was converted. Since then, having joined the Methodist Church, North Georgia Conference, for about nine years he was engaged on circuit and station work in Georgia and was everywhere known as a faithful, fearless preacher.

He has always had his present style of preaching, and it is not a matter of recent development or growth, but natural. The last three years he confined himself to conference work. The fortunes of the North Georgia Orphan's Home were in a precarious condition, and the conference made [illegible]

In personal appearance Mr. Small is tall and slim, lithe of limb and long armed. His well-shaped head rests upon somewhat slender shoulders. His face expresses force and gentleness, manliness and intelligence, and is lighted by clear [illegible] eyes looking through steel-bowed spectacles, and it is figured by a large brown mustache. His speech is easy, fluent and rippling with laughter as a mountain brook. Wherever humor or pathos appears it comes with a master's touch. And all through it runs, like a golden thread, a genial spirit, which is lit up by the myriad of quaint illustrations and allusions sparkling phrases and wonderful apothegms so peculiar to this evangelist, who as a preacher, has made a National reputation in six months.

A Weak Explanation.

"Mr. Featherly," inquired Bobby, "what is a bee line?"

"A bee line, Bobby," explained Featherly, with an air of erudition, "means the manner in which a bee flies to its hive after it has loaded itself with honey."

Bobby's face assumed an expression of puzzled amazement.

"Then what did pa mean," he asked, "by saying that he never met you on the street when you weren't making a bee line for a saloon!"—N. Y. Sun.

He'll tell you that whenever he wants one of the crooks who [illegible] there he has only to go there to get him. They never try to hide in any part of the city. Do you remember that burglar who killed a policeman way back in the sixties, when he was caught breaking into an arms store on Broadway? Well, he thought it safe to come back to New York after nearly twenty years, and the first thing he knew he was on trial for his life. He would have come back sooner, too, if he hadn't been prevented by being locked up in different prisons out West.

"Another thing that helps the detectives in catching big crooks is their inter-marriages. It's a saying that every Hebrew in Baxter street belongs to one of three families. It's about the same with crooks. About every big one among them is connected by marriage or blood ties with the others."—N. Y. Herald.

A GROWING EVIL.

Defects in the Education of Girls Which Should Be Speedily Remedied.

We heard a lady say, the other day: "Oh, that my daughters could have had the training I had!" She had been wisely trained, as a girl, to work and to understand how to do every thing which naturally falls to a mother in the care of a home. But as years passed, her husband's increasing prosperity precluded the necessity of her doing any household duties which she did not prefer to do. Still, she knows how every thing should be done. On the other hand, her daughters, now reaching young ladyhood are unwilling to work as she once did. They have certain accomplishments, but in the essential things, necessary for wives and mothers to be skilled in, they are sadly lacking. This is no isolated case, or it might pass unnoticed. How many young ladies are poorly fitted to take upon themselves the serious duties of wives and mothers. Both mothers and daughters are respon[illegible]

THE RAILROAD SURVEY.

Likely to Become a National Issue—Congress Will Be Asked to Nullify It Before April 1st.

The griping pains which seized East Jordan on receipt of the information that there was a possibility of Charlevoix getting a railroad, have become contagious, and the Charlevoix Journal has caught them, and is now suffering in an advanced stage of tympanitis.

Having espoused the cause of East Jordan, it becomes necessary for the Journal to strictly observe the prescribed diet and habit, and instead of throwing bad medicine out of the window, it takes what is ordered by the doctor.

In its last issue it continues to claim that the recent railroad survey was without the authority of the Company, and solely in the interest of Boyne City as a campaign trick. It also asserts that the SENTINEL's letter from President Hughart contained a clause that "at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Beardsley the survey was made." The letter contained no such language, consequently no such clause was omitted. President [illegible] [illegible] the rest of us to make it a reality.

"An interview with Mr. Hughart," is how he heads his article, and then he goes on to say Mr. Hughart was out of town, and the interview was with his son. Hughart fils repudiates what Hughart pere writes the SENTINEL, and the Journal wants people to believe this sort of evidence rather than that of the highest authority.

Now our friend of the Journal better go back to young Mr. Hughart and have him reconcile his recent interview with the Journal with one he held last Thursday with a reporter for the Grand Rapids Democrat, a paper read every morning by President Hughart. After stating the county seat situation as he understands it, he says:

"We do not wish to mix in the fight at all, but desire the people to settle the matter between themselves. The people at Ironton are anxious for us to take in their iron furnace, and I have no doubt the road will be built. The question is whether we will run a direct line across the arm, or go around by East Jordan. Mr. Beardsley went over the line for us, to see if the arm could easily be bridged. When the road is built it will certainly go to Boyne City, but whether it goes to East Jordan or not depends on the question of whether it is cheaper to go several miles around the arm or cut off several miles by bridging across it."

The weight of evidence is against the Journal and its East Jordan bosses, and their joint game of bluff, [illegible]

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Tenth Discourse of the Series on "The Marriage Ring."

A Sister's Influence in the Family in Moulding the Characters of Her Brothers—The Love of Miriam For Moses and Aaron.

We give below the tenth discourse of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's series on "The Marriage Ring," delivered in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, the subject being "The Sisters' Influence Upon the Brothers." The text was:

And the sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.—[Exodus ii, 4.

Dr. Talmage said:

Princess Thermutis, daughter of Pharaoh, looking out through the lattice of her bathing-house, on the banks of the Nile, saw a curious boat on the river. It had neither oar nor helm, and they would have been useless anyhow. There was only one passenger and that a baby boy. But the Mayflower that brought the Pilgrim fathers to America carried not so precious a load. The boat was made of the broad leaves of papyrus tightened together by bitumen. Boats were sometimes made of that material, as we learn from Pliny and Herodotus and Theophrastus. "Kill all the Hebrew children born," had been Pharaoh's order. To save her boy, Jochebed, the mother of little Moses, had put him in that queer boat and launched him. His sister Miriam stood on the bank watching that precious craft. She was far enough off not to draw attention to the boat, but near enough to offer protection. There she stands on the bank. Miriam the poetess, Miriam, the quick-witted, Miriam the faithful, though very human, for in after time she became ...

... wise, if saved at all from the rushes of the Nile, he would have been only one more of the God-defying Pharaohs, for the Princess Thermutis, of the bathing house, would have inherited the crown of Egypt, and as she had no child of her own this adopted child would have come to coronation. Had there been no Miriam there would have been no Moses. What a garland for faithful sisterhood? For, how many a law-giver, and how many a hero, and how many a deliverer, and how many a saint are the world and the Church indebted to a watchful, loving, faithful godly sister? Come up out of the farm houses; come up out of the tenement homes! Come up from the banks of the Hudson and the Penobscot and the Savannah and the Mobile and the Mississippi and all the other Niles of America, and let us see you, the Miriams who watched and protected the leaders in law and medicine and merchandise, and art, and agriculture, and mechanics, and religion! If I should ask all these physicians, and attorneys, and merchants, and ministers of religion, and successful men of all professions and trades who are indebted to an older sister for good influences, and perhaps for an education or a prosperous start, to rise, they would rise by the hundreds. God knows how many of our Greek lexicons and how much of our schooling was paid for by money that would otherwise have gone for the replenishing of a sister's wardrobe. While the brother sailed off for a resounding sphere the sister watched him from the banks of self-denial.

Miriam was the oldest of the family, Moses and Aaron her brothers and younger. Oh, the power of the elder sister to help decide the brother's character for usefulness and for Heaven! She can keep off from her brother more evils than Miriam could have driven back waterfowl or crocodile from the ark of bulrushes. The other sister decides the direction in which the cradle boat shall sail. By gentleness, by ...

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that dreadful disease Malaria, with all its malignant effects. Dyspepsia, Female Prostration, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Dropsy, Scrofulous Sores, Malassimilation of Food, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, a purely vegetable tonic, the best known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does eradicates all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

W. C. Lewis Med. Co., Gentlemen:—I have been afflicted for years with Malignant Blood Poisoning, and had given up all hope of ever being any better, until a friend advised me to try Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, which I did with the most satisfactory results. I have entirely recovered and am enjoying perfect health. I consider your remedy a very valuable preparation for all blood diseases, and general disorders.

Very truly yours,
LEONARD LARON.

W. C. Lewis Medicine Co.: For several years I have been prostrated every spring with Malarial Fever, until life had become almost unbearable. This year I ... began early to take your preparation, Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, the result is, I have escaped entirely. I am sure too much can not be said in its favor, as a preventative for Malaria.

Yours very resp.,

RELIABLE SELF-CURE.

AN OLD PREJUDICE DISAPPEARING.

Women doctors are so numerous now that the prejudice against them has long since died out. There are several in the United States, it is said, who enjoy an annual income of $20,000 and over, and a practice worth $5,000 a year is common. They have reached their present honorable position by hard and conscientious work, and all they receive is well earned. Medical colleges for women are now established in all the large cities and the graduates from them number several hundred every year. Among the women doctors of Illinois is Mrs. Addie M. Barnes, of Danville, who recently moved to that city from Lafayette, Ind. She has recently had herself as a patient, and how she was successful in working a cure she tells as follows:

"I had a very stubborn case of sciatica and had been confined to my bed for three weeks. I had blistered the limb and used all kinds of liniments to no purpose. Rev. Dr. Buchtel told me of the wonderful remedy, Athlophoros. Our druggist sent for it and I bought two bottles of it. Before I had taken three doses I was able to get out of bed and sit up for two hours. In three days I went down the street. I believe that had I persevered with the remedy the cure ...

Masked Robbers Board an Express Train Near Joliet, Ill., Kill the Messenger and Plunder the Safe of Its Contents, Valued at $35,000—The Murdered Man's Desperate Fight in Defense of His Trust—A Heavy Reward Offered—No Arrests Made.

MORRIS, Ill., March 15.—A most horrible murder was committed at Morris at one o'clock Saturday morning on the Kansas City express, No. 5, which left Chicago at eleven o'clock Friday night. As the train was nearing Morris the baggageman, who was in the second baggage car, heard the door from the forward baggage car open and found himself covered with a revolver, and was ordered not to stir and informed that another revolver was covering him. He then saw a hand with a revolver pointing toward him from the top of the car. The robbers then went through the express safe. When the train stopped it was found that the express agent, Nichols, in the other car, had been murdered. His body showed that a desperate struggle had taken place.

He had, indeed, sold his life dearly. Three bullet wounds were found, one passing from the right side of his neck through, coming out near the ear on ...

SENATE VS. EXECUTIVE.

The Upper House of Congress Has to Deal with a Stubborn and Arbitrary President.

The Edmunds resolution, as signed by every Republican member of the Judiciary Committee, declares the action of the Attorney-General in withholding the papers called for in the Duskin case by the Senate "a violation of his official duty and subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government." Under the circumstances this language is none too strong. In acting on appointments the Senate is entitled to any information in the possession of the Government that will aid it in the performance of this duty. All the important records and files of the Government are preserved in the executive departments, and if their custodians can at will designate any part of them "private and confidential" and thus prevent legislative investigation or inquiry there is an end of all equality between the legislative and executive branches, and Congress can acquire only such official information as may be allowed by the President and his Cabinet clerks. It would be a dan- ...

MR. EDMUNDS' SPEECH.

He Shows That the President Expects the Senate to Work Like a Mole—Pugh's Reply.

Senator Edmunds has at last justified the exalted rank which common fame accords to him among the statesmen of this country. The speech which he made Thursday was the great effort of the session. It was listened to with a depth of interest and a closeness of attention suggestive of the more famous olden days when such men as Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Seward, Sumner and Conkling brought the full might of their forensic powers to bear upon a subject.

The argument in defense of the Senatorial right to call for information touching a suspension from office under the Tenure-of-Office act is placed upon one of the more fundamental provisions of the constitution, and not upon the construction of a statute. "He (the President) shall from time to time," says section 3 of article 2, "give to the Congress information of the state of the Union." He shows with irresistible logic that this covers the whole case at issue, the imperativeness of the President's duty to give Congress ...

WOMEN AND WORK.

A Caution Against Fraudulent Advertisements, Issued by the Women's E. and I. Union of Boston.

The Women's Educational and Industrial Union of Boston, Mass., cautions all women to be wary of advertisements and circulars promising—on receipt of a certain sum—work at home, with large earnings. We are receiving letters from women far and near who have been defrauded by these promises. Either the person forwarding the money gets no answer at all, or the materials and implements sent are of little worth, or the finished work is rejected even if well done, or other obstacles are placed in the way, (the object being simply to get rid of her). The parties advertising make frequent changes of name and address, with some difference in circulars. They are now sending out through the United States, Canada and the Provinces, hundreds of thousands of plausible circulars, well calculated to deceive, for not many of the hundreds of thousands of women receiving them are aware that by a single advertisement any city firm can get plenty of workers close at hand.

Learning that this evil can best be checked by enlightening the public, we solicited the aid of the press, and the following continuous notice appears in our daily papers, each in turn giving it one week's insertion:

"The Women's Educational and Industrial Union, 74 Boylston street, will gladly give information regarding circulars and advertisements offering to women work at home."

Stranger than Fiction are the records of some of the cures of consumption effected by that most wonderful remedy—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Thousands of grateful men and women, who have been snatched almost from the very jaws of death, can testify that consumption, in its early stages, is no longer incurable. The Discovery has no equal as a pectoral and alterative, and the most obstinate affections of the throat and lungs yield to its power. All druggists.

CHARLEVOIX, MAR. 31, 1886.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor.

Communication.

To the Editors of the Charlevoix Sentinel.

I would like the privilege of saying a word through your columns on what seems to be the question of questions now before the people of our county. To move or not to move the seat of justice, or whether 'twill be better to submit to the ills and inconveniences we now bear, or fly to others that we know not of.

I think it will be admitted on both sides that the continuation of the struggle from year to year is to constitute a great cause of demoralization among our neighbors. To some it may be of no consequence to see men to whom many have been in the habit of looking up to as models, going around the county stating things both in relation to themselves and their neighbors that their auditors know as well as they do themselves is not the truth, and is but told in order to advance their scheme at the expense of their neighbors. Hereafter, how much confidence will their supposed dupes place in anything they may advance.

Such men must not be surprised if they hereafter find themselves weighed in their own balance, and judged by their own acts. If they will misrepresent in one case will they not in all others where self-interest comes in?

If they would bribe a poor, unsuspecting fellow by the payment of five dollars, will they not sell themselves under certain circumstances for ten? If they will go into our gin-mills and buy whiskey for, and drink it with those who have become addicted to an all destroying habit, where are they better than the poor, weak inebriate whom they would bribe by furnishing them drink that has made the life of their supposed dupe and his family miserable for years?

Is it possible that such men are willing to encourage drunkenness and misery just to gain a selfish end? If actions speak they stand self-condemned.

Such men must not feel disappointed if they find the men who drank at their expense, and promising to stand by them, drinking and making the same promise with the other side, and he who accepted their few dollars doing the same; nor can they charge either with an act more dishonorable than their own.

The difference would be, they gave, the others took; as far as honor is concerned, an even thing. It will avail nothing to charge their opponents with doing the same thing, as two wrongs never make a right. It is to remove this great cause of temptation to bribery, falsehood and fraud that we would gladly see the question settled for all time, by the removal of the cause to the center of the county. Here we are met with the plea that that would be taking it away from the center of population and business. They are free to admit that it is central as far as territory is concerned, and that it is equally easy of access with the point at which it is now located, but say it should not be moved until we know where the center of population is finally going to be.

These philosophers reasoned not so one year ago, but said it should be at the center of the county, and as the only means of getting it there we must give it to East Jordan for a year or so, and our East Jordan friends said yes, let it go round, though we do not expect to keep it, it will help boom our town.

They have had their boom, but kick now because those who helped them to it ask them to carry out their part of their programme, and let it go to the center of the county. But, say they, if you go to the center, you will be taxed for county buildings. Boyne City pledges free accommodations for ten years. East Jordan will do no better. Once settled in the center, this annual squabble will be a thing of the past, and the towns around our beautiful lake, though rivals in trade, will go forward in prosperity.

ALPHA.

Charlevoix, March 26, 1886.

Sam Small has this to say on newspaper sensation: "I've been a newspaper man for 12 years, and if I wanted to get a right judgment of anything, I'd rather go into a newspaper office than into a court of justice. No man whose life is true, pure and just is afraid of all the newspaper presses in America. They are the best detective force in this country today. They have punctured more shams, and so far as I'm concerned, I say take the bridle off and let 'em go. The only ones that will be hurt will be the shams and frauds. And if you think the newspapers print too much of a sensational kind, don't you read it, and they will quit printing it. The papers need to be reformed, but the people have got to reform first. Newspapers are printed for money and to suit their patrons. If you don't think they are run on a high moral platform like Mr. Barnum's circus, why, just reform yourselves and the papers will follow suit."

Northern Michigan News.

The Cadillac hydrophobia patient is worse.

Mrs. W. T. Gilpin of East Jordan, who lost her speech four years ago, is happy in being once more able to talk.

William FitzGerald has been appointed Master of Transportation Northern Division of the G. R. & I., in place of E. FitzGerald, resigned.

The Michigan conference of the Evangelical Association of Michigan, will be held at Reed City, beginning April 1st. Bishop Dubs of Cleveland, Ohio, will preside.

The Antrim country iron company has purchased 300,000 brick of the Pantlinville brick company, and will use the same in the erection of new kilns at Mancelona.

Dexter & Noble are making preparations to build a stone wall from the schute as far up as F. R. William's residence, as the water from Elk River is forcing its way through the embankment at that point.

Thirty thousand trout were brought to this place last Friday to be planted in the streams in this vicinity. In a few years the facilities for fishing in our streams, which is now very good, will be unsurpassed by any locality in Northern Michigan.—Sherman Pioneer.

The Cadillac Express says the railroad project from Cadillac to Sherman appears to be gaining ground rapidly and that prominent capitalists of that city are taking hold of the matter in a way that gives assurance that money instead of talk will be put into the scheme.

The Cameron Bros. have bought quite a number of logs on the Intermediate this winter. We are told that should they meet with success in disposing of their lumber during the coming season, it is their intention to put in a hardwood sawmill at that place next fall. We hope they may be able to carry out this plan.

During the winter two hundred and fifty tons of acetate of lime and three hundred and sixty barrels of wood alcohol have been drawn from Elk Rapids to Traverse City for shipment. Besides this large shipment of manufactured product, there has been a large amount of merchandise shipped in. Another inducement for a railroad.

The noble red men who dwell near Harbor Springs, celebrated in great shape last week with what they call an "Eat-a-way." A horse that was killed in an accident furnished forth the feast and Pau-Puk-Keewis danced with Minnehaha, while old Nokomis puffed her pipe until the smoke rose o'er the sand domes of the Nagow Wudjoo.

St. Ignace found salt 600 feet, but the brine was too weak for profitable working. This is because that place is too near the out-crop of the Salina group or the great salt basin of Michigan. The nearer you get to the center of the basin the stronger the brine. It is said that a contract has been let to run the St. Ignace well down 500 feet deeper.

The W. U. telegraph company are removing their wires on the inland route from Elk Rapids to Bellaire via Williamsburg and Spencer Creek to Charlevoix, but the telephone wires will at once be strung by the citizens of these places, over the same route, connecting at Elk Rapids and Charlevoix with the entire Northern Michigan circuit. Mancelona will also soon have telephonic connections with Bellaire, thus bringing all these towns into the circuit.

Petoskey Democrat: Miss Kate Smith, formerly of Flint, who has been east selecting goods for her new millinery store the past three weeks, has returned and will open up a large stock of millinery and fancy goods, combining all the latest styles and new and novel goods from the eastern markets. Ladies please call and examine goods at the corner of Lake street and Railroad avenue. Mrs. Smith who will assist her daughter in the millinery business, comes to us well recommended by friends from her former home in Flint, as being an artist in every detail of her trade. Ladies who patronize her will no doubt be perfectly satisfied with her work.

The new Hebrew Synagogue at Traverse City, was dedicated last Thursday evening, with appropriate ceremonies. Rabi N. Rosenaw, of Grand Rapids, gave a very interesting lecture in English. Rev. Mr. Puddefoot, of the Congregational church, made a few remarks that were well received. A. Greenburg and B. Segal spoke in Hebrew. Daily evening services were held during the rest of the week and also on Sunday afternoon at which latter meeting Judge Hatch made some remarks that were appropriate and well received. The Synagogue is small but presents a very neat appearance. It has a seating capacity of about 150. It is warmed by a furnace, and the basement is nicely fitted with bath tubs supplied with hot and cold water. The total cost of the building was about $1,160 and is all paid for except about $200.

THE best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

You will notice how quickly a thoroughly successful article is imitated, and also that the imitations are without merit, as they are gotten up by unscrupulous parties. Beware of imitations of Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic. The genuine is sold by Druggists, and promptly cures dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malaria diseases, poor appetite, low spirits, headache, or diseases of the kidneys, stomach and liver. Price fifty cents.

A Walking Skeleton.

Mr. E. Springer, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., writes: "I was afflicted with lung fever and abscess on lungs, and reduced to a walking Skeleton. Got a free trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, which did me so much good that I bought a dollar bottle. After using three bottles, found myself once more a man, completely restored to health, with a hearty appetite, and a gain in flesh of 48 lbs." Call at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris' Drug Store and get a free trial bottle of this certain cure for all Lung Diseases. Large bottles $1.

THOSE who believe that nature will work off a cough or cold should understand that this is done at the expense of the constitution. Each time this weakens the system, and we all know that the terminat on of this dangerous practice is a consumptive's grave. Don't take the chances, when a fifty cent bottle of Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure will safely and promptly cure an recent cough, cold or throat or lung trouble. Buy the dollar bottle of Druggists for chronic cases or family use.

MACHINE —AND— BOILER WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist, and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other Machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and corresponding POWER TO PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much time to those who have a long distance to ship this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best quality kept in stock and a large variety of castings can be obtained in this way.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

THE BEAR SNIFFED.

Whereupon the Mule Did Battle with the Weapons Which Nature had Provided.

A Scranton correspondent writes: Ike Garvey and Eph Dunham, brawny woodchoppers of the upper Lehigh timber region, took a team of mules last Saturday and began to draw railroad ties from the woods out to the main road. Along in the afternoon they let the mules stand in the wood-road, while they went ahead to cut down a lot of saplings. Presently they saw a black bear tramping through the snow in the rear of the sleigh. When the bear reached the sleigh he turned to the right, walked past it, and sniffed at the heels of the old mule. The mule, who appeared to be sleeping when the bear waddled up, stuck up his ears at once, raised his right hind foot like a flash, and gave the bear a terrible kick in the neck. The bear tumbled over in the snow, partially stunned by the blow, the sharp calks of the mule's shoe having cut and bruised the flesh directly behind his right ear.

Dunham and Garvey laughed heartily at the mule's peculiar conduct, for he had always been a very docile animal, and ran down to the team at once. Meantime the bear had recovered from the kick and got on his feet again, and was looking around to see where he was and to find out what had hit him. The mule turned his head and got a glimpse of the bear just as Dunham and Garvey came down to the sleigh. The sight seemed to enrage the mule, for he instantly became restless. He reared up, plunged forward, and tried to yank himself away from his mate. Every motion indicated that he wanted to be let loose on the bear.

"Say we unharness him an' let him fight the bear if he wants to," remarked Garvey.

"All right," said Dunham, "we'll do it."

Dunham then jumped to the mule's head and unsnapped the lines. In another second the hame strap and the belly-band were unbuckled, and the mule slipped from under the harness with nothing on except the headstall and collar. Then the mule turned straight around and made for the bear with all his might. He lunged forward with so much force and speed that he went right over the bear's back before he stopped. The bear did not attempt to get away but stood upon his haunches and was ready to fight as soon as the mule turned upon him.

The mule struck at the bear savagely with both forward feet, but the bear dodged and thus escaped the blow. Then the bear rushed at the mule, uttering a grunt of anger as he did so, and tried to strike him in the breast. The mule, however, showed more anger and grit than the bear did, and, as the latter came toward him, he struck the bear on the shoulder with one of his sharp calks, and the bear, groaning with pain from the blow, backed away. The mule quickly followed up the advantage he had gained, and the bear tumbled backward over a log, making the snow fly. The mule leaped over the log and struck the bear on the back with both fore feet before he had time to get up, but he paid dearly for it, for the bear twisted his head around and got the mule's right fore-leg between his jaws and bit it badly.

Dunham and Garvey, who had the utmost confidence in the mule's ability to conquer the bear, kept at a safe distance and watched the fight closely.

While the bear was trying to crush the bone in the mule's leg the mule bit the bear's ear and made the blood run.

A moment later the mule succeeded in yanking his leg from the bear's jaws, pranced around in the snow after he had done so, and appeared to be madder than ever. Then the two infuriated animals came together again. As the mule raised his front feet to strike, the bear sprang under his body, knocked his hind legs from under him, and tumbled him over on his side. The mule scrambled to his feet in a second, rushed up to the bear, and gave him such a tremendous thump on the nose that it made the bear stagger and roar. He was not ready to retire from the conflict, though, and as he made another effort to strike the mule the blood spurted from his nostrils. He stuck his nose into the snow and groaned loudly, and the mule stood off a few feet and eyed him steadily. Presently the bear raised his head and plunged at his antagonist again.

The mule wheeled suddenly as the bear approached him, and, turning his tail toward the bear, kicked him in the jaw with one of his hind feet and keeled him over on his back. Before he could get on his feet again the mule had begun to stamp on him with his sharp calks.

The bear struggled desperately to get away from the terrible blows which his long-eared antagonist dealt him, but his efforts were useless. The bear was getting weaker, and when Dunham and Garvey ran to the spot and clubbed the mule off, was unable to rise and was moaning piteously. Garvey at once hit the bear on the top of the head with the back of his ax, and put an end to his sufferings.

Birth and Death.

There is dancing and drinking and laughter and song,
But the babe in the cradle smiles not with the throng;
There is silent lamenting and sorrow's hot tear,
But a smile wreathes the face of the dead on the bier;
Why the dance for a birth? Why the tear for a death?
There's the panting of woe in an infant's first breath,
Men know not the times for their smiles or their tears,
When grim logic would grace the air waves with their cheers.
A day is a lifetime—what is death but a sleep?
When men dose o'er the wine cup 'tis treacherous and deep.
True hate is avoidance—see not the content
Of the throng singing songs through a life-time ill-spent.
They rise early from couches of down in the morn,
And laugh at the sweat-drops of toil that adorn;
Scarcely heard is the wail of the babe at its birth,
When a crape tells of age to be laid in the earth.
From the road of this life death is only a span,
From the babe to the lad and the lad to the man,
From proud manhood to age and from age to the hearse,
From the baptism's sprinkle to funeral obsequies,
Ay! sorrow's the stamp on the brow of the born,
But the roses in graveyards need no punishing thorn—
On slow funerals is fixed the pale infant's gaze;
But the eye of the dead sees eternity blaze—
Why, then, smile for a birth, and why weep for a tomb?
Why the tomb in the sunlight? Why closed eyes in the gloom?
While they drink round my cradle I smile at their toasts;
None know the true good but the kingdom of ghosts.
How empty to joy over one born to die!
For one dying for life, oh, how empty the sigh!
[illegible] for man's sorrows and tears;
Not the cup nor the dance, but 'tis virtue that cheers.
When my time shall have come, and Death stands at my side,
And naught shall cover my strength and my pride,
Have dancing and drinking and laughing and song
As who toasted my birth bear my coffin along.

A Georgian Doctor.

A tin sign, painted white, swings in the cold air of West Madison street. Upon it appears an extravagant representation of the Russian arms, and the name of "Dr. G. Tandeloff, of Russian Asia." In a barren office upstairs sits the doctor, smoking cigarettes. His personal appearance would indicate him to be a cross between a French soldier and a Turkish merchant. He wears a fez, his face is swarthy, and his mustache and goatee Napoleonic.

The doctor is not a pleasing conversationalist. He says he speaks sixteen languages and dialects. This is undoubtedly true, as his German and English are sprinkled with words from every known tongue. He is a native of Tiflis, Georgia, and his native tongue is Iberian or Georgian. He says he is the only man in America to whom this language is native. He was a surgeon in the Russian army during the war with Circassia, about the time of the American rebellion. He says he has been traveling for twenty-three years, and has visited all parts of the world. He has been in America eight years, traveling most of the time on horseback.

Dr. Tandeloff says his country abounds with pretty, white-haired, pink-eyed girls, but he never married, because it required too much money. The Georgian lover, according to the doctor, must present his betrothed with a complete housekeeping outfit, furniture, knives, forks, towels, clothing, etc., and especially a feather-bed. The parents of the young lady guarantee her mortal purity in consideration of this present. Should the husband discover that he has been imposed upon in this regard his friends carry a black flag to the residence of the bride's parents and otherwise express their anger by blowing horns and throwing stones at the house.

The doctor laments the depravity of the American girl. He says:

"American girl, 10 year old—so high; 12 year old—so high; go with man nights to tee-ater; go Sunday to picnic. Oough! Fire can no touch powder without bust!"—Chicago News.

"Pa," said Olivia, "we ought to have a thermometer in the house. We don't ——" "There now," shouted the old man with the air of one who closes the discussion, "I don't want to hear another word about it. If ye had one ye couldn't talk through it. Lem Haskins had one put in his house nigh a month ago, an' he's hollered himself hoarse an' they've nigh about starved to death, tryin' to order their groceries through it. No good, I tell ye."—Brooklyn Eagle.

IN the United States Senate on the 18th the right of the Senate to official papers was further discussed, Mr. Spooner sustaining the Senate and Mr. Brown the Administration. The Bankruptcy bill was made a special order for March 31. Bills were passed: For a commission of five persons to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general, economic, criminal, moral and scientific aspects; for the study in the schools of the Territories and the District of Columbia of the nature of alcoholic stimulants and narcotics; to remove the charge of desertion against soldiers who re-enlisted in the late war without having received a discharge from their first regiments, provided the re-enlistment was not to secure a bounty. In the House Mr. Harris made a favorable report on a bill to authorize the establishment of factories for the manufacture of tobacco exclusively for exportation. Mr. Collins reported a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. Also, amending the statutes so as to allow oaths to be administered by notaries public.

LABOR'S WAR.

Over Fifty Thousand Workmen in Idleness Through the Various Strikes—Utter Failure of the Missouri Pacific Company in Its Attempts to Move Trains.

NEW YORK, March 15.—Special telegrams to Bradstreet's from the more important business centers report the movement of general merchandise rather below than above previous totals. At St. Louis and southwest thereof business is at a standstill, owing to the continued interruption of traffic over the Gould Southwestern railways and the Texas & Pacific line. The number of strikes throughout the country has increased beyond all precedent, and the number of employes so idle is reported as 51,000 east of the Rocky mountains. In December, 1884, the total covering the same territory was about 18,000. Both the bituminous coal and the textile strikes outrank the Southwestern railway strike in point of numbers.

ST. LOUIS, March 15.—It is understood that Governor Marmaduke is attempting to open negotiations between the Missouri Pacific railway officials and the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor, but the results of his efforts are not known. It is believed, however, that after the Labor Commissioner has reported to him some definite arrangement will be affected to bring about a conference between the conflicting Knights and their former employers.

Mr. Hoxie, general manager of the Missouri Pacific railway, emphatically denied yesterday that propositions of compromise or settlement of the difficulties had been made by either the company or the Knights of Labor.

ST. LOUIS, March 16.—The attempts of the Missouri Pacific road to start out trains Saturday morning ended in failure, the engineers and firemen deserting the trains as soon as requested by the strikers. The first engine called out came steaming from the round-house, and had not gone far when the fireman, who was called off by the strikers, left his post, and the engineer brought his machine to a standstill. He wouldn't move without the assistance of the fireman, who would consent to do nothing unless it was to assist in getting the engine back into the round-house. The same engine with another crew was stopped at another point, and again the engine went back to the round-house. The engineer said he could not proceed because the strikers interposed an objection, and so the plan to move the freight was abandoned. No accommodation trains went out. No freight is moving at any point, and every thing is dead in the surrounding yards. The strikers are peaceful but determined, and there is no prospect of a speedy settlement.

Similar scenes were enacted at Sedalia and other points on Saturday, the strikers being successful in every case in persuading engineers and firemen to abandon their engines. Not a freight train was run out from any point on the road.

Late Saturday afternoon the Missouri Pacific filed a petition for an injunction in the State Circuit Court against J. J. McGarry and other strikers, and Judge Horner granted a temporary injunction restraining such persons from going on the railroad's property or interfering with the employes. The object of this move on the part of the railroad company is to prevent the strikers from making personal appeals to or threats against the engineers and firemen in charge of engines.

The engineers had a meeting yesterday, as did also the firemen, and they decided to live up to their agreement with the Missouri Pacific road as long as the company performed its part of the contract, but will not run their engines if intimidated by the strikers. The company will endeavor to give them protection, so that they will have no excuse for deserting their engines, as most of them did who started out with freight trains last week. The strikers at all stations on the road are to be enjoined from entering the property of the company or interfering with the running of trains, but whether this will have the effect expected by the company remains to be seen. The company claims that it has received several hundred applications for work, and that if the engineers and firemen live up to their agreement the road can be operated without the assistance of the strikers.

LOST AT SEA.

The Cunard Steamer Oregon Sunk by a Collision with a Schooner off Fire Island—Her Crew and Passengers, Numbering Eight Hundred Persons, Saved—The Vessel and Cargo Go to the Bottom—The Fate of the Schooner Unknown.

NEW YORK, March 15.—The famous Cunard steamer Oregon, with 800 souls on board, was struck by the three-masted schooner Fannie A. Gorham at 3:45 Sunday morning, while proceeding under a full head of steam, twenty-five miles southeast of Watch Hill, near Center Moriches, L. I. Three holes were stove in the Oregon's side, one almost twenty feet square and the others smaller in dimension. The vessels drifted apart, and in the darkness the people on board the Oregon heard the despairing cries of the crew on the schooner as she settled and sank. It is supposed all on board the schooner were lost. The Oregon also began to fill and her engines soon ceased to work, for her third compartment was open to the water. As day dawned pilot boat No. 11 from this city was sighted, and signals of distress were immediately hoisted on the Oregon. The pilot-boat ran to her assistance, and the schooner Elsie Graham was also attracted to the scene. It was broad daylight when they got alongside, and the work of transferring the passengers was immediately begun. This was not completed until 11:30 o'clock, Captain Cottier, of the Oregon, being the last to leave his vessel. Not a life was lost nor a person injured, and some of the mail, of which there were 600 bags, was saved and landed on the pilot boat. When this had been nearly all done the steamer Fulda of the Bremen line hove in sight, joined the two rescuing vessels, and took all the 800 people of the Oregon on board. The Cunard vessel was then drifting hopelessly about in the sea, with all her cargo and the baggage of the passengers and crew on board, when suddenly, at 1:30 yesterday afternoon, she went down head first with a great noise, and the Fulda then proceeded to this port. The passengers of both vessels will land this morning. Third Officer Taylor, of the Oregon, said to-night that immediately after the collision he attempted to save the crew of the ill-fated schooner, but vessel and men had disappeared.

[The Oregon was built for the Guion line by J. Elder & Co., at Glasgow in 1883. She was built for speed, and her trip from Queenstown to New York finished on August 23, 1884, was made in 6 days and 10 hours, breaking the best record made up to that date. The Oregon was made of iron and was 520 feet long, 54 beam, and 40 feet, 6 inches in depth, her gross measurement being about 7,500 tons. Her engines were capable of developing 12,000 horse power. She had four masts, five decks and a berthing capacity for nearly 1,800. When William H. Guion withdrew from the Guion line in the spring of 1884, the Oregon was bought by the Cunard Company.]

Favoring Chinese Claims.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The House Foreign Affairs Committee on Friday talked over the recent correspondence from the Secretary of State relative to indemnifying the Chinese for losses at the riot at Rock Springs, Wy. T. The committee is inclined to take the same view of this question as presented by Secretary Bayard, and a bill will probably be shortly agreed upon and reported making the necessary appropriations asked for by the Chinese Government. The amount of the indemnity is $160,000. This action of the committee will doubtless lead to the filing of other claims.

AN ERA OF AGITATION.

A Resume of Recent Strikes, Lockouts and Boycotts—An Interview with Jay Gould.

CHICAGO, March 16.—It has escaped the notice of none that within the last three or four years there has been a marked increase in the antagonisms of capital and labor, that is, in their attitude toward each other as evinced by the increase in the number and magnitude of strikes, the introduction of boycotting, the sudden growth of the secret labor organization known as the Knights of Labor, the proscription practiced against the Chinese on the Pacific coasts, and in the reports of the sufferings of the strikers and their families.

Discussion as to the origin of the prevalent evils has already occupied a vast amount of the attention of the public, and, as a rule, with no satisfactory results. There are those who hold that the difficulty is due to the power and greed of capital; others find it in overproduction; others in immigration, which has largely increase the supply of labor, and hence a competition whose result has been the lowering of wages; still others find an explanation in the acts and policies of the great political parties, in the imperfect organization of society, in the distribution of land, and in other directions too numerous to specify, or, in many cases, too obscure or improbable to be worthy of mention.

The extent to which the relations of labor and capital have been ruptured is enormous, if the scene of civilization involved be taken into the estimate; it is enormous if limited simply to this country, which, of all countries in the world, is asserted to be one in which there is no lack of democratic equality in the distribution of the necessary products of life. Within the last six weeks sufficient events have taken place to indicate a most unsatisfactory condition of labor, and what has occurred within this limited period is but a small fraction of events of the same nature which had existence within the last twelve months. A few of the instances which have taken place within a few weeks will serve to indicate the nature of the situation.

In New Orleans, February 22, the brakemen working on the Illinois Central railway struck for an advance of wages and increased assistance for operating the freight department. For some time freight movements were wholly interrupted.

A few days before this two hundred ship carpenters in Spring Wells, Mich., struck against an increase in working time without a proportionate increase in wages. An attempt was made to fill the places of the strikers with Canadian working-men, but, owing to interference of the Knights of Labor, it has not yet been successful.

In February 120 men struck for an increase of twenty-five per cent. in pay in the trunk factory of Lewis & Co., Racine, and about the same date fifty men went out in the harness factory of Sax & Moresbeck, in Cincinnati. Among other strikes of that month was one by the employers, in the person of the coal syndicate of Pittsburgh, which ordered a suspension of work in the Connellsville coke region on account of riots and incendiarism in the vicinity; one of eighty men in Chicago in the furniture factory of Bruschke & Ricke for payment fortnightly instead of every three weeks, as was the custom, and for the discharge of an obnoxious foreman, and to do away with piece-work. Still other strikes are those of the Maxwell factory men against the use of machinery in the making of boxes, the McCormick reaper difficulty, in which the strike of several hundred operatives was precipitated to secure the discharge of non-union working-men, and the New York street-car strikes for shorter hours of labor, which terminated in favor of the strikers.

The present month, although only about one-half gone, has been a notable period for the outbreak of labor disturbances. The strike against the Gould system in the Southwest commenced February 15, with the going out of 4,000 men in Marshall, Tex., on account of the discharge of A. C. Hall, foreman of the wood shops of the Texas & Pacific railroad. Hall was a delegate to a meeting of the Knights of Labor, and claims to have secured leave of absence for the purpose. At the close of the session he went to work, but was discharged. The strike has since been extended to all portions of the railway system controlled by Gould, and probably not less than from eight to ten thousand men are now lying idle in obedience to the order of the Knights of Labor.

The list thus given is but a small portion of the whole. In Erlington, Ky., 350 miners are out; in Springfield, O., 1,200 men are locked out by two or three establishments as a movement against the Knights of Labor; in South Bend, Ind., 1,100 of the Studebakers' employes are on a strike for an increase of twenty-five per cent. in wages; in New York 4,000 members of the American Order of Joiners have struck for an increase in pay, and in Shenandoah, Pa., 500 men and boys are locked out by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal Company, on account of a disagreement as to the price to be paid for the working of a new vein of coal.

It may be noted that in all these numerous instances there have been a few mutual concessions. The Chicago Calde Cigar Company, after a ten months' boycott, ordered by the Knights of Labor, yielded the point at issue—the employment of union workmen. A strike at the Mingo mill works in Ohio, after extending over nine months, was settled a short time since by compromise. Several shoe firms in Auburn, Me., have yielded to the demand, and have agreed with the Knights of Labor on a plan agreeable to both parties, and the same is true of several cigar-making firms in the city of New York.

The boycott against the leading shoe manufacturers of this city, instituted because of the employment of convict contract labor, has been lifted, the manufacturers agreeing to desist from the employment of any but free men.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 16.—In an interview Monday Mr. Jay Gould said that he was surprised by the strike, but it was made on an issue which the roads could not control. The Texas & Pacific being in the hands of the United States Court, any attempt to arrange matters could be looked upon as contempt. Mr. Gould said it was the intention of the management of the Missouri Pacific to resume operations as soon as protection is afforded.

Starved to Death.

SHELBYVILLE, Ind., March 16.—The recent death of Albert J. Gorgas, clerk of the Shelby County circuit court, it is now learned, was caused from starvation. Some time ago his health began to fail, and he became imbued with the idea that he could cure himself by dieting. Accordingly he began to diminish his food, but this did not seem to afford any relief, and he then totally desisted from eating any thing. From the time he began his fast until his death, a period of forty-two days, not a particle of food passed down his throat, and he died literally of starvation, resisting all efforts to give him nourishment, which was furnished him during the last days by enema.

Killed by Exploding Boilers.

CLARION, Pa., March 16.—Shortly before noon yesterday the boiler used at Hick's coal shaft on the Pittsburgh & Western railroad exploded. William Danes, engineer, and Joseph Elesner, fat trimmer, were buried in the debris. Elesner died in a short time. Danes was terribly scalded and his skull fractured. He can not recover.

At Limetown, Pa., the boiler of the pumping-boat at Hilldale coal works exploded yesterday morning, fatally scalding William Farrs, the engineer. The boat was badly damaged.

A MASSACRE.

Thirteen Negroes Shot Down by an Armed Mob in a Court Room at Carrollton, Miss.—Ten Instantly Slain and Three Mortally Wounded—Cause of the Tragedy.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 18.—Information is received of a sickening tragedy in the court-house at Carrollton, Miss. It is impossible, owing to the isolated character of the town, to give full particulars but the following facts are gleaned from different points within telegraphic reach: About a month ago James M. Liddell, Jr., a young lawyer of Carroll County, was shot and wounded by three negroes in ambush. The wounds were painful but not serious, and Liddell suffered only temporary inconvenience. The negroes were arrested, but made a counter charge against Liddell, and both cases had been fixed for trial yesterday. At the opening of court the negroes were on hand with their witnesses and a number of spectators.

About one o'clock a party of forty or fifty white men, armed with carbines and revolvers, rode up to the court house, dismounted, leisurely hitched their horses, and entered the court-room. Scarcely any words were spoken before the party opened fire on the negroes, riddling them with bullets and shooting them down as they attempted to escape. In an incredibly short space of time ten negroes had been killed and three mortally wounded, none of the negroes in the court-room escaping. Having finished their work the party withdrew, mounted their horses, and left the town by the same road they came in on. Those at the court-house, who witnessed the affair, claim not to know the attacking party, and all any none of the men live near Carrollton.

A later dispatch from Winona throws a little more light on the assassination. At the trial about twenty colored men were present. The fifty white men, well mounted and each carrying a Winchester, came riding up and surrounded the court-house. They then fired into the building, instantly killing ten negroes and wounded three others so that they died soon after, and, with the exception of a few who escaped through a window, all the other negroes in the building were wounded, some seriously.

The trouble between Liddell and the negroes occurred three weeks ago. Liddell had interfered in a row between two negroes, and afterward heard the crowd cursing him. He walked up to them and inquired why they were abusing him. An altercation ensued and a number of shots were fired, Liddell being severely wounded.

The people of Carrollton charge the tragedy to the unreasonable leniency of Governor Lowry in commuting death sentences. Some very important convictions of both white and black murderers have taken place in the last few years, but in nearly all, if not every instance, the executive power has been interposed to save the condemned from the gallows. The people have wearied of this and have in half a dozen cases lately done their own lynching to save costs of court. This may not be a case in point, but is doubtless an outgrowth of this sentiment.

Carrollton, where the tragedy occurred, is the capital town of Carroll County, and in the interior away from the railroad or telegraph line, but on the line of the proposed road from Greenville to connect with the Georgia Pacific. It is twenty-four miles south of Grenada and about eight miles west of Winona. The Illinois Central runs across the southeastern portion of the county. The population of the county is about evenly divided between white and colored. The county takes good care of her schools and churches and the people have been regarded as exceptionally law-abiding.

Forced to Disgorge.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Hamilton Cole, referee in the action brought by George C. Holt, the assignee, for the benefit of the creditors of Ferdinand Ward against William S. Warner, filed his report with the clerk of the Supreme Court yesterday. It is in favor of Julien T. Davies, the receiver of the firm of Grant & Ward, and finds that the payment of all moneys made by Ward either by his individual check or by the checks of Grant & Ward upon the so-called contract business were fraudulent and void, as against the defendant, Julien T. Davies, as receiver; and that Warner must pay over to Davies, as receiver, all moneys received by him from Ward over and above the amount paid by him to Ward. This sum the referee finds to be $1,255,361.36, which, with interest thereon from May 6, 1884—$140,391.20—makes the total amount to be recovered $1,395,752.51. He further decides that the defendants, Warner and his wife, execute and deliver within thirty days from the filing of this judgment such deeds of conveyance, release and quit-claim as may be necessary to satisfy the judgment.

The Harmonists.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 18.—An argument in a very interesting case was held before Register Becker, of Beaver County, yesterday on a caveat filed by the attorneys of the Harmonist Society, of Economy, against the issuing of letters of administration to Charles Meyer, of Philadelphia, on the estate of George Rapp, deceased. Rapp was the founder of the society. Since his death, claimants to the number of one hundred and five in Wurtemberg, Germany, have arisen as heirs to his estate, which has already been administered upon. The attorneys for the Harmonists claim that the affairs have all been properly settled under the laws of their association. The register heard the argument and reserved his decision. Should he refuse to grant letters of administration to Meyer, the case will be brought into the courts. The property involved in the case is estimated at $17,000,000.

A Ray of Hope.

NEW ORLEANS, March 18.—The strike on this end of the Texas Pacific railroad virtually ended last evening and trains are now running out as usual. A committee of the Knights of Labor waited on Receiver Sheldon yesterday, and had a conference in which both sides agreed that the case of Hall, the company's employe at Marshall, Tex., whose discharge caused the strike, should be submitted to the United States court for arbitration. It is believed Hall will submit to the decision of the court and that the trouble is to be thus ended finally.

St. Patrick's Day.

CHICAGO, March 18.—The Irish spent no money yesterday for a St. Patrick's day parade, but by a concert and ball in the evening, at the First Cavalry armory, raised $2,000 for the Parnell fund. The day was observed throughout the United States. In New York there was a monster parade, headed by the Sixty-ninth regiment. Ten thousand men were in line in Brooklyn, and an equal number turned out in Baltimore. There was no general observance in Washington. Erie, Pa., enjoyed a large banquet, and there was a parade and banquet in each of the cities of Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Kansas City and Denver.

High Water in Nebraska.

OMAHA, Neb., March 18.—At an early hour yesterday morning ice gorged at the Union Pacific bridge over the Loup river, causing the bottom lands to be overflowed for miles, and also a portion of the town of Columbus. Hundreds of people were obliged to leave their houses and seek safety elsewhere. The latest report states that the water is still rising, and much danger is feared, especially to railroad travel. The Platte river, into which the Loup empties, near Columbus, is very high and overflowing the country. People in the low lands were warned by couriers of impending danger, and as yet no lives have been lost.

HELD FOR BRIBERY.

Alderman Jaehne, of the New York Council, Arrested on a Serious Charge—He Confesses to Having Sold His Vote on the Broadway Surface Franchise for $20,000.

NEW YORK, March 19.—Henry W. Jaehne, member of the City Council, was arrested yesterday on a warrant sworn out by District Attorney Martine charging Jaehne with having asked and received money bribes for his vote in favor of the Broadway franchise steal. Jaehne was arrested shortly before noon by two police detectives, whisked off to Inspector Byrnes at the police headquarters, and there held a prisoner until one o'clock, when he was taken before Judge Gildersleeve. He waived examination and was released on $15,000 bond. Jaehne's arrest caused a great sensation in municipal circles, and at first it was rumored that he had been indicted and arrested as a "fence" and partner of the burglars who robbed Mrs. Hamilton's house of silverware. But the truth soon became known that Jaehne had confessed every thing to Inspector Byrnes, and that the district attorney had procured an indictment and caused the warrant to issue on this confession. Inspector Byrnes last night told a dramatic story about the arrest and confession of Jaehne.

Jaehne admitted to the inspector several times that he had received $20,000 for his vote on the Broadway franchise, and gave names of other aldermen who had received like amounts. Jaehne also declared that he had received pay for every railroad franchise he had favored since he first became an alderman, and he favored them all beginning May 12, 1884, and ending at his last appearance in the board. Jaehne voted in favor of twenty-three street-railroad franchises and received from $5,000 to $20,000 for each vote.

The greatest consternation has been spread among men who were "railroad aldermen" in 1884, last year, and so far this year, and the fear of coming trouble has spread to the officials of all the railroads receiving franchises during this time. The feeling among prominent men of this city is that the greatest case of municipal corruption in history is about to be uncovered in New York, and that the Tweed ring robberies fade into insignificance compared to it.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

The News of the Chinese Outrages in America Reaches Hong Kong—The Mikado's Donation to the Grant Monument Fund—Japan's New Census.

YOKOHAMA, March 14.—Hong Kong advices say that the committee of the Lung Wah hospital received February 21 a dispatch from a committee of the Chung Wa Wui Kun, San Francisco, complaining that over $500,000 worth of Chinese property had been destroyed by mobs in the United States, that many persons had been killed, and that there was great suffering among the Chinese in America. In accordance with a request made in the dispatch these facts have been made known, the Chinese warned not to go to the United States, and copies of the dispatch sent to the Viceroys of Two Kwang and Canton. The dispatch stated that complaint had been made to the Tsung Li Yamen.

The Mikado of Japan has ordered that $500 be sent to the president of the Grant monument committee of New York in token of his respect for the dead General.

The new census of Japan places the population of the Empire at 38,500,000.

Four of the crew of the United States war ship Trenton have been sent ashore at Hong Kong suffering with the small-pox.

SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

A Woman in a Cincinnati Suburb Kills One Son, Nearly Kills Another, and Then Commits Suicide.

CINCINNATI, March 19.—A short time ago Esquire Bohrman, of Avondale, a suburb of Cincinnati, lost a suit involving $500. This so preyed upon the mind of his wife that it is supposed she became deranged. Yesterday morning Mr. Bohrman heard a noise in his wife's bed-room, in which his sons also slept, and attempted to enter, but found the door locked. Every thing becoming still, he did not at once force an entrance, but when he did get into the room he found his wife dead, with her throat cut with a razor, his son Albert, fourteen years old, also dead with his throat cut, and another son, Arthur, severely, if not fatally wounded by a blow on the head with a hammer. Arthur was able to say that his mother came to him some time in the night and told him to go to sleep, that he did fall asleep and was awakened by a blow on his head. He ran to the door and found it locked. He tried to remove the lock, but she struck him again. Then he heard his father at the door, but could not give an alarm, and then his mother killed herself.

DEATH OF A HEROINE.

BOSTON, March 19.—Miss Abigail Bates, so well known as one of the two heroines who frightened away the British during the war of 1812 by sounding the fife and drum, died in Scituate Wednesday, aged eighty-nine. Her sister and companion in the "army of two," Rebecca Bates, died December 17, 1881. They were daughters of the lighthouse keeper at Scituate during the war of 1812. At one time they were left entirely without guards, even their father being away, and at this crisis a British man-of-war suddenly made its appearance. As the crew made preparations to land, the girls, then aged respectively nineteen and fifteen, were greatly alarmed, but seizing a drum and fife, they went into a grove of trees, making all the noise they could. The British, evidently fearing the presence of a large American force, did not land, but soon sailed away. This clever ruse on the part of the two girls probably saved the town and two cargoes of flour then lying within the harbor.

Killed His Mother-in-Law.

ST. LOUIS, March 19.—Yesterday afternoon Nicholas Emil, a brushmaker, whose wife died about three weeks ago, went to the residence of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Louis Schmitt, for the purpose of obtaining the effects belonging to his wife. A quarrel ensued and Emil shot the old lady, killing her instantly. He then returned to his own residence on Kosciusko street and cut his throat. A doctor was sent for and dressed the wound. Soon afterward Emil obtained a knife and again hacked his throat, cutting open the first wound. The doctor was once more sent for, but he says Emil can not possibly live.

William S. Warner Is Missing.

NEW YORK, March 19.—William S. Warner is missing, and the general impression is that he has fled to Canada, although his friends deny the rumor. A judgment for $1,501,965 was entered against him yesterday on the report of Referee Cole. The suit to recover this money was brought by George Holt, receiver of Ferdinand Ward's individual estate, but the referee gives the money to Julian T. Davies, receiver of the firm of Grant & Ward. If the judgment stands Grant & Ward's creditors will receive forty cents on the dollar.

A SONG OF LIFE.

A woman sat by her cottage door,
Above her roses hung;
A beautiful child in her arms she bore,
While caught at the yellow rose she wore;
And this was the song she sung:

"I sang a song in the early dawn,
When the sky was flushed with the rosy morn,
A song of hope and love and truth;
Oh, a sweet, sweet song is the song of youth!

"I am singing a song in the glory of noon
And it ripples along to a merry tune,
A song with love and happiness rife;
Oh, a sweeter song is the song of life!"

And I said: "Her song I will not borrow
For joy is not for long;
Who laughs to-day may weep to-morrow,
For life is bitterness, pain and sorrow,
And the world is going wrong."

The woman sat by her cottage door,
Above her the roses hung;
Her strong, white arms no burden bore,
A bit of crape at her throat she wore,
And this was the song she sung:

"I am singing a song this afternoon,
And it drifts along to a mournful tune;
A song with grief and suffering rife,
Oh, a sad, sad song is the song of life!

"I shall sing my song once more, I trow,
In the tender light of the evening glow,
A song of rest and love and faith;
O, the sweetest song is the song of death."

And I carelessly said: "The joy I miss
From her song of life to-day;
But who can weep in a world like this
Where all is sunshine and hope and bliss,
And hearts are blithe and gay?"

The woman sat by her cottage door,
Above her the roses hung,
A tiny babe in her arms she bore,
And white, white roses at her throat she wore,
And this was the song she sung:

"I am singing my song of life again,
And it flows along to a joyous strain,
And a song with hope and love replete;
Oh, the song of life is sweet, so sweet!"

And I said: "May we all her new song borrow
In its gladsomeness complete;
We weep to-day and we laugh to-morrow,
For life is joy and life is sorrow,
But the world is ever sweet."

FAIRLY CAUGHT.

A Simple Story of Love and War.

When the war broke out in 1861, I was at college. Northern born and bred, I fully shared the feelings of the North, and when at the commencement of 1862 I finished my course of study, I resolved to enlist "for three years or the war." I entered a cavalry regiment just then forming, and, going out a non-commissioned officer, I returned wearing the bars of a Captain.

We had scarce begun to drill, when our regiment was called into active service, and during the continuance of the struggle we were kept almost constantly moving—breaking the communications of the enemy or protecting those of our own army, chasing small bodies of Confederates or exercising our ingenuity in keeping out of the clutches of larger bodies. On the whole, we succeeded in making ourselves generally disagreeable to the people on the other side, and though doing a great deal of service we had very little really hard fighting and hence came through with less loss in killed and wounded than most other cavalry regiments suffered. During the summer of 1864, we did service in one of the Gulf States. Much of the time we were away from our base of supplies and had to live off the country. This led us into a new line of experiences, some of which were amusing, some pathetic, some sentimental. Of the adventure I am about to relate, you may form your own opinion.

One day when, for a wonder, my company had been permitted to lie idle in camp for a whole week, I was sent with a train of wagons and about forty men to do some foraging. The country in the vicinity of our camp had already been stripped bare so we went out and on picking up a little here and there until we were about twenty miles from camp. There was no hostile force known to be near us and so we felt perfectly safe.

Late in the afternoon we reached a plantation. It was of moderate size and had formerly been carefully cultivated, but the fields were now neglected and full of weeds. There were the usual outbuildings, and a little way off the slave quarters—now entirely deserted. The house was not large. It stood in a beautiful park, and in the midst of surrounding decay was very neatly kept. On our way we had heard of this plantation and of the family resident here. The owner had commanded a regiment of Confederates, and had but recently lost his life in battle. His only son was now an officer in the same army. The family at home consisted of the mother, who was infirm, and her daughter, a young lady of about twenty. There were about the place four or five old African women and two or three old black men, with a few colored children. All the able-bodied colored people had disappeared—some of the men being in the Union service. No other persons were to be seen about the plantation. As we had been told that these people had some corn, and also some corn-meal, we stopped to look the matter up. As our wagons were only about half loaded, the boys at once began to search the out buildings, and, finding a few bushels of corn, promptly appropriated it.

Having given orders to the men, I went into the house to make some inquiries of the family. The young lady met me at the door and very frankly told me of their condition—told me of her dead father and of her absent brother—that her mother was sick upstairs, and that at present they were living on corn bread made without salt; that they had less than a bushel of meal in the house, and not a pig, a chicken, a cow, a horse or a mule, any where on the plantation. She hoped her brother might soon return, for if supplies were not obtained they must starve.

It was a terrible story, very plainly and simply told, with no complaining or faultfinding, no blaming any one, either Federal or Confederate. I was much interested and moved by the recital, but that I might understand the case better, I asked to be shown to the room of the sick mother. I found the condition of things was even worse than I had expected. Every thing indicated that the family had formerly lived in luxury, but aside from articles of furniture, the house was desolate indeed. The mother was unable to leave her room. Her face was very thin and pinched, and I saw at once that it was not disease that had prostrated her, but that she was suffering from lack of suitable nourishment—that in short she was starving.

Meanwhile, some of the men, having searched the outbuildings, getting, however, very little for their pains, came into the house to look for the meal of which we had been told. The young lady, who had accompanied me to her mother's room—on hearing the men moving about below—went down stairs. At the foot of the stairway she met two of the men, who, having passed through some of the lower rooms, were about to go upstairs. They at once asked for the meal. She told them that she had food on hand for only a few days, and that her mother was sick. Hearing the conversation, and wishing to spare the invalid as much as possible, I went to the door, and then down stairs. Several of the men were in the hall. Said I: "Boys, an old lady is sick upstairs, and next thing to starving. They have nothing fit for her to eat; the daughter tells you the truth about the meal. Instead of taking what they've got, let's give the mother something in memory of our own mothers who are safe at home. We won't lose any thing by it, for if we can't find all we need, Uncle Sam's supply train can help us out."

The boys needed no urging. I called Miss ——, who had gone to her mother as I was talking, and asked her to receive and take care of our gifts. Several of the men had their haversacks with them on entering the house, and all had either there, or in the wagons, personal supplies in plenty. I had some bread and a bottle of wine, and we found two or three quarts of salt that we could spare. One of the boys gave a chicken that he had picked up for his own supper, others gave other articles, and so the pile grew until the family, colored people and all, was provided with food for at least a week, and the sick mother in particular with provisions more suitable for an invalid than unsalted corn bread.

Of course the young lady cried at this new turn affairs had taken—that was to be expected—but when she thanked us specially for what we had given her for her mother, and prayed God to bless us for our kindness, there was a big lump in my throat as I thought of my own mother, safe in her Northern home, with plenty about her, and happy as she could be while her only boy was "gone to the war." And when Miss —— shook hands with me at parting I felt glad that we had been able to lend help to the needy.

We went on our way, found provisions and forage, loaded our wagons, and in due time reached our camp in safety. A day or two later we left that locality. During the month that followed, we were constantly moving, and had skirmishing and fighting almost every day. Some of the boys lost their lives and were buried where they fell, some were wounded, and were sent inside the lines, or to their homes in the North, to be cared for. I was taken prisoner, and with a few others captured at the same time, was hurried off to a prison camp.

Now, I am not particularly hard to please, but I did not like the restraints of my new quarters, and so, on general principles, I registered a vow that, as soon as I could tear myself away from the hospitality of my entertainers, I would change my boarding place. The opportunity was a good while coming, but it came at last.

There was considerable sickness in the prison and a number of men died during my stay. The burial ground was outside the stockade and some hundreds of yards distant. From time to time details of our men would be made to bury the dead—a guard always accompanying and keeping careful watch. I had been in the prison several weeks and though I had been on the watch for an opportunity to escape, had thus far been unable to see an "opening." Others had in various ways contrived to absent themselves without leave, but most of these had been recaptured. One evening, with seven other men, I was sent to the burial ground, three guards going with us. The work was finished a little after sunset and we sat down for a few moments' rest before starting back. A hundred yards away was a creek and I asked the corporal, a good-natured fellow, to let me go and fill my canteen with fresh water. Leave was given and I started for the water, walking briskly. This privilege had previously been granted to others, and when I started I suppose that a guard would follow me—indeed I thought it likely that all my comrades would ask leave to get some fresh water. Possibly they intended to do it, but were a little slow about starting, so that when I reached the water and glanced back over my shoulder I saw to my surprise that I was entirely alone, and that the guards and my comrades were quietly resting where I had left them.

Quick as a flash I determined to strike for my liberty. There was a large thicket not two rods away, and a half-dozen leaps took me out of sight. The moment the guards observed my movement they yelled at me to stop, and two of them came after me on the run. They did not shoot, for I was out of sight in the thicket before they were fairly waked up and had at least one hundred and fifty yards the start of them. They were in earnest in the pursuit, however, and dashed into the thicket within a few moments. The other boys looked on with interest, as did also the solitary guard who had been left behind. Noticing his forgetfulness of present responsibilities, the boys concluded that they, too, would move for liberty. Quietly stealing behind the guard, two of them seized, disarmed, tied and gagged him; and without further ceremony all soon took their leave. Three of them were captured the next day, but four escaped to the Union lines. Of course I knew nothing of this till long afterward.

When the guards called to me and ordered me to halt I knew that I had gone too far to back out. As I was "in for it," I put forth every energy and made my best time running. In some places the woods were tolerably open, but skirting the creek was a fringe of underbrush that made it easy to hide. Dodging from clump to clump as I ran, I kept entirely out of sight of my pursuers. In fact I don't think they saw me after I made my dash. In open daylight I could not have evaded them so readily, but in the thickets it was now growing dark.

At first I could hear the guards, as they rushed through the undergrowth, but I was careful to make as little noise as possible, and as they did not hear me they supposed I was hidden, and lost so much time peering about that I soon left them entirely. I knew that the search would be renewed in the morning and so determined to get as far away as possible during the night.

The forest was unbroken for miles in the direction I was traveling. Here and there a path or poor country road was found, but I saw no houses not a single human being. I was going up stream, and I occasionally walked in the water as well as took other precautions to break my trail. At last I left the stream and turned off across the country. The sky was cloudless and the moon was nearly full. This gave me plenty of light and made it easy to get bearings and to keep them. Keeping a sharp lookout, I pushed on as rapidly as my strength would permit. Toward morning I came to a small stream. Changing my course abruptly I walked in the water for a quarter of a mile. I judged I was now fifteen to eighteen miles from the prison, and as daylight was coming on I hid in a deep thicket, lay down, slept a little and rested for the day.

I had eaten nothing since starting, and was in poor condition for traveling on the second night, but I trudged on, keeping my direction as well as I could, following no roads, but traveling directly across the country. I did not try to hide at daylight on the second morning, but pushed on, hoping to find a house where I might get some food. I had passed houses during the night, but seeing no one stirring, I had not stopped. About an hour after sunrise I met a black boy, who told me that a company of cavalry was in the neighborhood, and I must "look sharp," or I'd "done git cotched." The boy's home was not far off, and after a little maneuvering he brought me some food, and directed me to a safe hiding place in a neighboring swamp, where I rested for the day. In the evening he brought more food, and, getting directions for my journey, I traveled on.

I need not stop to tell the experiences of each successive day and night. Usually I rested and slept by day. I made good progress, but I knew that I had a long way to go before I could reach a point occupied by the Union troops. Sometimes I had to go a day or two without food, at other times I was well supplied. After I had been on the way for two weeks dodging this way and that, to avoid towns and the more public roads—I found myself reduced to extremities. I had now been two days without food; I had seen soldiers each day, and knew that I might be surprised by them at any moment; I had traveled a part of the previous night, and had been moving nearly all day.

Toward evening I came to a plantation. I saw the house at a distance across the fields and made a long detour to reach it without being seen. It was dark when I reached it, and coming up in the rear I was not long in discovering that the family had company from the Confederate army. A squad of soldiers was encamped about two hundred yards away and a sentinel was pacing in front of the house. The table was being set in the dining-room, and the smell of food almost overpowered me. Finding a window open I crept into a room adjoining the dining-room, hoping to find there something to appease my terrible hunger.

I had been in the room scarce a minute when the door was opened and a young lady entered carrying a light. I could have leaped from the window and escaped in the darkness, but my hunger had made me desperate. As I had nothing of the Federal blue about me the lady may have thought, at first sight, that I was one of the Confederate soldiers from the camp. Though she was evidently surprised at finding an intruder in the room she made no outcry, but closed the door and looked into my face with a quick searching glance.

I spoke at once: "Won't you please give me something to eat, I am almost famished." Judge my surprise when she replied:

"Are you not the Yankee officer who spared me a sack of meal, and gave me some food and wine for my sick mother?"

I gazed at her in speechless astonishment. I recalled the incident and, looking for a moment, I recognized the lady who stood before me. My courage returned; I knew now something of my whereabouts and that the Union lines must be near. I resolved to throw myself on her generosity, and replied:

"Certainly. I recall the incident you refer to. I think, however, I did only my duty in the case, and that any other good soldier would have done the same. I am as much surprised as you can possibly be, at this singular meeting. I have been a prisoner and have escaped, and am starving. Can you give me something to eat?"

"With great pleasure, for we have plenty of food now. But there's a company of soldiers here, and the officers are waiting for their supper. I will supply your wants as soon as I can. For the present I must put you into this closet, where you will be out of sight."

Hastily opening a door, she pushed me inside a small room, closed the door, locked it and went away. I was in total darkness, for the room, or closet, had no window. I groped around for a few moments, but found nothing beside the bare walls. Then I tried the door, but it was too strong to be forced. Evidently I was, for a time at least, a prisoner; and feeling too nearly exhausted to do anything further, I sat down on the floor and began to consider the situation.

The guests came to the table, and from the sounds that reached me and the time they continued, I could imagine that the family larder was pretty well supplied now. It seemed to me they would never get done eating. I remembered that when a boy I had sometimes had to wait till a "second table" when my mother had company, and remembered the sensation. At last I heard footsteps, and the door was unlocked. But instead of my young lady here was a Confederate field officer, in full uniform, and wearing his side arms. He saluted me with "Hello, Yank," to which I promptly responded "Hello, Johnny."

"You must be a brave man to be captured and locked up by a woman."

"Well," said I, "that depends. You're not so hungry as I am, or you'd know how it is yourself."

"I beg your pardon, sir; you must excuse my pleasantry. I am Major ——, the brother of the lady whom you have just met. My sister tells me that you did her and our mother a kindness some time ago. The food you gave my mother carried her through, and she is doing well now and likely to live for many years yet. But for your kindness I think she must have died, for the fortunes of war for a long time before and after your visit prevented me from doing any thing for her. Indeed, I did not, and could not, know of the condition of things at home. And now it is with great pleasure that I find myself able to do you a service. And Yankee as you are, and escaped prisoner to boot, I am going to supply your needs, and then take you to your own lines in safety. I can appreciate kindnesses done to my folks at home, and my duty to the Confederacy will not stand in the way of my requiting them. My sister has prepared some food, which I will bring to you at once, and I wish you to consider yourself an honored guest and not a prisoner. Of course you will excuse me for not introducing you to my other guests, as it might not be the best thing for either of us."

Giving me a chair and a light, he stepped into another room, returning immediately with a tray loaded with food. Telling me to eat at my leisure, he excused himself, saying that he would return as soon as it would be safe to do so, and would conduct me to my friends.

After my long fast, I can assure you that I ate heartily. I think no food ever tasted so good. No one would have called the coffee genuine Java, for Uncle Sam's blockaders had interfered with grocery business down South; but I was not fastidious. At last my meal was ended and my hunger fully satisfied. It was after midnight when Major —— returned. We went out at the window through which I had entered the house, and so passed the guards. Going to the stable, two excellent horses were found ready for use, and mounting them, we started at once on our way.

I will not attempt to describe the ride. Circumstances made us feel like old acquaintances, and in spite of the differences between the Blue and the Gray, we chatted with perfect freedom. The air was balmy, and the sky clear. We galloped on for more than an hour without incident. It was a plain country road, and no one was seen stirring. After going fifteen or sixteen miles, the Major checked his horse and asked me to stop. Said he:

"There is a Federal picket post half a mile further on this road. I can not safely go nearer, and for obvious reasons I must return at once. You are now free and out of all danger. Again I thank you for your kindness to my family. God bless you, and give you a safe return to your loved ones in the North. And when the war is over I hope to see you again at my house, when I may entertain you more becomingly than I have now been able to do."

I dismounted, gave the Major the rein of the horse I had been riding, took his hand, thanked him for the favors done me, and prayed that he too might be spared to return to his home. We exchanged addresses and parted. He galloped back to his comrades and I walked forward in the direction of the post, whistling with all my might:

"John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave,
But his soul goes marching on."

It seemed like a pretty long half-mile to that picket-post, but at last I heard the welcome challenge of the soldier on duty. Behind him, aroused by my noise, were grouped a half-dozen of the "boys in blue." It did not take me long to prove my identity, when I received all needed attention. In due time I reached my regiment and put in a few more blows for the old flag. At the close of the war I returned home to find my mother in good health and waiting to give her soldier boy a worthy welcome.

A few months later I received a letter from my Southern Major. He, too, had passed safely through the war and had returned to his home and friends. A pleasant correspondence followed. During the next winter I revisited the old plantation "on business." The traces of war's desolation were being rapidly removed. The old lady was in excellent health, and insisted that on my next visit, a few months later, I should bring my mother with me. And if you will visit me at my own home, I will introduce you to the identical darling who captured and locked up the Yankee officer on that autumn night.—N. Y. Tribune.

A COOL MAN.

Colonel St. Hilaire's Wonderful Coolness Under Trying Circumstances.

"The coolest man I ever knew was old Victor de St. Hilaire, the Colonel of an infantry regiment that saw some service in Algeria," said Colonel Henri Dubois, one of a party of French officers who, having halted to take a look at Siam on their way home from the Tonquin war, had come to dine with us on board of a British gun-boat which had somehow found its way up the Meinam river.

"I've known men," he continued, "who managed to put on a great show of coolness in time of danger, though they were really very much excited; but there was no putting-on with St. Hilaire—it came as natural to him as eating his dinner. All his hair-breadth escapes (and he had had so many that he could hardly count them himself) had left him as cool as before, and it really seemed as if dangers passed him by because he would not condescend to notice that they were there at all. Once his men mutinied, and two of them clapped their bayonets to his breast as if to run him through; but the Colonel only smiled, and said, as quietly as ever: 'Be careful, my lads; you might hurt me.'

"Now it happened that in Colonel St. Hilaire's regiment there was a peppery young sub-Lieutenant who was as hot as the Colonel was cool. With him it was always (as you English say) 'a word and a blow, and the blow first.' He had fought so many duels that the soldiers used to call him 'Sudden Death,' and to say that the best way to end the war would be for him to challenge the enemy's whole army, man by man. Well, one day this Lieutenant had committed some fault, for which the Colonel gave him such a scolding that the young fellow's hot blood couldn't bear it any longer. Quick as lightning he whipped out a pistol and fired right at St. Hilaire's face, so close that the muzzle almost touched him. But the pistol missed fire, and the Colonel said, quite coolly: 'Forty-eight hours' arrest for not keeping your arms in proper order.'"

"And was that all that the Lieutenant got?" asked a dozen voices at once, in undisguised amazement.

"That was all; and I can tell you that he thought it was quite enough—Ha! General, good evening. I was just telling these gentlemen how you once put me under arrest for not having my pistols in working order."—David Ker, in Harper's Magazine.

Feed For Horses.

A good horseman writes that his method of treating both farm and driving horses, and a method which he has found to be a good one after many years' practice, is to give no hay in the morning, only a good feed of grain; at dinner time we give a good mess of cut feed, and at night, either another feed of cut food or a feed of grain. Just before retiring for the night or soon after the horses have cleaned up their other food, we fill their mangers with good, sweet hay, free from briars, thistles, trash and mustiness, being particular to give the driving horses clear timothy hay and the other horses—the work animals—either the same or that which is mixed with not more than one-half clover, and good hay at that. By this means the horses are always in a good condition to work, are given plenty of time to eat the single daily feed of hay we allow them, and can endure more work and longer drives than those which are stuffed with hay at every meal.—*N. "YOU CAN'T MOST ALWAYS TELL."

Because he is so very poor, and so very lowly born,
Next spring you may be very glad to take him by the hand,
For his praises may be sounded over every inch of land.
A champion he may become, before the world to shine,
As a pitcher or a catcher of a jolly base ball nine;
Although you see him calmly sit a-smoking of cheroots,
He may whip the great John Sullivan out of his biggest boots;
He may try a six-days' walking at some famous hall or rink,
And beat the rest of fellows there, as quick as you can wink;
He may chance to be located within the winning boat,
Or you may run for office, and may chance to need his vote.
So of all the many queer words that are given out to spell
The queerest of the queer, are—"You can't most always tell!"

CURVED PITCHING.

Its Possibility Illustrated and Explained—A Father Whose Base-Ball Days Are Over.

Several years ago I thought that it was impossible to make a ball curve, and when one of my "chums" said he had seen it done, I laughed at him; but he insisted so strongly that when I went home I asked my father. He was an old-time player, and when he said it was impossible to make a ball "curve," that settled it with me. Then I was certain that my friend had been deluded. Not long afterward, however, I saw a game between two professional clubs, and as I sat directly back of the catcher and could see the ball from the time it left the pitcher's hand, there was no longer any doubt in my mind about a ball being made to "curve." Moreover, I learned myself, after weeks of hard practice, to throw a curve ball, and many times since then have had the satisfaction of "striking out" hard hitters, who were unused to "curves." "What causes a ball to curve?" is a question asked by many, and I would offer the following original explanation:

When a ball is thrown through the air, the resistance of the air is only on one-half of the surface, that is the half facing the direction the ball is thrown. The other part of the ball may be considered as the "dead half."

Suppose the ball is thrown from A to B, and given a rapid rotating movement on its axis, as indicated by the arrows (accomplished by "holding" and "delivering" the ball a certain way), the resistance then is only on the "live half," which is rotating from M to N, hence it is seen that the ball will be influenced by this, and will be constantly moving from a true line curving toward K, and will describe a portion of a circle.

This was the explanation I offered to my father, who still insisted that it was merely a theory, and could not be demonstrated. So one summer afternoon a number of us boys prevailed upon him to join us in a game of base-ball. Now, a great many years before this, father had been a member of a local club, which had downed every club it ever played," as he said, and so he had made up his mind to show us youngsters a "thing or two." When he stepped up to the "home" plate ready to strike, it was with determination to show us that our so-called curves were simply optical illusions which he would soon dispel. I was the pitcher, and the first ball I threw was a slow "out-curve" (that is, it curved away from the striker—curves are designated as "outs," "inshoots," "drops" and "raise"). Father drew back the bat and struck at the ball as though he would knock the cover off, but he missed it. He tried again and again, but could not even make a "foul tip"; so finally he gave up and consented to watch for a short time from behind the catcher, and was soon convinced that a curve ball was not an optical illusion, but an accomplished fact. After a short time he started slowly home, but, as he left us, he said: "Well, boys, you are right; the game is getting too scientific for me, and I guess my base-ball days are over." And, in truth, so they were.—J. Edwin Taylor, in St. Nicholas.

A NEW NOSE.

How Mr. Sheehan Was Provided With a Brand New Proboscis.

John Sheehan had a new nose put on him Sunday. Sheehan has been rather well-known about town on account of the disfigurement of his face by the loss of his nose, which was eaten off by small-pox twelve years ago. He really had no nose at all, nothing but a flat ulcerated place on his face. The bones were there, but the septum and cartilage were gone. There were two openings in his face for nostrils. When Mr. Sheehan had cold in the head, which frequently occurred, his face presented any thing but an attractive appearance. Sheehan, after struggling twelve years against the disadvantages incident to his condition, voluntarily submitted himself, at the Providence Hospital, to the operation of building up a new nose. What is known as the Indian operation was performed by Dr. Hamilton, Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, who was assisted by Drs. Hartigan and Hickling. The operation consisted of taking a flap from the forehead, twisting it around and forming a nose of it. A triangular section, with one point of the triangle between the eyes, was cut in the forehead. The skin and flesh were cut down to the bone, the flap being left attached to the flesh between the eyes. The flap was twisted around until it hung over the proposed site of the new nose. The skin about the old nose was then cut, and the flaw was sewed in. A septum was made, and all together the nose, when completed, looked very well. When a Star reporter called at the hospital, Mr. Sheehan's face was swathed in bandages. His hands were secured in a muffler, so that he could not, in his sleep, scratch his new nose off before nature had secured it in its place. The new nose will be of the Grecian type, and the surgeons think Mr. Sheehan will be able to blow it and use it for all the purposes that noses are used for.

This is the first operation of the kind performed in this city, one of the physicians said to a Star reporter, for probably twenty-five years. It is, however, one of the earliest operations known to surgery. In the middle ages, when noses were more frequently knocked off than now, the surgeon was often called upon to repair the damaged face of some unfortunate knight, and so such operations were common. The old Italian method was to make a graft from the skin and flesh of a man's arm to his nose. The flap was left hanging partly to the arm, so as to keep up a circulation in the engrafted flesh while nature was making the union. The man's arm was therefore bound to his head so he could not move it. The French method was to make two flaps from the cheek, one on each side. The operation in Sheehan's case is called the Indian operation, because the man who submits to it is partially scalped.—Washington Star.

HOME'S ARCHANGEL.

Some Startling Facts for Women Not Worthy of This Appellation.

A lecture entitled "Mothers, the Health Officers of Home," was delivered by Dr. Oscar C. De Wolf before the Woman's Physiological Institute recently. The doctor said the average American woman's conception of home was sadly defective. She judged the home from the society standpoint instead of the reverse. There were many features of fashionable life which prevented woman from becoming the watchful and effective guardian which she ought to be of the sanitary condition of her home. Woman's use of narcotic and alcoholic stimulants was no longer limited to individual cases. Every physician in this city knew it was quite prevalent and was producing a harvest of death. Mothers could not sow tares and reap wheat for their children. The doctor trusted that the public instructor in the year 2286—four hundred years hence—for the purpose of showing how deficient women in the nineteenth century were in guarding the health of their children would produce a Chicago daily paper dated February 22, 1886. From this he would read the mortality report that fifty per cent. of the deaths were those of children under five years of age, and the equally suggestive fact that the glass manufacturers of the United States made ten million nursing-bottles during 1885. The philosopher of that day would read the advertisements and come to the conclusion that the manufacture of food for infants was a gigantic National enterprise in 1886. If he would put these facts together he would detect the causes which sweep so many infants into an untimely grave. It was the fruit of the American mother's refusal to nurse her children. If the thousands of little sleepers in Calvary, Graceland and Rosehill could be given voices there would be a terrible arraignment of the women of fashion of this city. The doctor said the mother could not afford to accept the doctrine of the survival of the fittest; that would roll us back to the barbarism of the fourteenth century. In this country forty babies out of every hundred born died in their infancy; in Norway only eighteen out of one hundred died. If women would give less attention to their dressmakers, to theaters and society events and more attention to their babies it would be better for the babies. Sanitary law should have its birth in the home, and woman should be the home's archangel. That she was not was man's fault as much as hers.

Matter Poured in the Atlantic.

Prof. Reade, in a recent lecture before the Liverpool Geological Society, reported as the results of his calculations that one hundred and fifty million tons of matter were annually poured into the Gulf of Mexico by the Mississippi river, which would in the course of five hundred years denude the land to the extent of one foot over the whole basin. He also calculates that the Mississippi, La Plata, the Amazon and St. Lawrence remove an average of one hundred tons to the square mile from the whole American continent. As to the amount of matter poured into the Atlantic by all the rivers of the world, Prof. Reade estimates it would, if converted into solid rock, at two tons to the cubic yard, make a cubic mile every six years.—Current.

—It was Josh Billings who originated the phrase that is now a national expression, "The business end of the wasp;" and when he said to a lady, "It is better to be laughed at for not being married than to be unable to laugh because you are," he uttered a sentence, to use one of his own expressions, "bulging out with first-class wisdom."—Chicago Saturday Herald.

Our Reasons for the Faith that is in Us.

Last spring a gentleman residing in Charlevoix was conversing with a neighbor, and expressed himself thus: "I have property interests at East Jordan which would be greatly benefitted by the removal of the county seat there; consequently I shall not vote upon this question." This spring the same gentleman approaches the same neighbor as follows: "You have no personal interest in this matter, as between East Jordan and Boyne City, have you?" "No." "Well, I have. I have property at East Jordan, and it would benefit me if you would, as a neighborly act, vote to retain the county seat there." "Well, I might do so were it not for the fact that last spring you declined to vote for my interest." The voters of Charlevoix will do well to think of this matter before they cast their vote according to the behest of these same men who, when our homes and firesides were in the issue, voted against them.

And now the East Jordan Enterprise states that the story which Mr. Loveday so indignantly denied in a recent issue of the Charlevoix Journal has been traced directly to the senior editor of this paper. This is another of the flood of East Jordan lies. If Mr. Loveday or the Enterprise will trace the story to that source, the senior editor will next Monday deposit an open ballot for East Jordan. We never heard the story until we read its denial in the Journal. In defense of Mr. Loveday, whom it formerly traduced, the Enterprise has much to say concerning Mr. Loveday's nice family. If the possession of a nice family will exempt a man from criticism of his public acts, then Mr. Loveday is unquestionably exempt. But Mr. Loveday lives in Charlevoix, and he voted and worked against Charlevoix last spring, as did five others, and the people of Charlevoix will continue to criticise them, and justly so.

The talk about Charlevoix getting the county seat back again is only an East Jordan invention for votes. Our friends in contiguous townships should not be deceived by such talk. A large majority of the business men and heaviest tax payers of Charlevoix are avowed supporters of Boyne City in this contest. Most people here would not have it if they could get it, knowing that with it would come a legacy of war for its retention. Charlevoix has reached a point where the county seat is not worth fighting for.

Ravings from Hayes.

Abraham Bell of Canada, was visiting his sisters Misses Hannah and Emma Bell, the past week.

Willis H. Chew started for Cass county Michigan, last Thursday, where he will spend the summer.

Mrs. Wm. Schneider started for Canada last Thursday, to visit her old home. We understand that a brother of Mr. Schneider will bring his family to Hayes this spring and make it his future house.

Although the evening was stormy the school at Maple grove was filled last Friday night to witness the entertainment that closed Miss Hannah Bell's term of school. Every one present was well pleased with the exercises.

Several of our Hayesites have tapped their sugar orchards, but we have not had very good "sugar weather" yet.

Spring came in with an equinoctial or an obnoxious storm, we don't care which.

We believe the first lawsuit ever tried in Hayes came off before F. J. Smith, J. P. a few days ago in which Fred Sneathen and E. M. Clark were the litigants.

Eveline Items.

Wm. and Geo. Jarman have rented F. A. Lewis's farm for one year.

D. N. Gregory who has been lumbering for Chas. Bedwin the past winter is done and moved back on his place last week.

The dance at Robt. Bedwin's on last Thursday evening was attended by 50 and a good time is reported.

Mr. J. B. Lane has just purchased a fine span of black horses. He purchased them in Ionia, and they are they the finest team in the county.

Owing to the severe snow storm on last Sunday, Rev. A. M. Parmenter did not preach at the Lewis school house.

A letter received by one of our Evelineites last week from Freddie Bedwin, who went to Alaska with J. B. Cater, states that they have not yet got any snow and that they are having summer weather. Apples are plentiful at 35 cts. per bushel and every thing is cheap there. He also says that since he left here he has not seen a Furnace check. (Ought to have taken one with you Fred.)—This must be quite a change.

The east and west roads are in a bad condition, being drifted full to the fence tops. This is worse than they have been at any time the past winter.

Chas. Norton recently lost a horse by breaking its leg. While turning around it caught its leg between two logs, making it necessary to kill it.

There is considerable sickness reported in town, several cases of the itch being reported.

The infant child of Martin Staley was very sick last week, so that it was necessary to have the doctor.

Mrs. Wm. Henry was also very sick but by the aid of the Dr. she is doing well, however.

THAT CIRCULAR.

The Method That East Jordan Adopted to Advertise Charlevoix Last Spring.

A few days before election one year ago, the East Jordan people printed and circulated a large number of circulars, of which the following is a copy:

Charlevoixization! Or no Charlevoixization!! Not taxation or no taxation. How a city without a single advantage as a location for the County Seat or an argument upon the merits of its cause seek to mislead the honest voters.

The citizens of Charlevoix seeking to blind the people to the true issue, and thus perpetuate to the end of time an outrageous injustice upon the people of this county by continuing the county seat at the extreme west, have issued a circular claiming the removal to East Jordan means a tax of from $15,000 to $20,000. Be not deceived by this foolish transparent falsehood.

No money can be appropriated for the erection of county buildings except by a vote of the electors of the whole county. It is only by a solid vote of the eastern Townships that the proposition to remove to East Jordan can be carried, and it is impossible for that Town to obtain a majority for an appropriation for County Buildings. The citizens of East Jordan have guaranteed to furnish free of expense as long as the County Seat shall remain with them as good accommodations as we now have at Charlevoix.

There can be no increase of taxation. Electors: Think for yourselves; satisfy yourselves of the truth of these assertions, from the Geography of your county and from the law on your statute book. This is our last chance to wrench from Charlevoix's avaricious grip the coveted prize. It is an established fact that Charlevoix has taken steps to Incorporate as a City. Her citizens realize if she can hold it this time she is solid forever and is putting forth tremendous exertions to carry her point. Even citizens of that model city don't hesitate at any manner of Fraud, Trickery, and deception, so look out for Bogus tickets, False promises, by Charlevoix men, and put up jobs and lies about East Jordan and Boyne City circulated too late for contradiction from those towns.

As stated this circular was written by an East Jordan man, printed in the Enterprise office, and circulated only by East Jordan people. D. C. Loveday and his horse and cutter constituting one medium of its circulation.

In Boyne City but one copy ever saw daylight, and that copy is in our possession. The following are the facts: Several days before election Messrs Fogg and Clink of East Jordan, drove into Boyne City with one thousand copies of the circular for distribution from that point. They were taken into Dr. E. F. Allen's drug store, one of them taken out and read, and the balance secreted by Boyne City citizens until after election, when they were burned by them —W. A. Norton and E. F. Allen in presence of others. They were of the opinion that they embodied lies at once libelous and retro-active.

This is a matter which only interests Charlevoix. We have the affidavits of citizens of Boyne City as to these facts, which being lengthy, we shall not publish. But they are here at the SENTINEL office, and any citizen can read them by calling in.

The slanderous abuse which was heaped upon Charlevoix last spring, was of East Jordan production and Boyne City refused, by the act above stated, to become a party to it.

A Card.

In another column will be found the opening announcement which we would like to have you read. By always trying to learn the wants of the people, and in keeping everything wanted in our line, by honest goods and fair dealing we hope to merit our share of the patronage of Charlevoix county. All goods will be marked in plain figures, which will be the lowest cash price. If any should be dissatisfied after making a purchase, the goods will be taken back and the money cheerfully refunded.

As an inducement to get you in to see our elegant new stock and learn our prices, we will present each customer purchasing five dollars worth or more with a fine oil chromo as an opening gift. The chromos are large and elegantly framed, and will be an ornament to any home.

These works of art are so expensive that we only make this offer good for two weeks from day of opening. Come and get good value for your money, and something that will beautify your home.

Come in and look our stock over even if you do not care to purchase, and get Butterick's Fashion Plate for April.

Hoping to see you all, we are
Yours, etc.,
F. W. CRAINE.

—Miss Katie Smith is visiting relatives at Petoskey.

—Charlevoix harbor will be open to navigation before another issue of the SENTINEL.

—"Only a summer resort" is what East Jordan tells people about Charlevoix; "the deadest town in Northern Michigan" is what their people and their paper say of us. And they want us to vote for them!

The County Building Question.

Whereas, we the undersigned, property-holders of Boyne City, deem that the present development and property condition of Charlevoix county would not warrant the spreading of a tax in the near future for the raising of a sum of money sufficient to erect county buildings within which to transact county business, do therefore hereby agree that we will see to it that a suitable place for holding court, for county offices, and the custody of county prisoners, will be furnished the county free of expense for at least ten years, the same to be located in Boyne City, should the county seat be removed thereto by the vote of the people at the coming election.

The above pledge is signed by twenty five business men of Boyne City. The first name on the list is good for more than a quarter of a million of dollars. The balance are men of average means, and of unquestioned responsibility. The advocates of East Jordan claim that the pledge is worthless.

Let us see:

The Boyne City people must keep their agreement, or they get no county seat! They must provide a suitable room in which to hold the Circuit Court, and this is the principal necessity existing. No one will question the ability of Boyne City to promptly furnish rooms for county offices. If they fail to furnish a suitable place in which to hold the Circuit Court, the Circuit Judge under the law, may hold court at any place within the county that he may choose. Section 6164, Howell's Annotated Statutes provides that

"The place of holding the terms of the several circuit courts in each county shall be the court house therein, if there be one, and if there be not, at such place within the county as the sheriff and county clerk shall order."

The circuit judge has the same power regarding the county jail and the place of keeping the court records. Hence it will be seen that Boyne City must provide suitable quarters, or they will be deprived of the benefits of the county seat.

We have heretofore plainly shown by the law that the Board of Supervisors have no authority to erect county buildings; that the people are the sole authority in such a necessity; and what the people do is always right.

The question of good faith on the part of the Boyne City people is not a factor in the matter. They will have to fulfill their agreement. The raising of this question is but a scare for electioneering purposes, and only needs investigation to be dispelled.

Shall We Do It.

On Monday next the people of Charlevoix county will for the fourth time be called upon to cast their ballots upon the question of the location of the county seat.

It is now a question which, if measured rightly, involves the question of public good. It involves the question of the greatest number not only now, but in the future.

For ten years this same question has harrassed the people of this county as no other local question ever has. It has kept Charlevoix county in a constant state of disquietude, and made itself felt in every phase of county politics and government.

All this has come from an effort on the part of the eastern and central portions of the county to locate the county seat at a central point. For several years the project was premature, and failed of success. We have now reached the culminating point in the issue.

And now we must decide whether the county seat of Charlevoix county shall be made a medium of speculation for the property-owners, resident and non-resident, of a town near the southern limit of the county, or located where it will better accommodate the people of the whole county.

We must decide whether or not we shall aid in a cause which can only hope to succeed by wholesale colonization of voters, bribery and whiskey.

We must decide whether we shall now settle this question, or prepare for a continuation of hostilities.

We must decide whether or not further controversy on this question will be of greater profit to Charlevoix county than its settlement.

The voters of Charlevoix Township and Village must decide whether or not they will now vote for the speculative interests of those of their neighbors who one year ago voted against their interests.

We are confident that if the better judgment of the people of this county will place justice above spite, and yield to reason and right, rather than cater to selfishness, the question will be settled for good.

We are confident that if the actual residents of the county could settle it, there would be no more contests.

But we are confident that in spite of all, the question will be so settled, by a good majority in favor of removal to Boyne City.

Dissolution Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the firm heretofore existing and doing business at the village of Charlevoix, Michigan, under the name and style of J. L. Hurd & Company, wherein Juan L. Hurd and Charles M. Dygert were general partners, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The said Juan L. Hurd retains the business and collects all accounts payable to said firm and pays all debts against the same.

Dated March 29th, A. D. 1886.

Shall Corrupt Methods Be Allowed to Prevail?

Evidence which can not be disputed comes that wholesale colonization has taken place at East Jordan to carry, if possible, the election in favor of that place. Money is also being freely used in the western townships among Indians, and others whom money will influence. Will the tax payers of Charlevoix county submit to these methods of settling a matter which only concerns them, and which concerns them vitally?

Plaisted and Ross were at Niagara Falls recently and took their measurements and calculations for their proposed row through the rapids. Their boat will have plenty of beam and a grating instead of a bottom. Air compartments will make the boat buoyant. They will get $2,500 for the trip, and are confident of coming out unharmed.

Brig. Gen. Howard was, Friday, nominated as a major general in the army, vice Gen. Pope, retired.

Sidewalk Notice.

Whereas, a majority of the resident owners of real estate on the east side of Grant street, in the village of Charlevoix, Michigan, have petitioned the President and Common Council to order a sidewalk built on said east side of said street, between Antrim street and Clinton street on said side of street, and the Committee on Streets and Sidewalks having examined the premises and recommended that the prayer of the petitioners be granted. Therefore, on motion of Trustee Nicholls, it is ordered by the Common Council of the Village of Charlevoix that a sidewalk be built on the east side of Grant street, between Antrim street and Clinton street on said side of street by the adjoining owners thereon, within 30 days from the date of the service of this notice, said sidewalk to be six feet wide, and of two inch plank, laid crosswise, securely fastened with twenty penny spikes on three four by four scantling. And it is further ordered, that the Street Commissioner forthwith serve a copy of this order on each owner herein before required to construct said sidewalk, and in case said adjoining owners, or any part thereof, shall neglect or refuse to build said sidewalk within the time above prescribed that the Street Commissioner shall forthwith proceed to build such sidewalk and report the cost of the same, as provided in the Sidewalk Ordinance of said Village of Charlevoix.

Dated at Charlevoix, March 25th 1886.

THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

AT THIS TIME OF THE YEAR

PAINTING

BECOMES AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

To every house-holder, and the question arrises What Kind of Paint to buy and where to buy it.

Stockman & Iddings undoubtedly handle a much larger quantity of Paint Supplies than any other house in the County. All goods sold by them are guaranteed to be the BEST in quality, and in PRICE the CHEAPEST.

They offer this year "THE KING," all shades and colors, manufactured and warranted by The Chicago White Lead and Oil Co., SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SOLID PAINTS, in fact others are only imitations.

Also as heretofore Heath & Milligan's BEST Liquid Paints, -Ready Mixed, -well-known and popular.

These Paints have stood the test for years, are well-known to all painters and architects in Charlevoix and vicinity and therefore need no extended notice.

CAUTION.--When you buy paint KNOW which you are buying, READY MIXED which is sold by the gallon, or solid colors, (so called paste paint) which should be sold by the pound, the oil to thin it being sold seperately by the gallon.

IF YOU WANT TO PAINT, CALCIMINE OR DO ANY OTHER SPRING WORK, OR IF YOU WANT A STOVE OF ANY KIND OR ANY OTHER HARDWARE OR BUILDING SUPPLIES, DO NOT FAIL TO GO TO STOCKMAN & IDDINGS' FOR THEM, AND GET THE BEST GOODS AT THE LOWEST PRICES.

—Rev. C. J. Strang spoke upon temperance to a full house at the Congregational church Sunday evening.

—The county seat contest is gone but the horrible thought arises that it will soon re-appear with all its bitterness.

Last year there were 2,029 votes cast on the county seat question. This year there were 2,683, an increase of 654.

The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad is making special efforts this season to make the summer resorts along its line particularly attractive.

—Bradbeer the photographer, announces that he will make cabinet photographs for $4.00 per dozen for two weeks, commencing Monday, April 12th.

There were 217 pupils entered school on Monday, the first day of the term. This is the largest enrollment for the first day of the term in the history of the school.

—A number of the men employed by S. H. Davis & Co., the fishermen, arrived Saturday. The Company's interests here will be under the supervision of Mr. Lincoln, Mr. John McKinnon having been transferred to the fishing station at Dog River.

—Prof. Winchell, in a lecture at Traverse City, Mich., told the people there that they could strike salt if they go right down 1,200 feet for it. The capitalists there will probably act on the professor's suggestion, as he is known to be a true prophet on the salt question.

The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad announces the following change in freight rates from Grand Rapids, Howard City, Big Rapids, and Reed City. First class 25 cents, second class 20 cents, third class 15 cents fourth class 12 cents, fifth class 10 cents, sixth class 9 cents. The same to go into effect April 1st.

The new Green block is a daisy. Architects pronounce it to be the handsomest finished building north of Grand Rapids. The wood work is of ash, birch, birdseye maple, walnut and pine. The plate glass front will soon be resplendant with a gold-leaf finish. The fine workmanship which has been done under the direction and from the plans of architect Kirk patrick certainly needs to be seen to be appreciated. Charles Graves, the painter, has also done himself proud in his branch of the work.

Egbert Carpenter and family are expected home next week.

—A number of the Davis & Co. fishermen arrived yesterday.

—Ivanhoe Commandery contemplate an excursion to the "Soo" in June or July.

—Bradbeer's photographic studio is being attractively fitted up for the summer business.

—Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Shepard of Boyne City were visiting the latter's parents, last week.

—Geo. Wager is looking up a location for a cigar store. He thinks of locating at East Jordan.

—Fifty-three majority in favor of East Jordan is hardly large enough to crow over very vociferously.

—Last week 4,000,000 whitefish were planted in Pine Lake. The fry came by the way of Boyne City.

—The Charlevoix Sentinel looks neat in a brand new dress of the latest spring style.—Lansing Republican.

—The ice on Pine lake is still strong enough for teaming. It is reported to be two feet thick on the arm.

Rev. W. G. Clark, the new pastor of the Baptist church, will occupy the M. E. pulpit for the coming two or three Sabbaths.

The mush and milk social at the Bridge Street House last week, engineered by the M. E. young ladies was a $12 success.

Now that the county seat agony is over, business should receive an impetus arising from a more concentrated attention to it.

Miss Mary E. Wagley, whose family is the oldest Democratic family in Emmet county, has been appointed teacher of the Indian school at Middle Village.

John G. Hill is temporary editor of the Petoskey Democrat. The paper certainly gives promise of serving its purpose as the best democratic paper of this section.

The freight business of the G. R. & I. railroad from the north during the first three month of this year compared with 1885 is considerably increased. Over 2,000 more loaded cars were received at Grand Rapids than during the same time last year.

—During the past year in Michigan 303 fires were caused by lightning, 10 by steam threshers, 53 were incendiary, 107 originated from defective chimneys, 62 from defective stovepipes, cause of 113 are unknown, and 217 are put down as miscellaneous.

J. M. Eaton, of Charlevoix, who was the Democratic candidate for senator from that district in 1880, and went down with his colors flying, has received his reward. He has been made deputy collector of customs at the port of Charlevoix.—Detroit Journal.

There is a rumor to the effect that the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad company will build a branch from St Ignace to Sault Ste. Marie, and that the new boat reported as to be built in Buffalo this season is to be owned by that company and will run as a ferry between Mackinaw City and St. Ignace to connect the lower and upper peninsula branches. The idea is to gain a through connection to the east by the Canadian line from the "Soo."

The Grand Rapids Democrat is authority that the Chicago & West Michigan railroad will, this coming summer, extend the line from Baldwin to Traverse City, and have it in operation before the snow flies next winter. The Democrat further says they will also build a branch to Cadillac and will have that completed before the G. R. & I. railroad gets into Muskegon. They will also immediately put a bridge in at Big Rapids and thereby connect that branch with the Detroit, Lansing and Northern road, which is under the same management. They have also in prospect a line from Cadillac across the state to Alpena, but this will probably not be undertaken for some time. When the line is extended to Traverse City a spur will be run to Frankfort and connect there with boats to points in the upper peninsula.

The following cordial send-off for the Petoskey Democrat under the new regime is from the Record: On Monday last the business affairs of Mr. and Mrs. Rozelle Rose were arranged by arbitration, and the Democrat office passed into possession of Messrs. H. O. Rose and Abner S. Lee, representing however quite a large syndicate of the prominent democrats of Petoskey. We are informed that $1,200 was offered by Mr. Hampton but declined by the arbitrators and $1,000 accepted from the old liners. We presume the mode of payment proposed had something to do with the acceptance of the latter bid. Gentlemen interested in the transfer state that it is intended to largely increase the facilities of the office and enlarge the paper to the size of the Record. Mr. Hill will edit the Democrat until arrangements are made with an experienced and able newspaper man. Who that will be is not yet determined, but there is some talk of a Mr. Estee of Grand Haven. —Robert Bowles was sent to Ionia for two years in 1883 for forging in Charlevoix, and escaped to Canada with Ashman and Kuhn. His sentence expired the 27th, and sheriff Pratt re-arrested him the instant he was discharged, and brought him here to be tried for forging C. L. Fraser's name before being arrested at Charlevoix. He waived examination, and in default of $200 bonds is keeping company with Nick Therry. If he likes the town well enough to stay here of his own free will, it might be safe to lock him up in our jail, but if he is disgusted with his quarters he wouldn't stay in the drygoods box over night.—Harbor Springs Independent.

—The great Paris comet will appear in the western heavens about April 15. Two weeks later it will be plainly visible all night. It will be seen in the western sky early in the evening, as was that of 1881. It will appear very bright as there will be no moon to detract it from its brilliancy. When nearest the earth the comet will be only twelve million miles distant. This will be a nearer approach than any comet of recent years has made. Another remarkable thing about this comet will be the long period for which it will retain its brightness—probably from April 15 to May 15. The comet will then disappear from the view of persons in the northern hemisphere and will sweep in all its grandeur into the sight of people south of the equator.

One very remarkable and startling fact is disclosed in connection with the encroachment of the lake on Lincoln park, Chicago, and that is that the whole surface of the lake is gradually rising at the rate of about four inches per year. The record shows that the surface of the water is now two and one half feet higher than it was seven years ago. Portions of the lake shore driveway, where are located some of the costliest private residences in the city, have been washed almost completely away.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Eleventh Discourse of the Series On the "Marriage Ring."

The Law of Heredity—Traits of Character That Run in Families—The Responsibility of Ancestry—Bequeathing a Moral Tendency.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage delivered the eleventh sermon of the "Marriage Ring" series at Fayette, Mo., before an audience that packed every available portion of the building in which it was delivered. The subject was "Heredity," Mr. Talmage taking for his text:

Whose son art thou, thou young man?—I. Samuel, xvii., 58.

Never was there a more unequal fight that that between David and Goliath. David five feet high; Goliath ten. David a shepherd boy, brought up amid rural scenes; Goliath a warrior by profession. Goliath a mountain of braggadocio; David a marvel of humility. Goliath armed with an iron spear; David armed with a sling, with smooth stones from the brook. But you are not to despise these latter weapons. There was a regiment of slingers in the Assyrian army and a regiment of slingers in the Egyptian army, and they made terrible execution, and they could cast a stone with as much precision and force as now can be hurled shot or shell. The Greeks in their army had slingers who would throw leaden plummets inscribed with the irritating words "Take this!" So it was a mighty weapon David employed in that famous combat.

A Jewish rabbi says that the probability is that Goliath was in such contempt for David that in a paroxysm of laughter he threw his head back, and his helmet fell off, and David saw the uncovered forehead, and his opportunity had come, and taking this sling and swinging it around his head two or three times, and aiming at that uncovered forehead he crushed it like an egg-shell. The battle over behold a tableau: King Saul sitting, little David standing, his fingers clutched into the hair of the decapitated Goliath. As Saul sees David standing there holding in his hand the ghastly, reeking, staring trophy, evidence of the complete victory over God's enemies, the King wonders what parentage was honored by such heroism, and in my text he asks David his pedigree:

Whose son art thou, thou young man?

The king saw what you and I see, that this question of heredity is a mighty question. The longer I live the more I believe in blood—good blood, bad blood, proud blood, humble blood, honest blood, thieving blood, heroic blood, cowardly blood. The tendency may skip a generation or two, but it is sure to come out, as in a little child you sometimes see a similarity to a great-grandfather whose picture hangs on the wall. That the physical and mental and moral qualities are inheritable is patent to any one who keeps his eyes open. The similarity is so striking sometimes as to be amusing. Great families, legal or literary, are apt to have the characteristics all down through the generations, and what is more perceptible in such families may be seen on a smaller scale in all families. A thousand years have no power to obliterate the difference.

The large lip of the house of Austria is seen in all the generations, and is called the Hapsburg lip. The House of Stuart always means in all generations cruelty and bigotry and sensuality. Witness Queen of Scots. Witness Charles I. and Charles II. Witness James I. and James II. and all the other scoundrels of that imperial line. Scottish blood means persistence, English blood means reverence for the ancient, Welsh blood means religiosity, Danish blood means fondness of the sea, Indian blood means roaming disposition, Celtic blood means fervidity, Roman blood means conquest.

The Jewish faculty for accumulation you may trace clear back to Abraham, of whom the Bible says, "He was rich in silver and gold and cattle," and to Isaac and Jacob, who had the same characteristics. Some families are characterized by longevity, and they have a tenacity of life positively Methuselish. Others are characterized by Goliathian stature, and you can see it for one generation, two generations, five generations, in all generations. Vigorous theology runs on in the line of the Alexanders. Tragedy runs on in the families of the Kembles. Literature runs on in the line of the Trollopes. Philanthropy runs on in the line of the Wilberforces. Statesmanship runs on in the line of the Adamses. Henry and Catherine of Navarre religious, all their families religious. The celebrated family of the Casini, all mathematicians. The celebrated family of Medici—grandfather, son and Catherine—all remarkable for keen intellect. The celebrated family of Gustavus, all warriors.

This law of heredity asserts itself without reference to social or political condition, for you sometimes find the ignoble in high place. A descendant of Edward I. a toll gatherer. A descendant of Edward III. a doorkeeper. A descendant of the Duke of Northumberland a trunkmaker. Some of the mightiest families of England are extinct, while some of those most honored in the peerage go back to an ancestry of hard knuckles and rough exterior. This law of heredity is entirely independent of social and political condition. Then you find avarice, and jealousy, and sensuality, and fraud having full swing in some families. The violent temper of Frederick William is the inheritance of Frederick the Great. It is not a theory to be set forth by worldly philosophy only, but by divine authority. Do you not remember how the Bible speaks of "a chosen generation," of "the generation of the righteous," of "the generation of vipers," of an "untoward generation," of "a stubborn generation," of "iniquity of the past visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation?" So that the text comes to-day with the force of a projectile hurled from the mightiest catapult.

Whose son art thou, thou young man?

"Well," says some one, "that theory discharges me from all responsibility. Born of sanctified parents, we are bound to be good, and we can not help ourselves. Born of unrighteous parentage, we are bound to be evil and we can not help ourselves."

As much as if you should say, "the centripetal force in nature has a tendency to bring everything to the center, and therefore all things come to the center. The centrifugal force in nature has a tendency to throw out everything to the periphery, and therefore every thing will go out to the periphery." You know as well as I know that you can make the centripetal overcome the centrifugal, and you can make the centrifugal overcome the centripetal. As when there is a mighty tide of good in a family that may be overcome by determination to evil, as in the case of Aaron Burr, the libertine, who had for father President Burr, the consecrated; as in the case of Pierrepont Edwards, the scourge of New York society seventy years ago, who had a Christian ancestry; while, on the other hand, some of the best men and women of this day are those who have come of an ancestry of which it would not be courteous to speak in their presence.

The practical and useful object of this sermon is to show to you that if you have come of a Christian ancestry, then you are solemnly bound to preserve and develop the glorious inheritance; or, if you have come of a depraved ancestry, then it is your duty to brace yourself against the evil tendency by all prayer and Christian determination, and you are to find out what are the family frailties, and in arming the castle put the strongest guard at the weakest gate. With these smooth stones from the brook I hope to strike you, not where David struck Goliath, in the head, but where Nathan struck David in the heart.

Whose son art thou, thou young man?

Some time, in the winter holiday, when we are accustomed to gather our families together, old times have come back again and our thoughts have been set to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." The old folks were so busy at such times in making us happy, and perhaps on less resources made their sons and daughters happier than you on larger resources are able to make your sons and daughters happy. The snow lay two feet above their graves, but they shook off the white blankets and mingled in the holiday festivities—the same wrinkles, the same stoop of shoulder under the weight of age, the same old style of dress or coat, the same smile, the same tones of voice. I hope you remember them before they went away. If not, I hope there are those who have recited to you what they were, and that there may be in your house some article of dress or furniture with which you associate their memories. I want to arouse the most sacred memories of your heart while I make the impassioned interrogatory in regard to your pedigree—

Whose son art thou, thou young man?

First, I accost all those who are descended of a Christian ancestry. I do not ask if your parents were perfect. Perhaps there was sometimes too much blood in their eye when they chastised you. But from what I know of you, you got no more than you deserved, and perhaps a little less than you deserved, and perhaps a little more chastisement would have been salutary. But you are willing to acknowledge, I think, that they wanted to do right. From what you overheard in conversations and from what you saw at the family altar and at neighborhood obsequies, you know that they had invited God into their heart and life. There was something that sustained those old people supernaturally. You have no doubt about their destiny. You expect if you ever get to heaven to meet them as certainly as you expect to meet the Lord Jesus Christ.

That early association has been a charm for you. There was a time when you got right up from a house of iniquity and walked out into the fresh air because you thought your mother was looking at you. You have never been very happy in sin because of a sweet old face that would present itself. Tremulous voices from the past accosted you until they were seemingly audible, and you looked around to see who spoke. There was estate not mentioned in the last will and testament, a vast estate of prayer and holy example and Christian entreaty and glorious memory. The survivors of the family gathered to hear the will read, and this was to be kept, and that was to be sold, and it was share and share alike. But there was an unwritten will that read something like this:

> In the name of God, amen. I, being of sound mind, bequeath to my children all my prayers for their salvation, I bequeath to them the Christian religion which has been so much comfort to me, and I hope may be solace for them. I bequeath to them a hope of reunion when the partings of life are over, share and share alike may they have in eternal riches. I bequeath to them the wish that they may avoid my errors and copy anything that may have been worthy. In the name of the God who made me, and the Christ who redeemed me, and the Holy Ghost who sanctifies me, I make this my last will and testament. Witness, all ye hosts of Heaven, witness, time, witness, eternity. Signed, sealed and delivered in this our dying hour. FATHER AND MOTHER.

You did not get that will proved at the Surrogate's office; but I take it out to-day and I read it to you; I take it out of the alcoves of your heart; I shake the dust off of it. I ask you. Will you accept that inheritance, or will you break the will? O ye of Christian ancestry, you have a responsibility vast beyond all measurement! God will not let you off with just being as good as ordinary people when you had extraordinary advantage. Ought not a flower planted in the hot-house be more thrifty than a flower planted outside in the storm?

A father sets his son up in business. He keeps an account of all the expenditures. So much for store fixtures, so much for rent, so much for this, so much for that, and all the items aggregated, and the father expects the son to give an account. Your Heavenly Father charges against you all the advantages of a pious ancestry so many prayers, so much Christian example, so many kind entreaties—all these gracious influences one tremendous aggregate, and he asks you for an account of it. Ought not you to be better than those who had no such advantages? Better have been a foundling picked up off the city commons than with such magnificent inheritance of consecration to turn out indifferently.

Ought not you, my brother, to be better, having had Christian nurture, than that man who can truly say this morning:

"The first word I remember my father speaking to me was an oath; the first time I remember my father taking hold of me was in wrath; I never saw a Bible till I was ten years of age, and then I was told it was a pack of lies. The first twenty years of my life I was associated with the vicious. I seemed to be walled in by sin and death."

Now, my brother, ought you not—I leave it as a matter of fairness with you—ought you not to be far better than those who had no early Christian influence? Standing as you do between the generation that is past and the generation that is to come, are you going to pass the blessing on, or are you going to have your life the gulf in which that tide of blessing shall drop out of sight forever? You are the trustees of piety in that ancestral line, and are you going to augment or squander that solemn trust fund? Are you going to disinherit your sons and daughters of the heirloom which your parents left you? Ah! that can not be possible, that can not be possible that you are going to take such a position as that. You are very careful about the life insurances, and careful about the deeds, and careful about the mortgages, and careful about the title of your property, because when you step off the stage you want your children to get it all. Are you making no provision that they shall get grandfather and grandmother's religion? Oh, what a last will and testament you are making, my brother!

> In the name of God, amen. I, being of sound mind, make this my last will and testament. I bequeath to my children all the money I ever made and all the houses I own; but I disinherit them, I rob them of the ancestral grace and the Christian influence that I inherited. I have squandered that on my own worldliness. Share and share alike must they in the misfortune and the everlasting outrage. Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of God, and men, and angels, and devils, and all the generations of earth, and heaven, and hell. March, 1886.

O, ye highly favored ancestry, wake up this morning to a sense of your opportunity and and your responsibility. I think there must be an old cradle or a fragment of a cradle somewhere that could tell a story of midnight supplication in your behalf. Where is the old rocking-chair in which you were sung to sleep with the holy nursery rhyme? Where is the old clock that ticked away the moments of that sickness on that awful night when there were but three of you awake—you and God and mother? Is there not an old staff in some closet? Is there not an old family Bible on some shelf that seems to address you, saying:

"My son, my daughter, how can you reject that God who so kindly dealt with us all our lives and to whom we commended you in our prayers, living and dying? By the memory of the old homestead, by the family altar, by our dying pillow, by the graves in which our bodies sleep while our spirits hover, we beg you to turn over a new leaf, and that now."

Oh, the power of ancestral piety, well illustrated by a young man of New York who attended a prayer-meeting one night and asked for prayer, and went home and wrote these words:

Twenty five years ago to-night my mother went to heaven—my beautiful, blessed mother—and I have been alone, tossed up and down upon the billows of life's tempestuous ocean. Shall I ever go to heaven? She told me I must meet her in heaven. When she took her boy's hand in hers and turned her gentle, loving eyes on me and gazed earnestly and long into my face, and then lifted them to heaven in that last prayer she prayed that I might meet her in heaven. I wonder if I ever shall.

My mother's prayer! Oh, my sweet, blessed mother's prayer! Did ever boy have such a mother as I had? For twenty five years I have not heard her pray until to-night. I have heard all her prayers over again. They have had, in fact, a terrible resurrection. Oh, how she was wont to pray! She prayed as they prayed to-night, so earnest, so importunate, so believing. Shall I ever be a Christian? She was a Christian. Oh, how bright and pure and happy was her life! She was a cheerful and happy Christian. There is my mother's Bible. I have not opened it for years. Did she believe I could ever neglect her precious Bible? She surely thought I would read it much and often. How often she has read it to me.

Blessed mother, did you pray in vain for your boy? It shall not be in vain. Ah, no, no, it shall not be in vain. I will pray for myself. Who has sinned against so much instructions as I have? against so many precious prayers put up to heaven for me by one of the most lovely, tender, pious, confiding, trusting of mothers in her Heavenly Father's care and grace. She never doubted. She believed. She always prayed as if she did. My Bible, my mother's Bible and my conscience teach what I am and what I have made myself. Oh, the bitter pangs of an accusing conscience! I need a Saviour mighty to save. I must seek him. I will. I am on the sea of existence, and I can never get off from it. I am afloat. No anchor, no rudder, no compass, no book of instructions, for I have put them all away from me. Saviour of the perishing, save or I perish.

Do you wonder that the next day he arose in a prayer-meeting and said:

"My brethren, I stand before you a monument of God's amazing mercy and goodness, forever blessed be His holy name; all I have and all I am I consecrate to Jesus, my Savior and my God!"

Oh, the power of ancestral prayer! Hear it! Hear it!

2. But I turn for a moment to those who had evil parentage, and I want to tell you that the highest thrones in Heaven, and the mightiest triumphs and the brightest crowns will be for those who had evil parentage, but who, by the grace of God, conquered. As useful, as splendid a gentleman as I know of to-day, had for father a man who died blaspheming God until the neighbors had to put their fingers in their ears to shut out the horror. One of the most consecrated and useful Christian ministers of to-day was born of a drunken horse jockey. Sins of evil tremendous in some families. It is like Niagara rapids, and yet men have clung to a rock and been rescued.

There is a family in New York whose wealth has rolled up into many millions that was founded by a man who, after he had vast estate, sent back a paper of tacks because they were two cents more than he expected. Grip and grind and gouge in the fourth generation—I suppose it will be grip and grind and gouge in the twentieth generation. The thirst for intoxicants has burned down through the arteries of a hundred and fifty years. Pugnacity or combativeness characterizes other families. Sometimes one form of evil, sometimes another form of evil. But it may be resisted. It has been resisted. If the family frailty be avarice, cultivate unselfishness and charity, and teach your children never to eat an apple without offering somebody else half of it. Is the family frailty combativeness, keep out of the company of quick-tempered people, and never answer an impertinent question until you have counted a hundred both ways, and after you have written a letter keep it a week before you send it, and then burn it up! Is the family frailty timidity and cowardice, cultivate backbone, read the biography of brave men like Joshua and Paul, and see if you can not get a little iron in your blood. Find out what the family frailty is, and set body, mind and soul in battle array.

I think the genealogical table was put in the first chapter of the New Testament not only to show our Lord's pedigree, but to show that a man may rise up in an ancestral line and beat back successfully all the influences of bad heredity. Stain that genealogical table that good King Asa came of vile King Abijah. See in that genealogical table that Joseph and Mary and the most illustrious Being that ever touched our world, or ever will touch it, had in their ancestral line scandalous Rehoboam and Thamar and Bathsheba. If this world is ever to be Edenized—and it will be—all the infected families of the earth are to be regenerated, and there will some arise in each family line and open a new genealogical table. There will be some Joseph in the line to reverse the evil influence of Rehoboam, and there will be some Mary in the line to reverse the evil influence of Bathsheba. Perhaps the star of hope may point down to your manger. Perhaps you are to be the hero or the heroine that is to put down the brakes and stop that long train of genealogical tendencies, and switch it off on another track from that on which it has been running for a century. You do that, and I will promise you as fine a palace as the architects of heaven can build, the archway inscribed with the words, "More than conqueror."

But whatever your heredity, let me say, you may be sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. Estranged children from the homestead come home through the open gate of adoption. There is royal blood in our veins. There are crowns on our escutcheon. Our Father is king. Our Brother is king. We may be kings and queens unto God for ever. Come and sit down on the ivory bench of the palace. Come and wash in the fountains that fall into the basins of crystal and alabaster. Come and look out of the upholstered window upon the gardens of azalea and amaranth. Hear the full burst of the orchestra while you banquet with potentates and victors. Oh, when the text sweeps backward, let it not stop at the cradle that rocked your infancy, but at the cradle that rocked the first world; and when the text sweeps forward, let it not stop at your grave, but at the throne on which you may reign forever and ever.

Whose son art thou, thou young man? O Son of God! Heir of mortality! Take your inheritance!

A LATE BLUNDER.

How President Cleveland's Veto of the Des Moines River Land Bill is Going to Operate Upon Thousands of Poor Iowa People—Another Evidence of His Astounding Egotism.

The President has vetoed the Des Moines River Land bill, and committed thereby one of the greatest blunders of his Administration. The only explanation for this remarkable course is that he has yielded to the solicitations of the attorneys for Eastern capitalists and turned his face against the poor settlers in Iowa who for more than a score of years have been asking Congress for relief. A bill to quit the title of bona fide settlers on the lands in controversy has passed one or the other House of Congress several times, and when it was announced that this Congress had at last awakened to a sense of justice and had passed the long-desired bill, it was not thought possible that the President would veto it, or put the least obstruction in the way of its becoming a law. But in this instance Mr. Cleveland has given further proof that he is controlled by the monied corporations of the East, and prefers to become their tool rather than the instrument of justice to the poor and humble classes of the people.

His veto message is a weak and paltry excuse for his deliberate evasion of duty, and his utter disregard of the rights of thousands of poor settlers on these river lands. With no care for the hardships that may be inflicted as the result of his course, his only apparent concern is lest the Attorney-General of the United States should be put to a little trouble to establish the title to some poor men's land. The supreme assurance with which Mr. Cleveland after but a few days' examination of the bill, sets up his judgment against the combined wisdom of several Houses of Congress is characteristic of the egotism and ignorance of the man. Committee after committee in each House of Congress has reported in favor of this bill. The best jurists in Congress have declared it a just and worthy measure and yet in the face of these opinions, and in the face of appeals and prayers from hundreds of families, who are liable to be turned out of their homes in which they have lived for years, he coolly dismisses the subject as unworthy the attention of Congress.

If Mr. Cleveland had been as well acquainted with Iowa people as some of his Democratic advisers were, it is quite probable that he never would have vetoed this bill. He would have known that the people of Iowa demanded it as an act of justice long delayed. He would have known that some of his henchmen had made their chief political capital in charging the wrongs done these settlers to the Republican party, and promising that if given the Democratic party would make them right. General Weaver can tell the President, for he knows, just what the effect of this veto will be. It means thousands of votes for the Republican party, and it means thousands of votes against the demagogue Weaver, who has gone up and down the State riding this issue from one campaign to another. The shelf-worn capital of the Democratic party in Iowa for the past twenty years has been the question of these Des Moines river lands. Because some Republican lawyer was retained as attorney at some time by the owners of these lands, Weaver and other demagogues have charged all the wrongs that have been done the settlers to the Republican party. When at last with a President of their own choosing they had an opportunity to do tardy justice to the poor people they proposed to champion, they allow him to kill the only bill for their relief that ever passed both Houses of Congress. The people of Iowa will show Mr. Cleveland what they think of his veto, and they will show Mr. Weaver and the other Democratic Congressmen from this State what they think of them for permitting it.

This veto is a cruel blow to thousands of poor people in Iowa, who haven't the means to go into litigation, as the President suggests, with the wealthy corporations that would dispossess them of their little homes. Unless the bill can be passed over the veto, there are untold hardships and distress ahead of them. This heartless veto is one of the fruits of a Democratic Administration, and it is one of the monumental blunders which Mr. Cleveland will many times regret.—Iowa State Register.

The Final Resort.

The constitution provides that the House of Representatives, and that body alone, can act as grand jury for the indictment of a President, and the Senate, and that body alone, can sit as judge and jury upon a trial growing out of such indictment. To distinguish it from ordinary prosecutions it is called impeachment. The processes of law are perfectly well defined, and the functions of the different branches of Congress defined so clearly as to admit of no dispute.

It is possible, however, for a question to grow out of the dispute which will go before the Supreme Court for final adjudication, and highly probable, too. It may be remembered that Senator Edmunds claimed that a suspended officer would be entitled to resume his office if the Senate adjourned without confirming a successor. This was the view of the modified Tenure-of-Office act taken by him, and by Lyman Trumbull as well, when the modification was made (1869), but it is not the view taken by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and it is presumable that the President would take the House view of the matter. In a dispute of that kind an appeal would lie, practically, to the courts and finally to the Supreme Court, whose interpretation would be binding all around. No person could with impunity discharge the functions of an office against a decision of the court, whatever his credentials and Senatorial or Presidential backing.

It is not to be expected that any very general interest will be taken in the controversy which may arise over these conflicting interpretations of law. The people of this country are not in a mood to work themselves into a fever of excitement over a question of office-holding. But there is a disposition to insist, calmly, yet firmly, upon the observance of those limitations of authority which President Cleveland seems blundering bent upon violating.—Inter Ocean.

☞ A Chicago rumor has it that Carter Harrison has fixed his evil eye on the Presidency. The Presidency need have no fear; the country will protect it.—Indianapolis Journal.

A BODILESS MAN.

Mr. Cleveland Considered As a President Without a Party—All Political Organizations Disgusted.

This is the position which Mr. Cleveland has reached at the beginning of his second year in office. The loud proclamations of a few supersychophantic organs on the anniversary of his inauguration that he had succeeded beyond hope sounded like hollow mockery beside the expressions of discontent from the more intelligent Democratic papers. There is more than dissatisfaction in the ranks of the Democracy at the course of the Administration. It has ripened into profound disgust and the fact can not be concealed any longer. There is not a widely circulated Democratic paper in the North and not more than three such in the South which are giving the President even a nominal support. The others are openly or covertly at war with him, and their opposition is growing bolder and more pronounced each day.

There is no need to search for evidence for this fact. A casual reading of the Democratic press furnishes all the proof necessary. What would be thought if a Republican paper should remark of a Republican President, as the Macon, Ga., Telegraph does of Mr. Cleveland, that "he is a conspicuous example of the fact that the President of this country should be a statesman; that statesmen are made, not born, and that lager beer saloons and sheriffalty are not the training schools for great leaders?" or if it should refer to a Republican President's message, as the Cincinnati Enquirer does of Mr. Cleveland's recent message to the Senate, as "a combination of halfheadedness and arrogance?" Such expressions would be taken as evidences that the Republican party did not even respect the man whom it had elevated to the Presidency, and that seems to be the position which a majority of the Democratic party occupies now towards Mr. Cleveland.

This discontent can not be ascribed wholly to a failure to obtain the expected offices. That, doubtless, would have caused dissatisfaction, but not disgust. The Macon Telegraph goes to the marrow of the trouble when it says that "the Democratic party will not support a man who is blatant in profession of Civil-Service Reform and makes appointments that are a disgrace to any people. No people can condone such appointments as some Cleveland has made in Georgia and other States, which are a mockery to the 'honest Civil-Service Reform' set forth in the platform on which he was elected." And the Washington Post asks this expressive question: "Is this Administration surrounding itself with the best, the purest, the ablest men it can secure, or is it harboring the unclean, the disreputable and the incompetent?"

It is unjust, therefore, to assert that the Democratic dissatisfaction springs wholly from Mr. Cleveland's refusal to distribute the Federal patronage as rapidly as his party desires, or to picture the President as sacrificing his popularity with his own party for the sake of reform. The Democracy perceives, as the Republican party does that Mr. Cleveland's proclaimed devotion to Civil-Service Reform is simply a cloak for concealing the most disreputable appointments ever made by an American President. Neither has he been true to the platform on which he was elected. As the Galveston News says: "The Democrats in general desired and hoped to see a Democratic President take an advanced position on the Democratic side of political questions, and they are disappointed." Mr. Cleveland has himself only to blame if his inconsistent course has alienated and disgusted his own party, and shut the door to all support from his political opponents. He stands to-day a President without a party and without the sympathy of any political organization worthy of the name.—Philadelphia Press.

The trust can not be of any earthly value unless it is amply provided with Pan-Electric attachments.—Attorney-General Garland.

No trust should prevent a Cabinet officer from draping his department in mourning on the death of an ex-rebel officer like my deceased friend, Jake Thompson.—Secretary of Interior L. Q. C. Lamar.

Public office is very good as a trust, but is never enjoyed in the highest degree except when taken with a street railway franchise and a ruined shipyard, the whole saturated with coal oil.—Secretary Whitney.

It is all very well to call it a trust, but the chief aim of a Democratic Cabinet officer should be to so interpret the law as to put Democratic seekers in offices formerly held by competent, though offensively partisan Republicans.—Postmaster-General Vilas.

Before my election to the Presidency I did regard public office as a trust. Now I look upon my office and the patronage belonging to it as my individual property, and I am not responsible to the Senate, the laws, or any thing else. Public office is the property of the man who gets it.—Grover Cleveland.—Cleveland Leader.

☞ The end of the first year of the first—and perhaps the last—post-bellum Democratic Administration finds the Democrats disgruntled, the mugwumps miserable and the Republican party robustly cheerful.—Washington Republican.

—The mule is useful on the farm, and more use could be made of these hardy animals to advantage. Especially are they well adapted to the plow, and for use in clearings and for use in new ground, where it is dangerous to use the more delicate horse.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—A danger to be avoided in keeping fowls is overcrowding. Too many, after building a house of proper dimensions for the first lot, neglect to enlarge the quarters as they enlarge the flock. Where the extensive business is carried on the fowls should be separated in small flocks; they will not do their best until this is done.—Chicago Tribune.

—Pickled Ham: This is a country delicacy. It should be small, a pig's ham and sugar-cured, but not smoked. Simmer for three hours, then take off the skin, stick in a few cloves and bake for half an hour, basting it frequently with brown sugar dissolved in cider. It will be found delicious, something between ham and roast pork.—Good Housekeeping.

—Fried Onions: Having peeled the onions, cut them in rings and throw them into enough very hot fat in the frying pan to float them. If the fat is kept at the right heat the onions will not require much attention while cooking. As soon as they are golden brown take them out of the pan with a skimmer and throw them on to paper to absorb the grease.—Boston Budget.

—Hashed Beef: Take two pounds of cold beef, free from sinew, and bone and chop it up well. Peel and cut in pieces two onions and put them in a frying-pan with two ounces of butter. When beginning to color very lightly add your beef, a little salt, pepper and nutmeg and a pinch of thyme. Toss altogether on the fire ten minutes. Just before serving sprinkle a little chopped parsley over the top of your hash.—The Household.

—It frequently happens that, from long neglect, plate becomes so stained and spotted that it can not be immediately restored by any of the plate-powders. Whenever this occurs, mix one part of sal ammoniac with sixteen parts of vinegar. Rub the stains or spots gently with the mixture; they will soon disappear. The plate should then be well washed in soap and water.—Farm and Home.

PREVENTION OF DISEASE.

Health and Sickness Dependent Upon the Observance of Nature's Laws.

If "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" in the ordinary affairs of life, it is doubly so in the matter of disease, health and disease depending on the observance or non-observance of the laws of our being, or the conditions of health. These laws are as easily learned as those of chemistry, astronomy, etc., while they are of most practical value to us, our happiness largely being the result of a good physical condition. As we were created, "fearfully and wonderfully made," to remain in health was as natural as breathing, the circulation of the blood and other fluids.

Naturally, we are in health so long as nothing is done to produce disease. And here, I will remark, that what we usually regard as diseases are simply the outward signs of an internal derangement, symptoms, the indications, or what results from the recuperative efforts of nature in removing internal difficulties. Thus, a cough which should never be stopped, not abruptly, if at all, only so far as it is done by the removal of the cause, or causes, at which there is no occasion for its continuance, is an indication that there is something in the lungs, if a lung cough, which should be removed, as a means of preventing more serious effects. Let nature alone! Let the cough continue till it has performed its mission, simply aiding nature in the removal of the cause. It is easy to prevent the accumulation in the lungs, by cleanliness, by "breaking a cold," opening the pores, that the accumulations of waste and dead matters may pass off through these pores, rather than pass to the lungs, ejected by coughing. Vomiting is not the disease, but an effort of nature to purify, cleanse a foul stomach, aside from which the undigested accumulations might ferment and putrify, contaminating the whole body, a veritable case of "blood-poisoning." Instead of giving opiates to stop such natural and necessary vomiting, it is well to fill the stomach as full as possible with warm water, making the act an easy one, at the same time thoroughly cleansing that organ.

When, in consequence of over-eating, or from some natural obstructions, there is violent purging, as if all of the ducts of the body were opened, throwing their contents into the bowels, in a friendly way, rapidly carrying off poisonous accumulations, preventing other and worse derangements, purifying the system as no other means can do, at the most rapid rate, it is folly, madness to attempt to stop this discharge, which should be encouraged by all possible means, giving cathartics, if they ever should be given (or injections of warm water). Never interfere with nature, since God speaks through nature. Proper dieting will prevent this occasion for nature to interfere, to institute recuperative measures. As a general principle, those who eat properly, using only foods which can be easily digested, and who are cleanly in all respects, will have no such symptoms, no occasion for nature to interfere, to cure an internal derangement. The same principles apply to boils and general eruptions. When there is internal impurity, from bad habits, from uncleanliness, nature seeks the nearest and most available outlet, passing out through openings made by herself, the effete matters which, otherwise, might induce fevers, inflammations, organic diseases, those of a more serious character. It is wise and safe for us, in our blindness, to "mind our own business," sitting and learning at nature's feet.—Dr. Hanaford, in Golden Rule.

ROMANCE OF A RING.

How a Young Woman in Georgia Managed to Retain a Precious Keepsake.

[Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.]

Judge Roney delivered his decision in a case based upon a peculiar state of facts and not without romantic interest. The names of the parties are not necessary to the recital of the case. Suffice it to say that an attractive young lady of this county was sued in this city by a young man, equally well known, for the possession of a ring. Owing to some imperfection in the service of the notice upon the young lady she paid no attention to it, and made no defense in the justice court. Judgment was therefore entered against her, and the justice, construing it in the nature of a bail trover procedure, a constable was sent to secure the ring. The young lady had the ring upon her finger, and refused pointedly and positively to surrender it. The constable retired in good order and reported the state of affairs. The plaintiff in the case thereupon took out a possessory warrant to empower the constable to get the ring with or without the defendant's consent.

At this stage of the case the young lady came forward by her attorney, W. H. Fleming, and set out that the case was not an action in trover but assumpsit, further, that the ring had been given to her by the brother of the plaintiff, who was now dead, as an engagement ring; that she had been in the peaceful and undisputed possession of the same for four years; that it was a cherished memento of her dead lover, and she refused to relinquish it. The case came before Judge Roney upon certiorari from the justice court, and after reviewing the foregoing facts he decided that the ring should remain in the possession of the young lady.

The gallant members of the bar who were present heartily concurred in the decision, and some of them said at side bar that they would have left the ring in the possession of the young lady even if a strain on the statutes had been necessary.

Flowers That Bloom

In the Spring—will be here before you know it, and you should be prepared to enjoy the most delightful season of the year. To escape the depressing, debilitating effects of the changing season you should purify your blood, and keep up a good appetite and good digestion by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. A single dollar for this reliable medicine now may save you a good deal of money later in the year. Take it now.

"When I bought Hood's Sarsaparilla I made a good investment of one dollar in medicine for the first time. It has driven off rheumatism and improved my appetite so much that my boarding mistress says I must keep it locked up or she will be obliged to raise my board with every other boarder that takes Hood's Sarsaparilla." THOMAS BURRELL, 99 Tillary Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla was a God-send to me, for it cured me of dyspepsia and liver complaint with which I had suffered 20 years." J. B. HORNBECK, South Fallsburg, N. Y.

"As Good as New,"

are the words used by a lady, who was at one time given up by the most eminent physicians, and left to die. Reduced to a mere skeleton, pain and haggard, not able to leave her bed, from all those distressing diseases peculiar to suffering females, such as displacement, leucorrhea, inflammation, etc., etc. She began taking Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," and also using the local treatment recommended by him, and is now, she says, "as good as new." Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

THE HAPPINESS OF ELYSIUM.

Elysium was the name given by the ancient Greeks to the resting place of the righteous dead, where they should enjoy eternal peace and happiness. None but the pure in heart, the faithful and the generous could tread the asphodel meadows of the Elysian fields and it was a land of everlasting delight. When, therefore, Mrs. Kate Sherman, of Streator, Ill., said recently that she had been in Elysium, though of course she spoke figuratively, it argued that some great good fortune and joy had come to her. And such, indeed, was the truth. Mrs. Sherman tells how it was in this way:

"I have suffered from inflammatory rheumatism for more than thirty years. Heretofore the pain would succumb to the application of hot wet flannel, but at my last attack circumstances had conspired to aggravate the disease, and I became helpless. My hands and feet were swollen enormously, and I suffered almost mortal agony. My physician brought me a bottle of Athlophoros. After taking the third dose I was in Elysium, and was free from pain. By the time I had taken a bottle and a half I felt so wonderfully improved that I discontinued the medicine. I have an ungovernable dislike to all medicine, but I will say that Athlophoros probably saved my life, and I was running down rapidly, and could not have endured the pain much longer. It afforded me the only relief I ever experienced, except from hot water, and that had failed me."

"Mrs. Porter was very much benefited by the first bottle. Before she commenced taking it she could not walk, she was so terribly afflicted with rheumatism, but was soon able to walk. She sleeps well. Mr. John Hews, our neighbor, was very badly off with the rheumatism last winter, and was not able to work or even to get out of his room. One bottle of Athlophoros cured him, but he has to keep it by him to take when he has the old difficulties."

Another clergyman, the Rev. C. Hartley, of Huntley, Ill., gives this as his experience with the remedy:

"For six months I suffered severely from an attack of rheumatism. A friend sent me a notice of several reliable cures effected by Athlophoros. I procured the medicine, and less than one bottle completely cured me, and I have not had the least indication of a return of the painful disease. I have recommended it to others and results similar to those in my own case have followed. I regard Athlophoros as invaluable."

A. M. Blakney, who lives at the corner of Union and Green streets, Decatur, Ill., only confirms the general testimony to the value of Athlophoros when he says:

"During the past winter I was stricken with a very severe attack of rheumatism—a disease with which I had been afflicted for several years—and was rendered almost helpless, and confined to my bed. I tried various medicines, and was prescribed for by physicians with little or no avail. Finally I was induced by my druggist to try Athlophoros. I was relieved and cured so quickly that words could not tell my surprise. I do not hesitate to recommend it to any one suffering with that most painful complaint, rheumatism."

If you can not get Athlophoros of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS CO., 112 Wall Street, New York.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

SATURDAY, March 20.—The Senate was not in session. In the House the time was occupied in debate on the adverse report on the Free Coinage Silver bill.

MONDAY, March 22.—In the Senate the debate over the refusal of the President to furnish papers concerning removals from office was resumed. Mr. Logan submitted a resolution providing for the consideration of Presidential nominations in open sessions of the Senate. Mr. Wilson presented a memorial from the Legislature of Iowa urging the passage of the Des Moines River Land Title bill over the President's veto. In the House bills were introduced: By Mr. Anderson, to create a commission of arbitration to arbitrate in cases of labor strikes; by Mr. Van Eaton, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy; by Mr. Swinburne, to reduce the salaries of all public officials whose salaries have been increased by Congressional enactment since 1862; by Mr. Merriman, for the issue of United States coin notes; by Mr. Warner, to define the unit of value and regulate the coins of the United States. The bill granting the widow of the late General Hancock a pension of $2,000 a year was passed by a vote of 169 to 47.

TUESDAY, March 23.—The right of the Senate to official papers in cases of removal from office was further considered. Bills were introduced: By Mr. Logan, repealing the law which declares that when a vacancy occurs in the office of General [illegible]

THE AGE OF DEPRESSION.

Labor Commissioner Wright Gives His Views as to the Causes of Business Stagnation, and His Ideas of a Remedy—Prosperity Slowly but Surely Returning.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The first annual report of Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor, has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. It will make a volume of 500 pages and comprehends more than 40 industries, nearly 700 establishments and over 150,000 employes. In the chapter devoted to "the industrial depression in the United States," Commissioner Wright estimates that there were in 1885 1,000,000 men unemployed in the United States, who, according to the census of 1880, were engaged in agriculture, trade and transportation, mining industries and manufactures—meaning by the unemployed, those who, under prosperous times, would be employed, and who in 1885 were seeking employment. The report says:

A million men out of employment means a loss to the consumptive power of the country of at least $1,000,000 per day, or a crippling of the trade of the country of over $300,000,000 per year. The earnings of the people involved in the classes named above would not be far from $500 each per annum, representing total earnings of $7,500,000,000. The wage earnings of the million that should be employed are crippled to the extent of over $[illegible] per annum. * * * It is curious to observe, however, that while the severity of the depression causes a crippling to the extent of several hundred millions of dollars per year of the consuming power of the people the volume of business transacted is not crippled comparatively to any such extent.

The popular idea of the severity of the present depression, Mr. Wright says, would lead one to suppose that all branches of business were severely stagnated and that failures were the order of the day, but an examination of some of the principal commercial and industrial facts available teaches the error of popular opinion in this respect. While the number of failures for 1884 was but little more than the number for 1883, the total amount of liabilities was very nearly double, and the total amount of liabilities for 1885 was less than the amount of liabilities for either of the [illegible]

The Agreement Between Mr. Hoxie and the Two Governors Rejected by the Knights of Labor—Their Kansas City Switchmen Organize and Unanimous Strike—General Business Seriously Affected.

ST. LOUIS, March 23.—The basis of settlement of the strike on the Missouri Pacific road, as drawn up by Governors Marmaduke, of Missouri, and Glick, of Kansas, and accepted by President Hoxie, was presented to the executive committees of Assemblies 101, 17 and 93 of the Knights of Labor, and was discussed at sessions in the morning and afternoon. During the continuance of the session the committees drew up and adopted a set of resolutions asserting that the corporations of the country [illegible] in concert to break down the [illegible] labor organizations, and thereby [illegible] country; that the refusal of representatives of corporations to treat with representatives of labor is a [illegible] calling on all trades assemblies and organizations in the land to [illegible] demand for recognition of their [illegible] and their right to negotiate [illegible] and deal with individuals or bodies [illegible] case may be, and urging legislatures, State and National, to enact measures as will compel the recognition of [illegible] organizations and trades assemblies [illegible] also to compel corporations to [illegible] differences between and with [illegible] and their employes.

A NEW AMUSEMENT.

A Transformation Scrap-Book, and How to Make It.

The question of how to amuse the children is being continually answered, in one way and another, by new inventions in toys and games. Yet the ready-made playthings are not nearly so satisfying to our girls and boys as those they may employ their taste and ingenuity upon in manufacturing themselves. We therefore introduce the Transformation Scrap-Book to our young readers as something any child can make, as an exceedingly amusing picture-book, and on account of the various and ever-changing pictures it presents, a toy not soon tired of.

A blank book is the first article required, one eight inches long by six and a half or seven wide is a good size.

Cut the pages of this book across, one-third of the way down. Fig. 1 shows how this should be done; the three-cornered piece cut out near the binding allows the pages to be turned without catching or tearing.

Leave the first page uncut; also one in the middle of the book.

The next thing to be done is to cut from picture-cards, or old toy-books which have colored illustrations, the odd and funny figures of men and women, boys and girls, selecting those which will give a variety of attitudes and costumes.

Paste a figure of a woman or girl on the first page, placing it so that when the lower part of the next page is turned, the upper edge of it will come across the neck of the figure where it is joined on to the shoulders.

Cut the heads from the rest of the pictured women, and choosing a body as different as possible from the one just used, paste it upon the lower part of the next page, directly under the head belonging to the first body. Upon the upper part of the same page paste any one of the other heads, being careful to place it so that it will fit the body. Continue in this way, pasting the heads upon the upper, and the bodies on the lower, part of the page, until the space allowed for the women is filled up; then, commencing at the page left in the middle of the book, paste upon it the figure of a man, and continue in the same manner as with the women, until the spaces are all used and the book is complete.

The combinations formed in this way are very funny. Old heads with young bodies; young heads with old bodies; then one head with a great variety of bodies, and so on.

The first picture may represent a man tall and thin, dressed in a rowing costume, as shown in illustration. Turn the lower part of the next page, and no longer is he thin and tall, but short and stout, the position of this body giving the expression of amazement, even to the lore. The next page turned shows him to be neither tall nor short, thick nor thin, but a soldier, well-proportioned, who is looking over his shoulder in the most natural manner possible.

The figures in the illustration were cut from advertising-cards, and the head belongs to none of the bodies.

A curious fact in arranging the pictures in this way, is that the heads all look as though they might really belong to any of the various bodies given them.

THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

AT THIS TIME OF THE YEAR
PAINTING
BECOMES AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

To every house-holder, and the question arrises What Kind of Paint to buy and where to buy it.

Stockman & Iddings undoubtedly handle a much larger quantity of Paint Supplies than any other house in the County. All goods sold by them are guaranteed to be the BEST in quality, and in PRICE the CHEAPEST.

They offer this year "THE KING," all shades and colors, manufactured and warranted by The Chicago White Lead and Oil Co., SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SOLID PAINTS, in fact others are only imitations.

Also as heretofore Heath & Milligan's BEST Liquid Paints,--Ready Mixed,--well-known and popular.

These Paints have stood the test for years, are well-known to all painters and architects in Charlevoix and vicinity and therefore need no extended notice.

CAUTION.--When you buy paint KNOW which you are buying, READY MIXED which is sold by the gallon, or solid colors, (so called paste paint) which should be sold by the pound, the oil to thin it being sold separately by the gallon.

IF YOU WANT TO PAINT, CALCIMINE OR DO ANY OTHER SPRING WORK, OR IF YOU WANT A STOVE OF ANY KIND OR ANY OTHER HARDWARE OR BUILDING SUPPLIES, DO NOT FAIL TO GO TO STOCKMAN & IDDINGS FOR THEM, AND GET THE BEST GOODS AT THE LOWEST PRICES.

Yours for the improvement of Charlevoix and Charlevoix County,

The Fight Between the Senate and the Administration Fairly Commenced by the Adoption of the Edmunds Resolutions—Speeches by Senators Ingalls, Logan and Harrison.

The Edmunds resolutions, which for several weeks have been the subject of so much debate in Congress and throughout the country, came up for final consideration in the Senate on March 26. At noon [illegible] was a great crowd in the Senate galleries [illegible]

[illegible]

Mr. Edmunds, in closing the debate, reviewed the whole question carefully and contended that the two Houses of Congress had a right to see the papers affecting the business of the Government. The question was then on Mr. Van Wyck's amendment providing that in all such cases of removals the matter of confirmations shall be considered in open sessions of the Senate. Mr. Van Wyck made a strong speech in advocacy of the amendment. Mr. Hoar raised the point that the amendment was not in order, inasmuch as it changed the rules of the Senate and no notice had been given of it.

The President pro tem. sustained the point of order, and an appeal taken by Mr. Butler was laid upon the table—yeas 31, nays 28. This was a strict party vote, except that Van Wyck and Riddleberger voted with the Democrats.

The resolutions then came up for final action and the result was their adoption by the following votes: The first resolution by 32 to 26, the second 32 to 25; the third, 30 to 29, and the fourth 56 to 1.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Twelfth Discourse of the Series on "The Marriage Ring."

The Value of Good Mothers in a Community—The Story of Hannah and the Child Samuel By Way of Illustration—The Price of a Soul.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's twelfth sermon on "The Marriage Ring" takes up the subject of "Motherhood," the text being the words:

Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice.—I Samuel, ii., 19.

The stories of Deborah and Abigail are very apt to discourage a woman's soul. She says within herself: "It is impossible that I ever can achieve any such grandeur of character, and I don't mean to try," as though a child should refuse to play the eight notes because he can not execute a "William Tell." This Hannah of the text differs from the persons I just now named. She was an ordinary woman, with ordinary intellectual capacity, placed in the ordinary circumstances, and yet, by extraordinary piety, standing out before all the ages to come, the model Christian mother.

Hannah was the wife of Elkanah, who was a person very much like herself—unromantic and plain, never having fought a battle or been the subject of a marvelous escape. Neither of them would have been called a genius. Just what you and I might be, that was Elkanah and Hannah.

The brightest time in all the history of that family was the birth of Samuel. Although no star ran along the heavens pointing down to his birthplace, I think the angels of God stooped at the coming of so wonderful a prophet.

[illegible]

Oh! this work of culture in children for this world and the next. This child is timid, and it must be roused up and pushed out into activity. This child is forward, and he must be held back and tamed down into modesty and politeness. Rewards for one; punishment for another. That which will make George will ruin John. The rod is necessary in one case, while a frown of displeasure is more than enough in another. Whipping and a dark closet do not exhaust all the rounds of domestic discipline. There have been children who have grown up and gone to glory without ever having had their ears boxed.

Oh! how much care and intelligence are necessary in the rearing of children! But in this day, when there are so many books on the subject, no parent is excusable in being ignorant of the best mode of bringing up a child. If parents knew more of dietetics there would not be so many dyspeptic stomachs and weak nerves and incompetent livers among children. If parents knew more of physiology there would not be so many curved spines, and cramped chests, and inflamed throats, and diseased lungs as there are among children. If parents knew more of art, and were in sympathy with all that is beautiful, there would not be so many children coming out in the world with boorish proclivities. If parents knew more of Christ, and practiced more of his religion, there would not be so many little feet already starting on the wrong road, and all around us voices of riot and blasphemy would not come up [illegible]

The story of what you have done, or what you have written, or the influence you have exerted, has gone back to the old homestead—for there is some one always ready to carry good tidings, and that story makes the needle in the old mother's tremulous hand fly quicker, and the flail in the father's hand comes down upon the barn floor with a more vigorous thump. Parents love to hear good news from their children. Do you send them good news always?

Look out for the young man who speaks of his father as "the Governor," "the Squire" or the "old chap." Look out for the young woman who calls her maternal ancestor the "old woman." "The eye that mocketh at his father, and refuseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it."

God grant that all these parents may have the great satisfaction of seeing their children grow up Christians. But oh! the pang of that mother who, after a life of street-gadding and gossip-retailing, hanging on the children the fripperies and follies of this world, sees those children tossed out on the sea of life like foam on the wave, or nonentities in a world which only bravery and stalwart character can stand the shock! But blessed be the mother who looks upon her children as sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty.

Oh! the satisfaction of Hannah in seeing Samuel serving at the altar; of Mother Eunice in seeing her Timothy learned in the Scriptures. That is the mother's recompense, to see children coming up useful in the world, reclaiming the lost, healing the sick, pitying the ignorant, earnest and useful in every sphere. That throws a new light back on the old family Bible whenever she reads it, and that will be ointment to the the aching limbs of decrepitude, and light up the closing hours of life's day with the glories of an autumnal sunset.

The Friend of Labor.

When Bland's resolution, to set aside four days for a silver debate, came up in the house last week Representative Cutcheon was the only member of the Michigan delegation who voted against it. Gen. Cutcheon's reasons for voting as he did were stated by him in an interview as follows:

"I did not vote against the continued coinage of silver nor yet against the free coinage of silver. I am in favor of the absolutely free coinage of both gold and silver the moment that any way can be devised to make the dollars equal. I think there should be no discrimination between the two metals. My motto is 'equal rights for equal dollars.' The resolution was simply one to take up the coinage bill out of its order. There are about thirty other bills that precede it on the house calendar, and which have lawful priority. Among these bills are four reported from the committee on labor. To pass the resolution was to postpone all labor legislation until after a long discussion on the silver question, and thereby endanger the consideration of all these labor bills at this session of congress. These labor bills are the eight hour law, the mechanics' and laborers' lien law, the convict labor law, and the bill for the relief of the government printers, all which I favor and desire to see considered at this session."—Big Rapids Current.

Loyal to Gen. Cutcheon.

From the Big Rapids Current.

Recently the Osceola Outline mentioned the name of Hon. J. W. Moon of Muskegon as an available candidate for congress from this district in case Gen. Cutcheon should not wish a renomination. From the subjoined letter which Mr. Moon has addressed to the Outline editor it appears that the former is strongly in favor of a renomination of Gen. Cutcheon:

MUSKEGON, Mich., March 15, 1886.
W. G. CAMPAU, editor Osceola Outline.

My Dear Sir.—I have noticed some comments on an editorial found in your paper a short time ago, connecting my name in some way with the next nomination for congress from this district. While I appreciate very highly your favorable mention, as well as the expressions of confidence coming from so many other sources, for the interest I have in the ninth congressional district, and feeling that there is not another district in the state that is so ably represented in congress as ours, I am glad we have the name of Byron M. Cutcheon to stand at the head of the column. Having confidence in the good judgment of the voters of this district, and feeling sure that those who voted for him in 1884 have been watching his record with pride I have no doubt that he will be renominated by acclamation in the next congressional convention and that his majorities will be increased throughout the district. Unless the General should be asked by the next legislature to go one step higher, I hope we will not be compelled to hunt a man up to take his place for many years to come.

Yours very truly,
J. W. MOON.

The United States Senate has passed a bill which provides that "the charge of desertion now standing on the War Department record against any soldier who served in the late war, by reason of having enlisted without having first received a discharge from the regiment in which he had previously served, shall be removed in all cases where it is shown that such re-enlistment was not made for the purpose of receiving bounty or other gratuities the soldier would not have been entitled to had he remained under his original term of enlistment." The bill is not to apply to any soldiers who left their command without proper authority while the same was at the time of the desertion under arrest for charges.

A pretty good hint of the financial alliance of the present Administration with Wall street is given in a Washington dispatch which after saying that Secretary Manning would probably never be able to resume the duties of his office, even if he should get on his feet again, adds: "If a Western man were to succeed him, the portfolio might be offered to Vice President Lyman J. Gage, of the First National of Chicago. But the appointment will be made from Wall street, and in all probability George M. Coe, the President of the American Exchange Bank, will be the man." The so-called Labor-party men, Greenbackers and Anti-Monopolists who helped the Cleveland party into power are nowadays treated to many fine illustrations of the real character of the work they did in the Presidential campaign.

Gladstone is indeed "a grand old man."

The city of Cadillac pays salaries to its officers as follows: Clerk, $300 and fees; Attorney, $225; Marshall, $550; Collector, $150; Treasurer, $50; Police Justice, $300; Chief of Fire Department, $50; Warden, $50; Director of the Poor, $250; City Physician, $200; Health Officer, $200; Janitor, $100.

The Cheboygan rifle team is in possession of a magnificent prize medal. It is intended to be worn by the successful member making the highest number of points in their practice. The efficiency of the team will no doubt be accelerated as each one will be anxious to display the trophy on his manly breast.

The Harbor Point dock is badly damaged by the ice, and the shore end of the structure resembles a camel's back. The outer crib is not damaged however, and a few days work with a pile driver will put the dock in good shape again. We understand the Harbor Point association rent the dock of Mr. Allen, of Charlevoix, and if so the loss will fall on him.—Independent.

A Cross Village letter to the Harbor Springs Independent says: It was exceedingly lively in this town election day, and although politics were ignored, one ticket being headed Union and the other People's, every device known to gain votes was resorted to, the main contest being between the north and south ends of town, and a large vote was polled for a spring election. Two tickets only were in the field, one headed by Will Shurtleff and the other by A. T. Burnett. Mr Burnett withdrew in favor of J. E. Wagley, who was elected by 10 majority, the vote on principal officers standing as follows: Supervisor, Shurtleff, 58, Wagley, 68; clerk, Messler, 76. Samuel Anamaquam, 52; treasurer, G. B. Martindale, 77, Francis Tabasash, 51; justice, S. Morris, 69, D. Root, 54; commissioner, Burtt, 75 Ononegos, 53.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c per box by Dr. G. W. Crouter and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

YOU will notice how quickly a thoroughly successful article is imitated, and also that the imitations are without merit, as they are gotten up by unscrupulous parties. Beware of imitations of Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic. The genuine is sold by Druggists, and promptly cures dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malaria diseases, poor appetite, low spirits, headache, or diseases of the kidneys, stomach and liver. Price fifty cents.

Good Results in Every Case.

D. A. Bradford, wholesale paper dealer of Chattanooga, Tenn., writes that he was seriously afflicted with a severe cold that settled on his lungs; had tried many remedies without benefit. Being induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, did so and was entirely cured by use of a few bottles. Since which time he has used it in his family for all Coughs and Colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands whose lives have been saved by this Wonderful Discovery. Trial Bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THOSE who believe that nature will work off a cough or cold should understand that this is done at the expense of the constitution. Each time this weakens the system, and we all know that the termination of this dangerous practice is a consumptive's grave. Don't take the chances, when a fifty cent bottle of Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure will safely and promptly cure an recent cough, cold or throat or lung trouble. BOILER WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist, and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

RALPH'S MOTHER.

He was a cabinet-maker, who worked all day in beautiful sheets of rosewood and black walnut. She was a bookfolder. They had become acquainted on that stormy autumn night when the wind turned her umbrella inside out and she had to run half a block after her flying dinner basket. And then they met once or twice at church and at the bible-class of a Sunday afternoon, and old Mrs. Tyson, the minister's wife, asked them both to tea. She had been young herself, and she understood the signs and symptoms. So they were married and hired a neat little flat, furnishing it as best they could.

"Isn't it nice?" said Emmy. "Oh! Ralph, don't you wish we had some one to visit us?"

"If it would be company for you, dear," said Ralph Crystal, smiling.

"But there's no one that I know of," said Emmy, "except some far-away cousins in Dakota. And I never knew much about them. Oh! Ralph, haven't you any relations?"

His face clouded over.

"I don't know whether I have or not," said he. "Oh, Emmy, God help me! I've left my past behind me."

He had sunk into a chair, with his head in his hands. She went silently behind him and laid her cheek against his forehead.

"Tell me, Ralph," said she, "what is it? Why have you never spoken to me about it before?"

"Because," he answered, "I didn't want to appear like a savage. Although I don't think I have a claim to be called anything else."

"What is it Ralph?" she repeated.

"I ran away from home when I was 16, Emmy," he replied moodily. "Father was strict and cross with me. I don't say he was right, but now, as I look back to it, I know that I also was wrong.

"I ran away from home and I came to the city to fight my way for myself. And when I had earned enough to make a little home I went back to get my mother out of the atmosphere that wasn't natural to her any more than it was to me.

"I was a fool to suppose that time was going to stand still for my convenience. When I got back to Hickory Falls father was dead and the folks had moved away—no one knew where. Emmy, I can't tell you how I felt when I heard it."

"But Ralph," soothed the young wife, "you will find her. No one could ever be lost."

"I've tried, Emmy—I've tried my best, and it's of no use," he sighed.

Emmy was silent for a second or two.

"I've always wanted a mother," she murmured half to herself, "and Ralph's mother would be all the same as my own." After that she secretly devoted herself to the task of restoring to her husband the dear old mother whom he had loved and lost.

One day this little Mrs. Crystal, being economically disposed, was searching through a second-hand establishment for a coal scuttle and fire arms.

"I'm not going to pay outrageous prices when I can get a bargain only a little used," said she, thriftily.

"Couldn't I sell you something else, ma'am?" said the dealer, with that insinuating smile which is peculiar to proprietors of second-hand shops. "I've a set of red damask curtains——"

Emmy shook her head.

"No," said she, "I need no curtains."

"Half a dozen dining-room chairs, then?" suggested the man. "Or a pair of real old-fashioned girandoles with cut-glass drops?"

But Emmy Crystal did not hear what he was saying; her eyes were fixed intently on a certain old bureau of ancient mahogany, darkened with age, almost to the semblance of ebony, with odd, brass ornaments under the draw-handles, and curious claw-legs. Just such a one, in truth, as Ralph was making in the odds and ends of his time at the shop, because, as he said, his mother had a bureau like that.

"Where did you get that bureau?" she asked, quickly.

"Ma'am?" gasped the dealer.

"I mean who sold it to you?"

"It was brought in yesterday from a place out on the Sound—one o' them little one-horse settlements where they don't have no second-hand emporiums. But I assure you, ma'am," fluttering over the leaves of his ledger, "you won't get it no cheaper by going to the principals. I've bought it out and out!"

"I don't wish to purchase it," said Mrs. Crystal. "But I would like to see the person that—that sold it to you."

"There was a lot of other truck from the same place," said the man. "They're breaking up house, I guess. Oh, I've no objection to give you the address, ma'am! There ain't nothing underhand in my way of doing business," and he wrote off a few words on a slip of paper. "It's an old woman with a hooked nose and a tongue like a twill-wheel."

Mrs. Crystal, however, did not allow herself to be discouraged by this unprepossessing description, but pretending to Ralph that she was going somewhere to attend an auction sale for the purpose of acquiring some table furniture, china, cutlery, and such like, she took the horse cars to Harlem, there changing to another line, which, creeping gradually out among the elms and sycamores, took her to the edge of the Sound, where there was a straggling settlement of little houses around a tall factory. In the farthest of them all—a queer little cabin where the spray sparkled its chimney-stacks at the equinox tides, and a row of boats was pulled up on the edge of the sand, lived Mrs. Peter Pepinstall, the woman who had sold the claw-footed bureau to the dealer in second-hand furniture. The minute Mrs. Crystal saw her beak-shaped nose peeping through the crack of the door she knew that she had come to the right place.

"Anything pa'tickler a-wanting?" said Mrs. Pepinstall. "Because I'm mortal busy to-day a-movin'. I'm goin' to live with his folks up in New London, and I've got all the hard things to pack and my boarder to send off to the poor house afore I can set down to rest. If you're a book-agent, or one o' them travelin' photograph people——There comes Simon Doolittle's one-hoss waggin now arter my boarder."

She bounced back into the house like an India-rubber ball, but Emmy pushed past her into the carpetless, unfurnished room, where the vivid November sunshine printed off the pattern of the window-panes on the boards of the floor with a sort of forlorn glory.

"Is your boarder an old lady?" said she.

"You'll find her in the back room," screeched Mrs. Pepinstall, "settin' all ready!"

And sure enough, in the back room, cowering in the scant warmth of the sunbeams, sat a little old lady in a black silk, quilted hood, snuff-colored cloak, and mittened hands, crossed meekly over each other, as if waiting for some expected summons. Her wistful eyes raised themselves piteously to the direction of the new comer.

"Is it the wagon from the poorhouse?" she asked. "I'm ready, yes, quite ready. I didn't think I should ever come to this, but I'm an old woman—a very old woman. My money is all spent, and I've neither kith nor kin in the world—and I'm an old woman!"

"I hate to send her to a place like that," said Mrs. Pepinstall, reappearing on the scene with a bandbox and two bundles, "but it's just as she says—her money's all gone, and she hasn't no folks of her own, and what be I to do? His folks up in New London don't want to take in no outsiders."

Emmy Crystal's eyes shone through tears. She held out both her hands to the poor little shrunken figure in the silk hood and the snuff-colored cloak.

"Come with me," she said softly.

"Who are you?" asked the old woman, wonderingly.

"I am Ralph's wife. You are Ralph's mother."

"Ralph ran away!" faltered the old woman, her lips beginning to quiver. "I always said his father was too hard on him. Ralph ran away and never came back."

"But you are going to him," said Mrs. Crystal. "Come with me."

"Be you her folks?" said Mrs. Pepinstall. "Well, I never did!"

Simon Doolittle's one-horse wagon drove away from the door without its expected passenger, and the little old woman trudged along to the horse-cars leaning on Emmy Crystal's arm.

"You're not afraid?" soothed the younger woman, as a little shiver went through the doll-like frame of her companion.

"No," said the other, "I'm not afraid of anything any more. I'm an old woman. If Ralph had come back they never would have taken me to the poorhouse, for Ralph always loved me."

That night when Ralph Crystal came home to supper he called cheerily to his wife from the back room, where he was washing his hands:

"Well, Emmy, what did you buy?"

The old woman started to her feet with dilated eyes and figure projected breathlessly forward. Evidently she recognized the voice. Mrs. Crystal, with her arm tenderly around the wasted figure, answered:

"Come here and I will show you."

And entering the room Ralph Crystal came face to face with his mother.

"Ralph, Ralph!" she cried, groping in the air with slender, withered hands.

"Mother!" he gasped, and then they were in each other's arms.

Emmy stole away with a mist of tears before her eyes.

From that time until the day of her death old Mrs. Crystal sat by her son's hearth, serenely happy, in Ralph's love and Emmy's tender care. The past and the present were alike a blank to her—she dwelt in the present alone.

"Ralph ran away!" she kept repeating to herself, "long, long ago! But he has come back. I always knew he would come back; and Emmy is here too, and although I am an old woman, they are good to me!"

Breaking It Gently.

"What is the matter with you, colonel; you look troubled!" said Gus de Smith to Col. Yerger.

"I am in a terrible fix, Gus."

"What's the matter now?"

"You know my wife is very nervous. If the lightest thing goes wrong she is liable to have spasms."

"Well, has anything gone wrong?"

"I should say so. She is devoted to her father. He died in St. Louis four weeks ago, but she doesn't know it. Nobody in the family has the courage to tell her about it. I don't know what to do."

"I'll tell you what. Let me break it to her. I've got tact, and I can do it in such a way that she will scarcely feel the shock."

"God bless you! Go right into the parlor and have it over."

Gus stroked his mustache and sauntered into the room where, looking like a picture of despair, Mrs. Yerger was sitting on a sofa, evidently absorbed in deep thought.

"Good morning, Mrs. Yerger, are you not feeling well?"

"I am not feeling well at all; I am very anxious about my dear father."

"Ah! Perhaps he is better off."

"I can't tell how he is coming on; I haven't had a letter from him in seven weeks."

"Seven weeks!" exclaimed Gus, with a merry laugh. "Why, there is nothing strange about that. My father has been dead for fifteen years and I haven't had a letter from him in all that time."—Texas Siftings.

WASHING SHEEP.

HURT HIS FEELINGS.

The Victim of a Peripatetic Country Photographer Talks Back.

The nomadic gentleman who manipulates the camera obscura in the rural districts is always the leading light in the lonely hamlet where he spreads his tent. He is a curiosity to the verdant country folks, "as smarter'n both o' Jones' boys put together." He brings to them information about the great world outside, and "catches the shadow ere the substance fades," a blessing seldom enjoyed by the granger element of some of our Southern States. After he has completed his harvest, he folds his tent like the Bedouin, and as silently lights out for greener fields and pastures not much used heretofore.

CUPID'S WEATHER BULLETIN.

[Four Indications.]

I.

Fair Weather.

I went into one of these tents one day, and told the long-haired artist that he might perform an operation on me, if he would agree to do it painlessly. He said he would give entire satisfaction, and showed me some pictures he had bought at auction as samples of his ability.

"All right, my friend," said I, "just squirt your dye stuff."

"Will you have a photograph, or a tin-type?"

It was then I learned that his hobby was the tin-type; but I told him that while the tin-type contained many features of excellence, and gave greater scope for the use of his blacking brush, yet, I was not proud, and would be satisfied with a plain photograph.

"My photographs are splendid," said he, "and are mounted on the best cards in the market."

"I should like to have mine mounted on a horse."

"That is impossible, sir."

"Oh, well, just mount them on cards, then; but mount 'em on a flash—a straight flush."

He then placed me in a chair, and, going behind me, he commenced to aggravate my bump of combativeness with an iron instrument, constructed for that purpose, and I was about to retaliate, when he suddenly pranced around to his ten-pounder camera, and told me to look at a certain place which he pointed out to me. I looked, but didn't see anything worth mentioning, and told him so, but he told me to keep my eyes in that direction, while he loaded up his old fuse. I asked him if he thought it would be necessary for me to take chloroform, but he said it would all be over in a minute, and I would never know that anything had happened until I saw the result. I was somewhat afraid that the result would be the most painful part of the programme, but I possessed my soul in patience. He soon completed the loading process, and then he pointed his engine of torture directly toward me—me personally, you understand—and I was on the eve of taking my departure through the side of the most exciting canvass for years, when he cautioned me to be very still. Then he took the prize cup off the end of the machine, and I could look right into the muzzle of the breech-loading apparatus, and saw dissecting rooms, and grave-yards, world without end. Just as every particular hair on my head had assumed the position of a soldier, the artist said that would do—and I thought it would.

II.

Very Warm.

Then he retired to a closet and communed with himself awhile, and probably prayed, for if ever a man needed to pray, it was that artist. Of all the bald-headed, squint-eyed, pug-nosed, snaggle-toothed, lop-eared, long-necked, wapper-jawed, hump-shouldered, hollow-breasted, knock-kneed, spindle-shanked, box-ankled, web-footed, pigeon-toed, gallows-bird that ever inhabited this nightmare-ridden world that picture represented the worst.

"Doesn't it look natural?" said he.

"Perhaps it does. Who is it?"

"Yourself!"

I didn't exactly hit him but I pounded him with a club until I hurt his feelings.—M. E. White, in Goodall's Sun.

Medical Advice.

Colonel Witherspoon, to whom we have frequently referred as the meanest man in Austin, has been in poor health for some months past. The principal cause of his feebleness is his unwillingness to feed himself with sufficient nourishment.

A few days ago, while he was taking the air, he met Dr. Perkins Snooper. Witherspoon thought this was a good chance to get some medical advice without paying for it.

"How do you do this morning, Colonel?" asked Dr. Snooper.

"Poorly, doctor, poorly. For some time past I have been suffering from weakness. As you see, I can hardly walk. What shall I take, doctor?"

"Take a hack," replied the doctor, gruffly, as he strode off.—Texas Siftings.

A Reasonable Request.

Jim Simpson is an engineer on the I. & G. N. railroad. He was off duty at Austin a few days ago. He met Judge Peterby, with whom he was acquainted.

"I say, Judge, I wish you would do me a favor."

"I'll do it."

"It will be appreciated by all the engineers on the I. & G. N. railroad."

"What can I do for you all?"

"Please don't hang around the depot when the trains are coming in. ..."

His eyes immediately sought one of the mysterious signs.

"Pardner," said the melancholy man, "to decide a bet I wish you'd tell me what that air S. P. Q. R. stands for."

"That, my friend," said the proprietor glibly, "stands for Small Profits and Quick Returns. That's my motto. That's the way I sell goods. What did you think it was?"

"Well," said the man with a long sigh of relief, "we've both lost. I bet a yearling steer it stood for Sweet Potatoes and Quack Remedies, and Bill Gibbons bet it was Sick Rats Quickly Restored. So it's stand off, pard, an' I'm much obliged to yer. I'll just go hum and report to Bill."—Texas Siftings.

Not Much Danger.

An extremely tall gentleman of six feet three was skating in Central Park with a young lady who was not over four feet and a half in height.

"I wonder what would become of us if the ice were to break."

"O, it's not deep. There is no danger. It's only up to my chin."

N. B.—Her head was only two feet lower than his chin.—N. Y. Telegram.

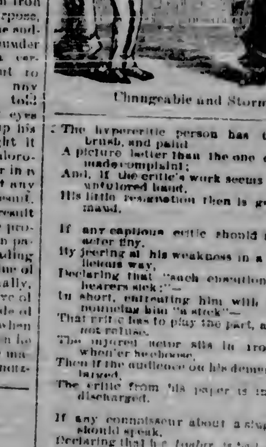
A CRITIC'S PURGATORY.

I had a fantastical night and in my dream it seemed to reach
A certain land whose critics always practice what they preach,
And, when they ridicule a thing and at it poke their fun,
They straightway have to rise and show just how it should be done.

In writing of a drama, should a journalist begin
"The story of this farrago is thin throughout and thin;
The persons are automatons and the construction's poor;
The dialogue monotonous; the moral far from pure,"
The author has a right then to compel the critic elf,
Who thus cuts up the play, to write a better one himself;
And if that critic's play of imperfections is not void
He has to leave the journal upon which he is employed.

About an artist's painting should a savage critic sneer,
And rail at his perspective and denounce his "atmosphere,"
If at that artist's "high lights" darts of satire be impelled—

III.



Changeable and Stormy.

The hypercritic person has to take the brush, and paint
A picture better than the one of which he made complaint;
And, if the critic's work seems done by an unlettered hand,
His little resignation then is greatly in demand.

If any captious critic should a wretched actor tiny,
By jeering at his weakness in a mean, malicious way,
Declaring that "such execution makes all hearers sick;"—
In short, entreating him with scorn, pronouncing him "a stick"—
That critic has to play the part, and he may not refuse.
The injured actor sits in front to hiss when'er he choose,
Then if the audience on his demerits has enlarged,
The critic from his paper is immediately discharged.

If any connoisseur about a singer's voice should speak,
Declaring that his basso is bad and scathing his technique,
Pronouncing his cabaletta a most terrible defect
His cantabile singing very far from what's correct,
That critic has to sing, in style artistic, clear and free,
The self same cavatina just to show what he can do.
And, if of its proficiency there is the slightest doubt,
His valuable services his paper does without.

MORAL.

Now, if this system should be tried with us a week or more,
A critic's life would be declared a burden and a bore;
Then authors, artists, actors would be less severely flayed,
And some few critics whom I know would seek some other trade.

—Rambler.

Generosity Before Justice.

First Bohemian—I say, Joe, I wish you would let me have back those two pounds you borrowed of me last week.

Second Ditto—Oh, my dear fellow so sorry, but it's impossible. I'm hard up to such an extent that I—

First Ditto (happy thought)—Could you lend me five pounds?

Second Ditto (off his guard)—My dear fellow, with the greatest pleasure in life. (Forks out the same.)—Punch.

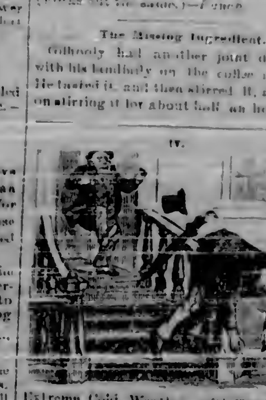
The Missing Ingredient.

Gilhooly had another joint discussion with his landlady on the coffee question. He tasted it, and then stirred it, and kept on stirring it for about half an hour without saying a word. Finally she spoke up.

"Perhaps, Mr. Gilhooly, I didn't put in any sugar?"

"You didn't put in any coffee," was the quiet reply.—Texas Siftings.

IV.



Extreme Cold Weather, with Terrific Cyclones.

—Puck.

Her Revenge Was Terrible.

"Here is rather a sad accident in the paper, my dear," said Squilding.

"What is it?" asked his wife.

"A Bohemian girl at Chicago committed suicide to spite her lover, who had offended her."

Death of Mrs. E. H. Green

Mrs. Luna A. Green, wife of Hon. E. H. Green of this place, departed this life at 9:30 this morning, of heart difficulty, after months of suffering, borne with patience and Christian fortitude.

In the history of Charlevoix, no death has caused more intense sorrow in this county and none has brought with it more touching family bereavement than the death of Mrs. Green.

Mrs. Green (nee Luna A. Matthews,) was born in Washtenaw county, near Ann Arbor, on the 19th of May, 1840, and was consequently at the time of her death, 46 years of age. In Sept. 1868, she was married at Ann Arbor, to Edward H. Green, then a fresh graduate of the law department of the University.

They thereupon removed to the home already provided by Major Green at this place, where they have since resided, having in these eighteen years enlarged and beautified their home in material adornment, but in the elements of this exemplary home, the model Christian wife and mother was the light of a happy household. Mrs. Green's influence extended beyond her home, and not only Christian people, but society at large will miss her example and her aid in all matters involving the betterment of those with whom she came in contact.

Her amiable character and unswerving Christian fidelity; her prayerful life and dutiful care over her family are too well known to her neighbors to require comment in these columns.

Mrs. Green leaves a husband and five children, whose loss of the wife and mother is indeed a most sorrowful one. The entire community is united in their sympathy for them.

At the time of our going to press the funeral arrangements have not been decided upon.

Northern Michigan.

The Congregationalists of Eastport will begin the erection of a church as soon as the season will permit. The building will be 30 feet square, and will be of brick.

Postmaster Owen, of Bellaire, has ordered a new postoffice cabinet. It contains 144 wire bottom call boxes, and is made by the Yale & Towne M'f'g Co.

At the recent election in Banks, the following officers were elected: Supervisor, L. M. Kanagy; Clerk, E. B. Marshall; Treasurer, Wm. Flanagin; Commissioner of Highways, D. Flanagin; School Inspector, M. E. Byers; Justices, Wm. H. Burns for full term, and Melburn Wilson to fill vacancy; Drain Commissioner, Gilbert Bentley; Constables, Lewis Wrey, Philip Eascott, John Runyon and Henry Bowers.

The Petoskey postoffice has received a pouch of mail fished up from the steamer Oregon lately sunk off Sandy Hook. The matter was still wet, and smelled of salt water.

Wilson Rushmore, of Elk Rapids, has a pet squirrel whose foster mother is an old cat, who passes most of her time wondering what makes one of her children act so.

Daniel Harrington will soon erect an agricultural implement store building at Bellaire.

Thomas Copp has rented the building at Northport formerly occupied by Hitchcock & Putnam, and upon the opening of navigation will put in a full stock of general merchandise.

About 25 tons of salt fish have been shipped from Northport this winter.

The successor of Judge Baxter, who died at Hot Springs, Ark., recently, will of course be a Democrat. It is believed that Michigan will capture the appointment. It will probably lie between Michigan and Tennessee at any rate, with the chances in favor of this state. The district comprises Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and Michigan. Ohio has two circuit judges now, Kentucky two, Tennessee one and Michigan none. The names mentioned as those from whom a choice will undoubtedly be made, if the appointment comes to Michigan, are William A. Moore, Ashley Pond and William P. Wells, of Detroit; Edwin F. Uhl, of Grand Rapids, and H. F. Severens, of Kalamazoo. It is said that William P. Wells is now leading. In this connection it may be said that Judge Withey, of Grand Rapids, contemplates resigning soon. This will make a vacancy in the district court of the western district of Michigan.

LATER: Senator Jackson of Tennessee was confirmed as Judge Baxter's successor day before yesterday.

Democrats among the Michigan delegation in the house are very outspoken in their views upon the late elections in Michigan. The preponderance of opinion among them is that the administration received a black eye instead of an indorsement. In spite of the fact that the returns here show that in many instances the Democrats made considerable gains, the Democratic members of Congress say they believe that, aside from local issues, the party in the State is knocked "galley west." Col. Eldridge and Comstock are particularly bitter in their comment on the course of the administration and its effect upon the elections. The latter, speaking of the results lately, said: "Unless we throw Cleveland overboard entirely there is not a ghost of a show for us this fall. The people of Michigan are sick of him, and the only hope of the Democratic Congressmen is to repudiate him entirely. Unless we take this course not a Democrat will be returned this fall."

GLADSTONE'S SCHEME.

A Brief Outline of How He Would Have Ireland Governed.

LONDON, April 9.—Mr. Gladstone, in his speech yesterday in the commons, proposed a parliament at Dublin, to be composed of two orders. The first order to consist of 103 members, made up of the the 28 representative Irish peers now sitting in the house of lords, who should sit for life, and of 75 representatives elected by the Irish people, for a term of 10 years. The electors to be occupiers of the value of £25 and upwards; the property qualification of these representaties to be £200 annual value on a capital value of £4,000. The second order would be made up of the 101 Irish members now in the house of commons and 105 elective members, thus making the second order just twice as large as the first. The Irish members would be relieved from attendance at Westminister.

The two orders are to sit and deliberate together, with the right of voting separately on any occasion on the demand of either body. Either order can interpose a veto upon any measure for three years or until dissolution. It is proposed to retain the viceroy, but he would not be a representative of a party nor subject to quit office with an outgoing government. The present religious disability which makes Roman Catholics ineligible to the office of viceroy would be removed.

The new parliament, elected for five years, is to have power over Irish affairs but not over imperial concerns. The Irish customs and excise are to be retained for imperial purposes, but any surplus after paying Ireland's share (one fifteenth) of the imperial expenses is to be handed over to the new parliament.

Judges are to be appointed by the Irish government, the present constabulary are to remain under the present term of service and under their present authority, all excess of their cost over £1,000,000 to be paid out of the imperial exchequor; the members of the civil service are given two years' notice.

All matters relating to the crown, the coinage, the army and navy, foreign and colonial possessions and and trade and navigation are left to the imperial parliament, in which Ireland has no voice, and no rights save the right of addressing the crown.

The Times says that Gladstone's speech is without a parallel in parliamentary annals in its command of dialectrical and rhetorical resources. But, in substance, the measure proposes now to place Ireland in a position like that of Canada—a self-governing province. "Separation is complete and absolute in principle, and the restrictions which it is professed secure the supremacy of the imperial parliament must in practice be worthless, since there is no efficient sanction behind them." The Daily News thinks that the best thing parliament can do is to take Mr. Gladstone's well-considered scheme in hand, lay aside all partisan feeling, and honestly endeavor to perfect it in the interest of Ireland and the empire. The conservative Post calls the proposals crude, and the Telegraph regards the propositions as the most revolutionary ever submitted to a British parliament.

NEW YORK, April 9.—Col. Michael Boland, of Kentucky, who is prominent in the Irish national league of America says: "It was a great day for Gladstone. He takes rank with Lincoln in his proclamation of emancipation. I think Gladstone will be sustained."

Norwood Notes.

N. N. Card has returned and school commenced Monday.

The mill was started on Monday and business will be lively for the balance of the season.

G. V. Nash has bought a lot of C. Marshall and built a house on it which will be occupied by George Eagleton.

HANDSOME TRIBUTES.

A Remembrance to the Fire Department for Valuable Assistance.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Charlevoix Summer Resort held at Kalamazoo last Friday evening the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to convey to the Charlevoix Fire Department our hearty thanks for their very efficient service at the late fire on our resort and that the sum of $50.00 be appropriated to them as an expression of our grateful appreciation.

It was also voted to pay Mr. Charles Kelley $25.00 as an expression of their appreciation of his fidelity during the late fire and to partially express their sympathy for his personal loss.

The Charlevoix Summer Resort has certainly done the handsome thing all around. Let us remember it.

Probate Order.

State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the Probate Court for said county, held at the Probate office, in the Township of South Arm, on the 29th day of March, in the year one thousand, eight hundred and eighty-six; Present, James A. Keat, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Tryphena Parker, deceased. On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Stillman Parker, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this office, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that administration of said estate be granted to the said Stillman Parker, or some other person. Thereupon it is ordered that Monday, the 3d day of May next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the Township of South Arm, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted; And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

Mortgage Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the interest money secured by a mortgage dated the 1st day of September, 1882, and executed by Alfred D. Joles and Sarah E. Joles, his wife, to Jay L. Newberry, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, on the 4th day of September, 1882, in Liber 7 of Mortgages, on page 104, and more than thirty days having elapsed since said default, and said mortgage having been duly assigned by the said Jay L. Newberry to Henry L. Mills by an assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Charlevoix County, Mich., on the 16th day of September, 1882, in Liber 7 of Mortgages, on page 122, and the said mortgage having been further duly assigned by the said Henry L. Mills, to Nelson W. Mills, Henry D. Mills, Hattie Judson, and Mary J. Cushman, by an assignment duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 2d day of December, 1884, in Liber 10 of Mortgages, on page 588, and the said mortgage having been again duly assigned by the said Nelson W. Mills, Henry D. Mills, and Hattie Judson, to Mary J. Cushman, by an assignment recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county, on the 2d day of December, 1884, in Liber 10 of Mortgages, on page 589. The amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty Dollars, principal and interest, and the further sum of Thirty Dollars as an attorney fee stipulated for in said Mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the same, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said Mortgage has become operative. Therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of said power of sale the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is held) in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix county, on the 3d day of July, 1886, at 12 o'clock noon, which said premises are described as follows to-wit: The North Half (½) of the South-East Quarter (¼) of Section Thirty-Two (32) Town Thirty-Three (33) North of Range Five (5) West, of Melrose Township, Charlevoix County, Michigan.

THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

AT THIS TIME OF THE YEAR

PAINTING

BECOMES AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

To every house-holder, and the question arrises What Kind of Paint to buy and where to buy it.

Stockman & Iddings undoubtedly handle a much larger quantity of Paint Supplies than any other house in the County. All goods sold by them are guaranteed to be the BEST in quality, and in PRICE the CHEAPEST.

They offer this year "THE KING," all shades and colors, manufactured and warranted by The Chicago White Lead and Oil Co., SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SOLID PAINTS, in fact others are only imitations.

Also as heretofore Heath & Milligan's BEST Liquid Paints,-Ready Mixed,-well-known and popular.

These Paints have stood the test for years, are well-known to all painters and architects in Charlevoix and vicinity and therefore need no extended notice.

CAUTION.--When you buy paint KNOW which you are buying, READY MIXED which is sold by the gallon, or solid colors, (so called paste paint) which should be sold by the pound, the oil to thin it being sold seperately by the gallon.

IF YOU WANT TO PAINT, CALCIMINE OR DO ANY OTHER SPRING WORK, OR IF YOU WANT A STOVE OF ANY KIND OR ANY OTHER HARDWARE OR BUILDING SUPPLIES, DO NOT FAIL TO GO TO STOCKMAN & IDDINGS' FOR THEM, AND GET THE BEST GOODS AT THE LOWEST PRICES.

Yours for the Improvement of Charlevoix and Charlevoix County,

—Hon. A. Buttars sold nearly $400 worth of the Ritenburg flour at East Jordan and Boyne City last week. This flour continues to gain in public favor.

—Hon. Perry Hannah, wife and daughter, arrived at New York Monday from their European trip, by the steamer Russia, and will arrive at Traverse City to-morrow.

—J. L. Hurd leaves next week for a large line of goods.

—Will Cooper will provide all the rink skates with new rollers.

—It is expected that the Charlevoix rink will open next Saturday.

—Mrs. M. C. Liscomb returned here last week to visit her daughters.

—The Manufacturing Co. have the contract for a new office for Justice McLeod.

—Mrs. A. J. Stroud, of Horton's Bay, was the guest of Mrs. Crouter over Sunday.

—Street Commissioner Suffield is doing excellent service on the crosswalks of the village.

—Mrs. Kate Lamphere, wife of Wint Lamphere, of this place, died Sunday, of typhoid fever.

—Prest. See of the Improvement Association, has re-appointed all the old standing committees with few exceptions.

—James S. Martin has been awarded the contract of attending the bridge. He gets $1.00 for the twenty-four big hours of the day.

—Miss Kittie Orser of Petoskey, came over Thursday and will remain as the guest of her cousin, Miss Maude Loveday until Saturday.

—We are pained to learn of the critical nature of Mr. Geo. Guyles illness. He is at Napierville, Ills., with his family. His mother and brother were telegraphed for last week and are also with him.

—County Clerk Thatcher on Thursday exchanged his farm in Springvale with Mr. George Wrisley, for his residence in this place. It is understood that the genial man will make Charlevoix his home in the near future.

—As will be seen by the official notice elsewhere, Mr. W. H. Harris retires from the firm of H. V. Rifenburg & Co. He will, however, continue as miller. Mr. Rifenburg is now the sole owner of the mill.

—Fred Eaton of Saginaw City has been appointed a cadet at Annapolis. The examination was held at Saginaw City, and there were five applicants. The new cadet is a nephew of J. Milo Eaton, of this village.

—J. S. Smithson of Chicago, one of our most genial summer resorters was in town Thursday. He is highly pleased with his new cottage. Mr. Smithson and family will come to Charlevoix next month to remain the season.

—The Petoskey council re-appointed for the ensuing year the following: Sheriff Pratt, Marshal; Geo. S. Richmond, Superintendent of Water Works; Charles J. Pailthorp, Attorney; D. E. Tripp, Night Police, and appointed Dr. Williams Health officer. The above appointments are Democratic. J. A. C. Rowan, Republican, was elected Chief of the Fire Department.

—R. A. Campbell has leased the Bridge Street House, Charlevoix, and Mr. and Mrs. Campbell and family will remove to that place as soon as navigation opens. Many friends here will wish them great success in their new home and new venture.—Traverse Herald.

—Perhaps it is not generally known that the metallic part of the badges worn by members of the Grand Army of the Republic must be eighty per cent of metal of captured cannon. The large number required is making that kind of ordnance very scarce, and a Grand Army badge is likely, some day to be a cherished relic.

—Manitou county has six school districts—five on Beaver Island and South Manitou. The first school ever taught on the latter Island is now in progress with [illegible] as pedagogue. Three schools are in progress on Beaver Island, and an Indian school, taught by Isaac Wright on High Island. He receives $400 per year from the government.

—Mr. W. H. Cooper, of East Jordan, a brother of R. J. and O. A. Cooper, of this place, last week leased the Charlevoix Skating Rink for the season, and will take possession May 1st. Mr. Cooper was formerly manager of the East Jordan rink, and is a young gentleman who is capable of making the Charlevoix rink a popular place of amusement. We have no doubt of his making a successful venture of it.

—J. M. Metheany who had just returned from a trip to Mackinaw and Petoskey, said to a Grand Rapids Democrat reporter last week: "The weather up there is just delightful, but it appears strange to see the sun shining brightly and the mercury registering 63 degrees above zero, when sleighs are crossing Traverse Bay and the Mackinaw straits on the ice. The resort season is going to be early this year, and I expect we will be carrying car loads of people to the northern resorts by the middle of June. The hotels are getting ready for them."

—Parties who are in the habit of marketing speckled trout and grayling should take warning from the following regarding the matter: Secretary Kellogg, of the Michigan state fish commission, says that under the act of 1883 it is unlawful to sell brook trout or grayling at any season of the year. They cannot be made a marketable fish at all. This act distinctly says: "It shall not be lawful hereafter for any person or persons to catch or capture, by any means whatever, for purpose of sale or shipment, or take, catch or capture and sell or ship any brook trout or grayling from any of the inland waters of this state."

—Rev. J. T. Iddings returns next Tuesday.

—A telephone has been put in at the Smithson cottage.

—L. D. Bartholomew and family will return next week.

—Rev. W. R. Clark will occupy the M. E. pulpit next Sunday.

—Special meetings for instruction are being held by Charlevoix lodge.

—Alex. Stewart has rhubarb plant six inches above ground, clear of the leaf.

—Charles Swallow arrived home from Chicago by propeller Champlain this morning.

—Mr. Matthews left for Detroit Monday. Mrs. Buzzell remains here for some time.

—Capt. Aldrich went to Traverse City Monday. It is expected that the Faxton will make her first trip next Monday.

—D. Sherwood & Co. have just received a fine line of new boots and shoes. Look out for their new announcement next week.

—Richard Cooper met with quite a serious accident Monday noon. In jumping off a wagon load of stone he fell and broke a bone in his right leg just above the ankle. Under Dr. Carlstein's care he is improving though it will be some time before he fully recovers.

—Owosso Times: All the gentlemen named for lieutenant governor are good men, but Hon. Archibald Buttars has only served one term, and he is a manly, able, and efficient presiding officer, as true a republican as stands up, and deserves, and, we doubt not, will be named for the place by a unanimous vote at the forthcoming state convention.

—Mr. Isaac Stauffer, of Hayes, this county, is the inventor and patentee of a broadcast seed-sower which he is introducing into the northern counties. It is carried by the operator by means of a strap over the shoulder, and we see no reason why it is not the best farm implement of its kind yet introduced. It sows 48 feet on a "bout," and does it evenly. It can be adjusted for any kind of seed, and in a new country, where the drill can not be used, it is an implement of great utility. They are sold for $7.00 each.

—John O'Neill, Sen., of Charlevoix, might justly be called the father of the steam-tug fishing industry. Fourteen years ago this summer he built the first tug that was ever used for fishing purposes on the lakes. He and his sons, who are also well-known resident fishermen and steamboat men, were fishing in Green Bay, when it occurred to them that a boat that could go out in any kind of weather to their nets, would be a great idea. They accordingly had the tug Kittie Gaylord built, notwithstanding the prophesies of the other fishermen on that shore who claimed she would be a failure, but after the O'Neills had fished with her successfully for a few months they saw their error, and the next spring saw four steam fish tugs built at Milwaukee. To-day Charlevoix ranks as the most important fishing station on Lake Michigan.

Historical Society.

There will be a special meeting of the Historical Society at the residence of R. W. Kane on Friday evening of this week. Full attendance desired.

The Bridge Street House.

The Bridge Street House has been leased by M. J. Stockman to Mr. Robert A. Campbell of Traverse City. Mr. Campbell takes possession May 1st, and has a one year's lease. Under Mr. Campbell's management the Bridge Street house will no doubt continue to be a popular hostelrie.

Notice to Citizens.

Notice is hereby given that ten days from this date will be given all citizens of the village of Charlevoix to clean up and remove all rubbish and dirt on their premises, and in the alleys and streets adjoining. From and after that time I shall cause it to be done at the expense of owners and occupants, as provided by law.

Charlevoix, Apr. 21 1886. HARRISON BERDAN, Vil. Marshal

The Common Council.

At the last meeting of the Village Council, Captain Harrison Berdan was re-elected Village Marshal, Dr. Preston Health Officer, and A. J. McLeod President pro. tem.

A. J. McLeod was reappointed chief of the Fire Department. The Fire Committee reported unfavorably on the proposition to supply hose for the flouring mill steam pump, because of insufficient water-supply.

The council are doing good in the building and repairing of sidewalks throughout the village.

Upright & Emrey's Dock Extension.

Last week Upright & Emrey effected a ten years' lease, from the Village Council, of the Mason street frontage on Round Lake. They also, for the same period, leased the W. C. Newman and James Inwood frontage adjoining, and will extend their dock along the entire line of those premises, as soon as the timber can be brought down. This will give them control of nearly 250 feet of harbor dock line, which, in connection with Carpenter & Bartholomew's docks, adjoining, will make a continuous dock of nearly 350 feet. At this rapid rate of dock improvement, we shall soon be able to walk from the mouth of the river to the machine shop on the harbor docks.

Marine.

The steamer Friant is expected to arrive to-morrow.

An east wind drove out the ice last Wednesday night.

The tug Fisher left for the Beavers Saturday afternoon.

The schooner Stampede left Sheboygan for Charlevoix Monday night.

The schooner Evening Star, Capt. Raab, arrived in port Sunday morning.

The time-cards of the steamers touching at this port will be found on our fifth page.

The fish tug Wayne Isbell left for the Beavers Thursday morning, being the first boat out.

The schooner Florence Smith, and scows Hercules and Lottie Mason cleared Tuesday morning.

Capt. Wilson will command the schooner Fleetwing instead of Capt. Bennett as stated last week.

The steamer Champlain arrived at 9:30 this morning from Chicago, just two weeks earlier than the first boat last spring.

Hannah, Lay & Co. expect to put the Faxton and Grand Rapids on their routes as early next week as the ice will admit.

The tugs broke the ice in Pine Lake yesterday, and this morning the schooner Evening Star was towed to Dwights Landing to load.

The S. H. Davis & Co.'s fishing tugs Grayling and Fisherman arrived from the north shore Sunday afternoon, to begin the season's business.

The schooner Mocking Bird keeps up her record as the first clearance of the season. She left for Milwaukee laden with ties Monday afternoon.

The steamer Oconto has gone down at the point to which she drifted from Charity island in fourteen feet of water with the water two feet over the main deck.

The tug Wayne Isbell, which left here Thursday noon for Beaver Harbor, did not reach there until Sunday noon, owing to the immense fields of ice off the Island,

Manistee Sentinel: Capt. Zimmerman has been in Detroit the past week negotiating for the purchase of the fine passenger steamer "Gordon," which is expected to run the present season between Manistee and Charlevoix, leaving this city every other day.

The tug Hall has 600 feet of nine inch hawser for wrecking purposes. The Hall is a powerful and beautiful tug, and a credit to any harbor. The Campbell is somewhat smaller than the Hall, but is a first-class tug and can handle anything that wants to come in the creek.

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix, for ports outside the Michigan District, for the week ending yesterday evening:

17—Schr. Lottie Mason, 45 c wood, E. M. Clark to Milwaukee.
19—Schr. Mocking Bird, 3,000 ties, Upright & Emrey to Milwaukee.
19—Schr F. M. Smith, 2,000 posts, Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co. to Milwaukee.
19—Schr Hercules, 2,400 ties, Upright & Emrey to Milwaukee.
[illegible]—Schr. Sea Gem, 2,500 ties, Upright & Emrey to Milwaukee.

The Northwestern Lumberman says: "One of the schooners engaged in the lumber trade of the lakes is the Harriet Ross, an old craft that was in 'Perry's victory' naval engagement on Lake Erie. She is now in dry dock, undergoing repairs. It is claimed that shot have been dug out of some of the old timbers of the vessel, and this is adduced as evidence that she was really in the famous fight of 1813. She is probably like the old man's cart, however, that had been in use a hundred years; it had all been made over new, but the soul of the old cart was still there." The Ross is well known here.

The steamer Lawrence, of the Northern Michigan Line, comes out this spring as good as new. She has received a remarkably thorough rebuild at the Manitowoc ship yard, under the personal supervision of Mr. S. S. Burke, which is a sufficient guarantee as to its completeness. The following is the language of Inspector Tuttle concerning the extent and thoroughness of the rebuild: "The propeller Lawrence has just completed the most thorough rebuild I have ever seen done on a 'canal' propeller or vessel. Thirty-five feet of new keel, entire new stern to forward of the fire hold. New stem and entire new bow; new floor-timbers; new keelsons and deadwoods, all new ceiling, new arches, new deck-beams where needed, new hanging knees on every beam fore and aft, new stanchions, upper stringers, rail and bulwarks, all new gangways, new pawl post, windlass, bits and timber heads, new outside planking from keel to lower wale strake. Hull refastened with [illegible] through bolts from stem to stern (three tons of iron used). Hull and decks caulked all over. Boiler and engines put in best possible repair. General outfit first class in every respect. Has full length upper cabin; no steerage on upper deck." Mr. Burke and Mr. P. J. Klein have bought the interest of the Seymour Brothers in the Lawrence, and are now sole owners. She will run on the same route and time as last year. Capt. Thorpe will continue Master; S. S. Burke, chief engineer and general manager; Fred Burke, Clerk; Mr. Plumstead, steward.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

SATURDAY, April 3.—The Senate was not in session. In the House O'Neill's Labor Arbitration bill was passed by a vote of 195 to 30, with an amendment providing that not over $1,000 shall be paid out of the treasury to defray the expenses of any single arbitration. The Silver Coinage bill was further discussed.

MONDAY, April 5.—In the Senate the time was occupied in discussing the Army bill. In the House the bill granting a pension of eight dollars per month to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war was passed by a vote of 158 to 68. Bills were introduced: By Mr. Henderson, to reduce letter postage to one and a half cents per ounce and the price of postal cards to one-half a cent; by Mr. O'Hara, for the appointment of a committee to investigate the alleged homicides at Carrollton, Miss.; by Mr. O'Neill, to legalize the incorporation of National trades unions; by Mr. Warner, to better secure the stability of the paper currency; by Mr. Dingley, requesting the President to furnish the House with any information in his possession relative to the exclusion of American fishing vessels from Canadian ports.

TUESDAY, April 6.—Consideration of the Army bill was resumed in the Senate. Mr. Blair reported favorably the Labor Arbitration bill recently passed by the House; also a memorial from the Mormon women of Utah, complaining that the Edmunds law inflicted upon the women unprecedented indignities and immeasurable sorrow. In the House bills were introduced: By Mr. Miller, for the issue of small bills for circulation; by Mr. Steele, to increase the efficiency of the army; by Mr. Springer, to prohibit the passage of local and special laws in the Territories of the United States. The Post-office Appropriation bill ($54,326,588) was passed.

A Collision Between Officers and Strikers at Fort Worth, Tex., in Which Two Men Are Killed and Several Badly Wounded—Mr. Hoxie Snubs the Executive Board of the Knights—The Strike Ordered to Be Continued—Passage of the Arbitration Bill by the House.

FORT WORTH, TEX., April 5.—The first tragedy to result from the strike on the Texas & Pacific occurred Saturday afternoon when a group of strikers, lying in ambush a short distance south of the city, fired on a portion of the sheriff's posse, fatally wounding Officers Townsend and Sneed and sending a bullet through the thighs of Policeman Fulford. One of the strikers, Frank Pierce, a switchman, was killed, and Tom Neese, another, was shot in the groin. Two other strikers are believed to have been wounded. Officer Townsend died at 5:30 Sunday afternoon and Officer Sneed is now lying at the point of death.

A Mob of Strikers Visit the Railway Yards and Force Workmen to Quit Their Posts—Four Determined Armed Men Finally Put a Stop to Their Further Progress—Talks with Messrs. Powderly and Gould.

ST. LOUIS, April 8.—Matters in East St. Louis have taken a very serious turn, and about noon yesterday the wildest excitement prevailed there. A mob of strikers was formed in the central portion of the city and proceeded at once down into the freight yards on the island, where they terrorized all the men employed there and drove them from work. The mob was organized by several of the recognized leaders for a determined move to compel a cessation of work. As the crowd passed in silence down Fourth street to Missouri avenue every striker seen was ordered to fall in. None refused, and when the mob reached the relay depot fully five hundred men were in line.

Soon the Burlington freight house was reached, and it was seen that a number of special deputy sheriffs with badges had taken their places on the platform. The deputies were overpowered by the mob, [illegible]

THE ANTI-CHINESE LAW.

Some Serious Defects in the Measure Pointed Out by the President in a Special Message.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—The Senate received from the President yesterday a long message transmitting correspondence between the Secretary of State and the Chinese Minister with regard to the treaty rights of Chinese subjects other than laborers, "to go and come of their own free will and accord." The President says that cases of individual hardship beyond the power of the Executive to remedy have occurred in the application of the Chinese acts, which are due to the ambiguous and defective provisions of the acts of Congress. The hardship has in some cases been remedied by the courts, but in others, where the phraseology has appeared to be conclusive against any discretion on the part of the officers, Chinese persons expressly entitled to free admission under the treaty have been refused a landing and been sent back to the country whence they came without being afforded an opportunity to show their rights.

FRIGHTFUL DISASTER.

A Passenger Train in Massachusetts Goes Over a Cliff Two Hundred Feet High—Ten Bodies Recovered from the Wreck, and Many More Believed to Be Dead—The Number of Wounded Unknown.

GREENFIELD, Mass., April 8.—A terrible disaster occurred on the Fitchburg railroad last night midway between Bardwell's Ferry and West Deerfield station, the east-bound passenger train due at Greenfield at 6:05 o'clock p. m. going over an embankment 200 feet high. Ten bodies have already been taken out of the ruins, and it is not known how many others were killed.

The train was the eastern express, and consisted of a baggage-car, a smoker, a sleeping-car, mail car and two ordinary passenger cars. It was in charge of Conductor Foster, with Herbert Littlejohn as engineer. The point where the accident occurred is the most dangerous on the road, as the track runs on the edge of an embankment 200 feet above Deerfield river. The bank is steep and is covered with huge bowlders and masses of rock. When the train arrived at this point the track commenced to [illegible]

THE THREE SONS.

I have a son, a little son, a boy just five years old,
With eyes of thoughtful earnestness and mind of gentle mold;
They tell me that unusual grace in all his ways appears,
That my boy is grave and wise of heart beyond his childish years.
I cannot say how this may be; I know his face is fair,
And yet his chiefest comeliness is his sweet and serious air.
I know his heart is kind and fond; I know he loveth me,
But loveth yet his mother more with grateful fervency.
But that which others most admire is the thought that fills his mind,
The food for grave, inquiring speech he every where doth find.
Strange questions doth he ask of me when we together walk—
He scarcely thinks as children think, nor talks as children talk;
Nor cares he much for childish sports, dotes not on bat or ball,
But looks on manhood's works and ways, [illegible]

the conclusion that Sammy, in spite of being a trustworthy servant and the factotum of the establishment, was the prime mover in the disturbance of our peace and comfort. I may be doing him an injustice, but he must, I think, have in some way become aware of the impending changes, and have taken the means I am about to narrate to get rid of a servant whose footing in the house was of longer standing than his own.

This, however, is only conjecture, as we never succeeded in clearing up the mystery.

One hot evening we were seated at table, the party consisting of my sister, her husband, two young men—his cousins—and myself. The servants had left the room for one of the courses, when, instead of returning, we heard a hubbub of mingled voices, cries of terror, a stampede of naked feet pattering along the tiled veranda, and while we were lost in amazement as to what the cause of the sudden disturbance might be, in rushed one of them, Djumun by name, his face that ashen hue which Indians assume when pale, his very turban [illegible] ises at the witching hour of midnight I opened my window and deposited it outside.

The police left next morning, as they said it was quite useless to remain. G. and his cousins had to be in Port Louis daily from ten in the morning till five o'clock, so my sister and I were left to face the terrors, which, however, did not look half so great by day as by night. My sister would not ask a question, nor listen when the servants volunteered details, but my curiosity, which is considerable, overcame my terror, and I kept going backward and forward to the servants' quarters to mark the progress of affairs so as to report them faithfully to G. in the evening.

I discovered that the principal victims of the missiles were the cook's two sons, bright little fellows of eight and ten years of age. Wherever they were the stones fell thickest—in the avenue, among the trees, in their own hut, or in the detached kitchen. On mentioning this circumstance to my brother he immediately sent for Manuel, told him to punish his children at once, and make them understand that he would have no [illegible]

Dark though it was, the instant he and his family turned from the highroad into the avenue the stones rattled round them in the path.

Next morning, as I sat in the storeroom, giving out rice, flour, curry—all the articles necessary for the day's consumption, I began to Manuel thus:

"Cook, I am very sorry indeed to think that, after being a trusted servant here for nine years, you should come home in such a state as you were in last night. I can assure you that, if it ever happens again, your master will not pass it over, but you will have to go."

Manuel, who, like most Madrassees, spoke a little broken English, replied:

"What me do, Missy? Me no eat; me children wife mis'rable; dey no eat, no sleep, no nuting. There is nothing to do but get drunk."

THE NEGRO SLAUGHTER.

Indiana Condemns an Outrage Upon the Colored Citizens of Mississippi and Upholds the Courts.

The papers and people of Indiana would like to speak out in condemnation of the slaughter of thirteen men (negroes) in a court-room at Carrollton, Miss. If the account of the killing be true, these men were shot down like so many dogs by a band of armed men who went to the court-house for that purpose, and who proceeded to their bloody work without delay and with such effect that after a few minutes ten were dead and three mortally wounded. The papers and people of this State would like to enter protest against such atrocities, but are measurably restrained by the fact that Indiana has been similarly disgraced, though not by any thing so fearfully bold and murderous. The lynching of the Archer gang, the latest outrage of this kind, is fresh in the public mind, and has put such shame upon the people of Indiana [illegible]

Knights of Labor.

Here is an editorial from the N. Y. Independent which has the merit of vigor, to say the least:

Iron was "a bigger man" that Powderly. How he swelled it and mouthed it only a week ago! His huge hand clutched four states, and Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, writhed between his fingers. There stood the colossus straddling the Mississippi, with his hand and its dangling burden reaching westward, and his mouth puffed out eastward, bellowing fire and slaughter. He would show the country what the Knights of Labor are. He would command a strike on every railroad in the United States and Canada. Nay, he would order out every knight in every shop of every sort of manufacture. No wheel should move; no spindle should whirl; no furnace should burn; creation should stop that the world might know that Irons was king.

But Irons was not king. King Powderly reigns. Irons is a mouthing, mischievous braggart. Powderly is a clear headed, sensible, and decent a ruler as ever sat on a throne. So he sent out from Shushan, the palace, letters by posts to all his hundred and twenty-seven provinces, telling his princes that they must rule decently, and not oppress the people. Then he told Irons and his No. 101 that they must attend to their own business, and not disturb the country. He reached across half the continent, and grabbed Iron's hand, and loosened his fingers, and the four states dropped free. The trains ran again, travel was resumed, peace was restored, the country breathed free once more; and when some one asked "Where is Irons?" it was reported that he had slipped away, Sunday night, to Marshall, Texas.

It is clear that there are two elements in the organization of the Knights of Labor. The blatherskite element wants trouble. They are spoiling for a fight. The decent element wants no fight. It wants work at fair wages, and peace. It does not seek to proclaim, but to prevent, strikes. It only asks to have difference between employers and employees settled by arbitration. In short, in seeking the protection of the laborer it seeks also the protection of the public. It augurs well for the peace of the country that Messrs. Powderly and Arthur belong to this party, and that Mr. Irons has fled to Texas.

It is alleged by the political gossips that Secretary Whitney, the son-in-law of the Standard Oil Company, is a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1888, and that he is supported by Samuel J. Tilden.

Congressman Blount of Georgia, says he believes congress will adjourn in about 90 days. "I believe," he said, talking of the work of the session, "that we are through now with silver and labor legislation for this congress. The tariff and inter state commerce bills are the only measures that are liable to consume any more time, and I think the former stands a pretty good show of being passed by the Forty-ninth congress, as there are propositions in it which commend themselves favorably to a majority. The appropriation committee in the house has been backward in reporting some of the bills referred to it, and naturally the naval committee has been forced to adopt the same course on account of the agitation regarding the improvement of the navy. Still I do not see any necessity for the session of congress to be prolonged beyond the middle of July, at the farthest."

The Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader states that a friend of ex-President Arthur, who knows whereof he speaks, informs him that the ex-President is in a much worse condition physically than dispatches from New York indicate. This gentlemen says: "There is no doubt at all that he has Bright's disease, and his end is a matter of only a very little time. He may rally a little, but we do not credit the reports that he will be able to take a trip to Europe or anything of that sort. You know he overworked himself in the White House. He kept very late hours, usually retiring long after midnight, and was irregular about his meals, apparently caring nothing about his health in his desire to keep up with the work of his office and entertain his friends after night. Such a life would not fail to have its effects upon the strongest constitution, and although Gen. Arthur entered the White House in an almost perfect physical condition, he passed many hours of suffering before he left it. I cannot regard his recovery with anything but a feeling of doubt."

Mr. Moffatt's bill for the erection of a light house at Seul Choix point, upper peninsula, 100 miles due north of Traverse City, has passed the house. The bill to establish a life saving station at South Manitou island has also passed the house.

D. J. Palmer, son of A. S. Palmer of Milford, had both legs broken below the knees on the 8th inst., while skidding logs near Boyne City. After extricating himself he crawled several rods towards home before being found. His case is a critical one.

Richard Knight of Banks, has grown from 20 to 30 acres of seed peas each year for eight years. This year he sows 76 bushels of seed and says it pays him much the best of any crop he grows, as he gets his money as early in the season as he can thresh the peas.

The annual salaries of the village officers at Petoskey are established as follows: Marshal, $320; Supt. Water Works, $40 per month; Clerk, $100; Attorney $75; Health Officer, $50; Night Watch, $1.50 per night; Street Commissioner, $1.25 per day; Saloon keepers bonds are fixed at $4000; Druggists, $2,000; Marshall, $4,000; Supt. Water Works, $1,000.

Land commissioner Sparks has decided that 4,760 acres of swamp land on the Fort Mackinac military reservation, which had been patented by the state of Michigan under the swamp land act, does not belong to the state, government reservations not being subject to state patents. Steps will be taken to recover the lands, which will be taken to recover the lands, which will be used for the improvement of the national park.

Mr. Mulliken, superintendent of the C. & W. M. road, tells a Grand Rapids reporter that his company will survey, but probably not build, the Traverse City extension this season. We would be glad if this road could be completed through to this place this year, but if this cannot be done, the survey being finished this year and the route having practically been decided upon, insures an early start next spring and a quick building of the line.—Herald.

A correspondent from Manitou Island says: Again the lower portions of the Island are inundated by water to such an extent that it makes it very inconvenient, moving from one place to another, caused by the melting snow during the warm weather which we had in the month of March. This overflowing of the flats of the Island occurs every spring to a greater or less extent, according to the amount of snow lying on the ground when spring comes. Some of the farmers here are very short for feed and cattle and other stock are suffering in consequence.

Now that our hard timber is becoming valuable, the land in our northern counties is gathered in by speculators. Those who intend to become actual settlers should rustle around and secure homes before it is too late. With vast tracts of our pine lands in the hands of speculators who have stripped the country of its original millions of feet of pine, the mine of wealth in our vast hardwood forests ought not to go into the pockets of wealthy outsiders who care nothing for the future of the Grand Traverse Region or its hardy settlers.—Kalkaska Leader.

THE best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, totter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

WE should economize at all times, but more especially when times are close. Observe the purchases of your thrifty neighbors. More substantial benefits can be obtained from a fifty cent bottle of Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure than a dollar bottle of any other cough remedy. It is a prompt, safe and pleasant cure for all throat and lung troubles. Sold and endorsed by Druggists.

Miraculous Escape.

W. W. Reed, druggist, of Winchester, Ind., writes: "One of my customers, Mrs. Louisa Pike, Bartonia, Randolph Co., Ind., was a long sufferer with Consumption, and was given up to die by her physicians. She heard of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and began buying it of me. In six months' time she walked to this city, a distance of six miles, and is now so much improved she has quit using it. She feels she owes her life to it." Free Trial Bottles at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

CAREFUL attention to diet is the best guard against disease. It is a fact which all should know, that over-eating not only corrupts the blood but destroys nerve force, and induces dyspepsia, jaundice, bad breath, piles, pimples, low spirits, headache, ague, malaria, and all stomach and liver troubles. Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic quickly cures the above diseases. Can be taken by the most delicate. Price fifty cents, of Druggists.

ONLY BACHELORS WANTED.

A Married Man's Vain Search for a Children's Paradise.

"Do you happen to know of a quiet, comfortable, cozy little place in the country where a man with a family can obtain fresh butter and new-laid eggs and cream and green grass for the children to run upon and—and all that sort of thing, at a price that would come within reach of a moderate income, not too far from the city?"

"How far did you say the income was from the city?" inquired the writer, somewhat confused.

"I want to live in the country," continued the first speaker "where my children can get fresh air from the hills, where they can climb rocks and fences and trees and tear their clothes and go to bed at night robustly tired, and get up in the morning robustly refreshed; where they can gather the flowers that bloom in the spring, and—"

"Bother the flowers that bloom in the spring! Do you happen to know what month it is?"

"February, the latter part of February, and the man who expects to luxuriate in a quiet, comfortable little place in the country during the coming summer has got to begin to look about him or the pastoral paradises will all be gobbled up."

"Let me talk to you a minute," said the writer. "Last year we—my wife and I—thought we would go into the country for the summer. My wife, my foolish, ignorant wife, said it would be so nice for the children, and as there were four of them and only one of myself the majority ruled, and we decided to go. And I was to look up a place. I had looked up a place in the city in the fall, and my blood still boiled at the recollection of the slights and humiliations heaped upon me during that week of 'looking up' whenever a prospective landlady discovered that three children filled out the list of encumbrances in the Jenkins household besides my wife. A wife was bad enough in the estimation of most of them. What a city boarding-house keeper wants is a bachelor who needs a whole floor and will pay for it the price of the rooms and board for six people and is never home to lunch and goes away every Sunday, and then she will stop up two burners of the three-armed chandelier in his room. But this is digression. There were only three children in the fall, and there were four in the spring, and I was glad the looking-up process was to be conducted in the suburbs. I took a list of all the eligible (?) places within a radius of twenty miles from town and began. I tried the farm-house racket first. Those 'ads' read well: 'Wide, cool porches, plenty of shade, fresh eggs, chickens, cream, etc.' Such places, I thought, will please other than the children among the Jenkinses. But I never could find them—the places, I mean. They must have moved the first of May. I did not find one that bore out to a limited extent the rosy visions engendered by the newspaper notice, but the farmer had a very cross dog, a great big ugly-looking bull and mastiff mongrel, and when I told him I was afraid of that dog with the children he smiled rather peculiarly I thought, and afterward said he couldn't part with the dog and couldn't chain him up because he had never found a chain strong enough to hold him. So I decided not to go there.

"Then I skipped farm-houses and tackled 'villas,' and found them as weak a lot as the gingerbread gable railings which decorated them. Everything was weak about them but the prices, and those were high enough. Some were 'genteel' in addition to their weakness, and when I struck one of those I quoted from the litany, 'Good Lord deliver us!' and crossed the street.

"I spent a fortnight going about, off and on, and got pretty tired of it; but at last I came across a very pleasant looking place in a pretty village, only eleven miles out of the city. The yard was the attractive part—a real country yard, with old shade-trees and clean grass, and the scent of the apple blossoms coming in on every breeze from the orchard beyond. And I liked the place, although the rooms were low and squatty and the mistress of the manse just the opposite, tall and scraggly, and I overlooked much for that yard for the children. But when I mentioned them my prospective landlady stiffened and asked in a Polar sea-tone:

"'How many?'

"'Four,' I replied, so promptly that she jumped back a little, and then she began to remark:

"'She had occasionally taken one, but four she couldn't think of, particularly with two of 'em boys: they would track mud, and—'

"'Yes,' I shouted, interrupting her, 'and trample the grass and chase the chickens and try to milk the cow and probably get kicked for their pains and whistle and shout and litter the house with angleworms for bait and eat bread and butter three times a day, to say nothing of between meals, and that is precisely what I want them to do and what I pay for. Do you suppose, madam,' I went on, dropping my voice suddenly, 'do you suppose that my wife and I would endure life for one week in these undersized, stuffy apartments of yours or sleep the second night on such lumping husk mattrasses as your beds if it were not for the sake of the same four children whose existence you deplore? Do you imagine it is for your society and the privilege of fighting mosquitoes and taking baths in a teacup of water and using 10 by 12 inch towels and eating chuck beef and rump steak that we come out to a place like this for a summer?'"

"And what did madame say?"

"She said she was very sorry, but she couldn't take the children, and to be sure and fasten the gate as I went out."

"Well," said the gentleman, as he turned to go, "if you happen to hear of a quiet, comfortable, cozy little place in the country such as I want let me know."—N. Y. Times.

Gen. J. S. Casement of Painesville, O., speaking of John T. Raymond a few days ago, said: "I haven't seen Raymond since he brought out 'Wolfert's Roost,' and thereby hangs a tale. I ran into Kirkpatrick's one afternoon to get my watch fixed. Raymond was there. He had an enormous diamond in his hand which he was examining. Then he looked at some watches. He bantered me to match coins with him for a watch. I didn't take hold of his proposition readily, and he began to rub it in on me about the west being a place where the men talked loud but risked as little as possible. He rather got my dander up, and I agreed to match him for a watch as he proposed. He won, and selected a $200 watch, for which I drew my check. Two or three nights after that he sent me a box and I went to see him in 'Wolfert's Roost.' It was not [illegible]. Between the acts he came around to the box and wanted to match [illegible] with me, to see, he said, if he could make the price of the box off me."

FREEDOM FOR ERIN.

Gladstone Introduces in the House of Commons His Scheme for Irish Home Rule—A Dual Parliament, to Be Established at Dublin—The Viceroy's Office to Be Continued—The Constabulary to Remain the Same—The Power to Impose Taxes to Be Vested in the Local Legislature—The Empire's Local Unity to Be Preserved—Liberty in Religion Provided for—Parnell Partially Indorses the Plan.

[illegible]

composed of occupiers of the value of £25 and upward, and the property qualification of these representatives would be £200 annual value on a capital value of £4,000. The lower house would consist of 206 members, of whom the 103 Irish members in the present House of Commons should form a part. The duration of the Parliament should not exceed five years.

In order to maintain the fiscal union of the empire the bill gave the Imperial Government authority to levy custom duties and such excise duties as were immediately connected with the customs. The proceeds of the customs and excise should be held for the benefit of Ireland and for the discharge of the obligations of Ireland, and the balance should be paid into the Irish legislative body. The general power of taxation over and above those particular duties should pass into the hands of the Irish Legislature. Everything which related to the Crown or to the defense, as the army and the navy and foreign and colonial relations, would be withdrawn from the cognizance of the Legislature. It would not have the power to establish or endow any particular religion and it would have no control over the currency. The subjects of post offices and quarantine, etc., would be left to the judgment of Parliament.

It was proposed to retain the Viceroy, but he would not be the representative of a party or quit office with an outgoing Government. The Queen would be empowered to delegate to him any prerogatives she now enjoyed or would enjoy. The religious disability now existing, which makes Roman Catholics ineligible to the office, would be removed. In future the judges would be appointed by the Irish Government, be paid out of the consolidated fund, and be removable only on the joint address of the two orders. The constabulary would remain under the present terms of service and under their present authority. The Government had no desire to exempt the peace of Ireland. In reference to its final position—from the ultimate control of the Irish legislative body. With respect to the civil service the Government did not think their case was the same as that of the constabulary, and the transfer of the civil service to the legislative body would effect a great economy. The proportion of the Imperial burdens which he had to propose that Ireland should bear was as one to fourteen. He thought that the new Irish Parliament ought to start with a balance to its credit, but the only fund that it would have, if left alone, would be the solidary £20,000 from the Irish Church fund. He knew no way of providing the necessary [illegible]

VOTED DOWN.

The Hard-Money Men Defeat the Free-Coinage Bill in the House by a Vote of 163 to 126—The Affirmative Vote in Detail.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—In the House yesterday Mr. James, of New York, called up the Silver bill. Messrs. Bland, of South Carolina, Little, of Ohio, Hiscock and Hewitt, of New York, spoke in opposition to the bill, while Messrs. Tillman, of South Carolina, McKenna, of California, and Brown, of Pennsylvania, favored its adoption. Mr. Bland, of Missouri, obtained unanimous consent to withdraw his motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. James, of New York, took the floor and yielded to Mr. Hibble, of South Carolina, to offer an amendment providing that unless in the meantime through the concurrent action of the nations of Europe with the United States, silver be remonetized to July 1, 1889, then and thereafter so much of the act of February 28, 1878, as authorized and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver bullion and cause the same to be coined shall be suspended until further action by Congress. The amendment was defeated—yeas, 81; nays, 201.

The question then recurred to the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and it was decided in the negative by a vote of 126 to 163. The affirmative vote in detail is as follows:

Anderson, Ballentine, Barksdale, Barnes, Barry, Bennett, Bland, Brady, Breckinridge (Ark.), Bragg, Burnes, Bynum, Cabell, Caldwell, Candler, Carleton, Clardy, Clements, Cobb, Comstock, Cowles, Crisp, Croxton, Culberson, Curtin, Daniel, Dawson, Dockery, Dunn, Eldredge, Ellsberry, Ford, Forney, Frederick, Funston, Glass, Gould, Green (N. Reports to the State Board of Health by sixty-one observers in different parts of the State, for the week ended March 27, indicated that inflammation of the kidneys, pneumonia, intermittent fever, rheumatism and neuralgia increased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at fifteen places, scarlet fever at fourteen, typhoid fever at three and measles at seven places.

T. D. Stimson, of Muskegon, has sold to the West Michigan Lumber Company a tract of pine land for $300,000.

An attempt to blow up the Salvation army barracks at Charlotte, Eaton County, was made the other evening. Dynamite had been placed under the flooring, and at about ten o'clock the report was heard throughout the city. The flooring was completely demolished and the interior of the building badly shattered. The meeting had closed about fifteen minutes before the explosion occurred. Great excitement prevailed throughout the city.

A mass of copper weighing twenty-five hundred pounds has been found in the Conglomerate mine, upper peninsula.

A cold-blooded murder was committed at Bay City at ten o'clock the other night, in which Ramsey Gregory, the nineteen-year-old son of John Gregory, a prominent builder, was shot down in front of his own house. The young man was returning home when he discovered a man carrying a harness and robes that had been stolen from his father's barn. He accosted the thief, and after a brief struggle was shot through the heart. The murderer escaped.

Thirteenth Discourse of the Series on "The Marriage Ring."

The Trials of Modern Housekeeping—The Weight of Responsibility Attending Forced Economy and the Pangs of Non-Appreciation.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, having returned from his Western trip, occupied the pulpit of the Brooklyn Tabernacle for the delivery of his thirteenth discourse of the "Marriage Ring" series, the subject of which was "The Trials of Housekeeping," and the text:

Lord, dost Thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her, therefore, that she help me.—Luke x, 40.

Yonder is a beautiful village homestead. The man of the house is dead, and his widow is taking care of the premises. This is the widow Martha of Bethany. Yes, I will show you also the pet of the household. This is Mary, the younger sister, with a book under her arm, and her face having no appearance of anxiety and perturbation. Company has come. Christ stands outside the door, and, of course, there is a good deal of excitement inside the door. The disarranged furniture is hastily put aside, and the hair is brushed back, and the dresses are adjusted as well as in so short a time Mary and Martha can attend to these matters. They did not keep Christ standing at the door until they were newly appareled or until they had elaborately arranged their tresses, then coming out with their affected surprise as though they had not heard the two or three previous knockings, saying: "Why, is that you?" No. They were ladies, and were always presentable, although they may not have [illegible] terrated, and what if some piece of silver be gone, or some favorite chalice be cracked, or the roof leak, or the plumbing fail, or any one of a thousand things occur—you must be ready. Spring weather comes, and there must be a revolution in the family wardrobe; or autumn comes, and you must shut out the northern blast; but what if the moth has preceded you to the chest; what if, during the year, the children have outgrown the apparel of last year; what if the fashions have changed. Your house must be an apothecary's shop; it must be a dispensary; there must be medicines for all sorts of ailments—something to loosen the croup—something to cool the burn—something to poultice the inflammation—something to silence the jumping tooth—something to soothe the earache. You must be in half a dozen places at the same time, or you must attempt to be. If under all the wear and tear of life, Martha makes an impatient rush upon the library or drawing room, be patient, be lenient. O! woman, though I may fail to stir up an appreciation in the souls of others in regard to your household toils, let me assure you, from the kindness with which Jesus Christ met Martha, that he appreciates all your work from garret to cellar; and that the God of Deborah, and Hannah, and Abigail, and grandmother Lois, and Elizabeth Lois, and Elizabeth Frey, and Hannah More is the God of the housekeeper. Jesus was never married that he might be the especial friend and confidante of a whole world of troubled womanhood. I blunder; Christ was married. The Bible says that the Church is the Lamb's wife, and that makes me know that all Christian women have a right to go to Christ and tell him of their annoyances and troubles, since by his oath of conjugal fidelity he is sworn to sympathize. George Herbert, the Christian poet, wrote two or three verses on this subject:

The servant by this clause [illegible]

vience: "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith."

How great are the responsibilities of housekeepers. Sometimes an indigestible article of food, by its effect upon a commander or king, has defeated an army or overthrown an empire. Housekeepers, by the food they provide, by the couches they spread, by the books they introduce, by the influences they bring around their home, are deciding the physical, intellectual, moral, eternal destiny of the race. You say your life is one of sacrifice. I know it. But, my sisters, that is the only life worth living. That was Florence Nightingale's life; that was Payson's life; that was Christ's life. We admire it in others, but how very hard it is for us to cultivate ourselves. When in this city young Doctor Hutchinson, having spent a whole night in a diphtheritic room for the relief of a patient, became saturated with the poison and died, we all felt as if we would like to put garlands on his grave; everybody appreciates that. When in the burning hotel at St. Louis, a young man on the fifth story broke open the door of the room where his mother was sleeping, and plunged in amid smoke and fire, crying: "Mother! where are you?" and never came out, our hearts applauded that young man. But how few of us have the Christ-like spirit—a willingness to suffer for others. A rough teacher in a school called upon a poor, half-starved lad, who had offended against the laws of the school, and said:

"Take off your coat directly, sir."

The boy refused to take it off. Whereupon the teacher said again:

"Take off your coat, sir," as he swung the whip through the air. The boy refused. It was not because he was afraid of the lash—he was used to that at home—but it was from shame; he had no under-garment, and as at the third command he pulled slowly off his coat [illegible]

There Are Yet Plenty of Victims for the Swindlers' Game.

[N. Y. Times.]

When Texan James T. Holland told their amble Theodore Davis, upon the stand, in the trial of the former for slaying the brother of the latter, told in detail how the sawdust game was operated, many persons jumped to a natural conclusion that the game was thoroughly exposed, and that the same persons could never again be swindled by it. The result proves that it is not only dreams that go by contraries. William Hoey, superintendent of the Adams Express Company, said recently that the evidence in his possession led him to believe that the game was being more extensively carried on now than ever before. It is customary with the dupes of the swindlers to lay the blame of the fraud on the express company, on the ground that the exchange of a bag full of paper or sawdust for the bag full of money is made after the goods are in the hands of the company. Mr. Hoey said that since the Holland trial the number of letters of complaint had been more than usually numerous.

One man living in Washington, O., wrote about a bag shipped to him from this city to Columbus. He desired to know whether the shipper, after consigning it to the express company's care, had taken it out again. Mr. Hoey wrote to him that this was an impossibility. No person, after putting any package in the hands of the company, could get it again. "We shrewdly expect," he wrote, "that your 'green goods' were exchanged before the bag reached us." Mr. Hoey stated to the Times representative that the law held that goods, after being placed in the hands of public carriers, belonged to the consignee and must be delivered to him. The Adams Express Company had once returned goods to the shipper, and a suit had arisen therefrom [illegible]

BETTER THAN A GOLDEN LEG.

"Miss Kilmansegg and her golden leg," will never be forgotten so long as the genius of Thomas Hood, with all its [illegible] and tender pathos, is remembered, but it is doubtful if any one will ever envy the heroine of that poem her unique limb, which brought with it so many misfortunes. In this prosaic age a good strong leg of flesh, bone and muscle, is much to be preferred whether its possessor be a professional pedestrian, or a solid unassuming citizen.

It is to this last class that Mr. M. P. Schrock, of 612 West Lake street, Chicago, belongs. Mr. Schrock is a well known dry goods merchant, and counts himself fortunate in having a pair of good strong legs. For one of his legs he has a peculiar regard, as he came near losing it through rheumatism. Athlophoros saved it for him however, and for that invaluable remedy he now cherishes an almost equal regard. The story is well told by Mr. Schrock in his own words:

"During the Spring of 1884 I was stricken with rheumatism in its very worst form, and was confined to my bed entirely helpless for about four weeks. My leg pained me so intensely that I could not let it rest on the bed without some support. So I had a pulley attached from the ceiling and to that a sling was fastened. I could rest my leg in this, changing the height, and in that manner I managed to obtain some little relief. During the four weeks I lay in bed I tried many remedies without avail. Finally I made a change and employed physicians. They tried their very best to give me relief, but could not. Instead of getting better, I was growing worse.

"My doctor finally decided that it would be necessary to make an incision in my thigh, and if there was not a marked improvement in my condition from that operation that amputation of my leg would be required. This, as you may well imagine, discouraged and distressed me beyond measure. About this time my wife noticed in a Richmond (Ind.) paper, for which we subscribe, the name of a personal friend who had been cured by the use of Athlophoros. She called my attention to it, and I said at once, 'Get a bottle and try it.' She bought a bottle, the doctor was discharged and we began using it immediately. I experienced great relief in the first few doses. In two days after I began with the medicine, I was in my store attending to my business, and I have not been troubled with rheumatism since."

"How much Athlophoros did you use for this remarkable cure, Mr. Schrock?"

"About one and a third bottles. The remaining two-thirds of a bottle is still unused at my house."

"Don't you think it was a very quick cure for so bad a case?" was asked.

"I certainly think it not only quick," answered Mr. Schrock, "but wonderful, and I feel that I can not say too much for Athlophoros. I never let an opportunity pass when I can recommend it, as it surely did everything for me."

Mr. Schrock is now in the best of health, and considers himself a living example of what Athlophoros can do for those whom rheumatism has brought even to death's door.

If you can not get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS CO., 112 Wall Street, New York.

"Yes! I shall break the engagement. [illegible] I'll tell him. I do hate to break it off, for in all other respects he's quite too charming." Of course, it cured his catarrh.

It is not considered necessary in society to return a bill-collector's call.—Chicago Tribune.

"Delays Are Dangerous."

If you are pale, emaciated, have a hacking cough, with night-sweats, spitting of blood and shortness of breath, you have no time to lose. Do not hesitate too long—'till you are past cure; for, taken in its early stages, consumption can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," as thousands can testify. By druggists.

We suppose a firm of proof readers could be properly called "The house of correction."

Mrs. Green's Funeral.

Although the funeral services of Mrs. Green were held at the family residence, on Friday, and the weather threatening, the attendance was large, the rooms, grounds, and even the sidewalk in front, were crowded with those who knew and respected the deceased in life. The services were brief but touching. Rev. Mr. Clark read a chapter of consolation from the Bible and uttered a prayer, after which Rev. Mr. Van Auken reviewed the life of the deceased, paying a beautiful tribute to her character and life-work in home, church and society. A quartet sang three familiar hymns during the service. By request of Major Green, their veteran commander, Baxter Post, G. A. R., took charge, comrades Atchison, Berdan, Carlstein, Nettleton, Carpenter, and Byron See acting as bearers, the Post forming the escort. Aside from the immediate family of the deceased, Mrs. Wilbur Buzzell, of Indiana, and Mr. Mathews, of Detroit, sister and brother, were the only relatives present. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. The school children placed a cross on either side of the casket; Mr. Mathews brought from Detroit a beautiful tribute of flowers, and several friends and neighbors showed their love and respect in a like manner. The casket was of oak, covered with black broadcloth, and beautifully trimmed and mounted, while the hands of loving friends trimmed and lined the grave with evergreens.

Baxter Post on the Death of Mrs. E. H. Green.

The following resolutions were adopted at an informal meeting held after the burial of Mrs. E. H. Green, April 16, 1886:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the supreme Commander of the Universe to bereave our comrade and commander E. H. Green of his beloved and cherished companion in life; his children of a tender and loving mother, and the community of a kind neighbor and exemplary Christian. Therefore

Resolved, That we as comrades of Baxter Post extend our most heartfelt sympathy and condolence to our beloved commander and his children, and to the sisters and brothers, in this their sad bereavement. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed in the hands of the afflicted family, and published in the papers of the village.

Resolutions of the M. E. Ladies' Society.

At a meeting of the M. E. Ladies' Society held at the residence of Mrs. M. J. Stockman April 20th, 1886, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, One of those endearing ties formed by the association of many years of active church work has been severed and our hearts brought to grief by the death of our sister, Mrs. Luna Green, who left the church militant and joined the church triumphant April 14th, and recognizing the fact that her services were of great value to the church, inasmuch as her life was one of loyalty to Methodism, and true devotion to all her interests, and that her voice will no longer be heard in our councils; therefore, in token of the very great loss we have sustained in the death of our sister, and our heartfelt sympathy for the grief stricken husband and motherless children, the brothers and sisters, be it

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory of our departed sister for the many noble qualities of mind and heart, and pray that her example of piety and rare generosity, fidelity to Christ, and love for the church, may tend to lead us nearer to the Master, and to a more faithful performance of duty and usefulness.

Resolved, That while we deeply sympathize with the family of the deceased, and mourn her loss, which to them is grievous to be borne, we confidently direct them in their sorrow, to Him who has promised to care for those who place their trust in Him, and who alone can heal the broken-hearted.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the bereaved family of the deceased, and that they be inserted in the minutes of our Society and also published in the Charlevoix SENTINEL and Journal.

MRS. MAGGIE L. WASHBURN,
MRS. LOTTIE A. STOCKMAN,
MRS. MARTHA A. HODGES.

Hazings from Hayes.

G. W. Ford planted his early potatoes last Monday.

Mrs. Maggie Wolverton of Bates county, Missouri, is visiting at her father's, Alexander Ross.

Our famers have commenced plowing and the prospect is that spring crops will be put in the ground in good time.

This has been a poor spring for sugar making. By the time the farmers fairly had their trees tapped the season was over.

We begin to see the smoke of the propellers on their way to the north.

D. E. Scroggie has rented Wm. Scroggie's farm and will move on it this spring.

A. R. Struthers is limping from the effects of cutting his foot with an ax.

The Isle AuGallex light shone out Monday night for the first this season.

Winter grain looks very well and a good rain would start its growth rapidly.

Miss Nellie M. Burnett will teach the spring term of school at Burgess.

Isaac Stauffer has patented a seed sower that does its work finely. He is selling quite a number this spring.

A new idea in box-paper at Hines & Co's. Its bound to take the lead. Everybody buys it. Made especially for Charlevoix. Call and get a box. Very cheap.

A Draft "Raised" on the Bank of Charlevoix.

In the latter part of March, Assistant Cashier Brown of the Bank of Charlevoix, while at their East Jordan branch office, had a draft presented him to be cashed by Mrs. Francy Weimer and her husband and son, who were then at the county seat for the purpose of proving up on their homestead in Melrose, where they reside. The draft was for $300, and was issued by the Traders' Bank of Elmira, Ont., in favor of the above named Mrs. Weimer. Mr. Brown paid the draft, partly in cash, and the balance in a certificate of deposit. The latter she afterward negotiated at Harbor Springs. In due time the draft, with other enclosures, was sent to the Chase National Bank of New York, and afterward sent to the Bank of issue in Canada, and back through the same channel came the information that the draft, as issued by them, was for only $100. That the work of "raising" the draft was cleverly done is apparent from the fact that the fraud had not only escaped detection here but in New York. Of course the Bank of Charlevoix had to make the matter good. Sunday, Assistant Cashier Brown and Sheriff Berdan quietly slipped out of town and called upon the Weimer family at their home in Melrose. They "tumbled to the racket" at once, and adjusted the financial part of the transaction, but stoutly denied any knowledge of the forgery, claiming that the draft was sent them from Canada as part of the proceeds of an estate, and that the crookedness was in Victoria's dominion. At Petoskey it was learned that Curtis & Wylie, the bankers of that place had been victimized to the tune of several hundred dollars in the same manner and by the same parties. Investigation at the Canadian end is now in progress. No arrests have been made.

G. A. R. Matters.

At a recent meeting of Baxter Post G. A. R. it was decided to observe Memorial Day, and that the Posts at Boyne City, Ironton, East Jordan, and Eastport, be invited to join with them in its observance. The day and date will be settled by general orders from Department headquarters, and headquarters of Baxter Post.

At the same meeting the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That a vote of thanks be tendered the Charlevoix SENTINEL for its elaborate and complimentary notice of the "Hard Tack and Coffee Social" given by Baxter Post at their March meeting.

The Sweetland Sanitarium.

Work progresses on the Sanitarium building on the south terrace, and the institution is already one of the finest looking buildings in that part of the town. The main feature of the Sanitarium is the medicated vapor sweat bath. A neat and well ventilated bath-room in the rear of the main building contains three boxes with the necessary apparatus. Of the virtue of these baths we have an experimental knowledge. In them is involved a hygienic principle as well established as it is irrevocable. A good sweat is a good thing for any of the ills that flesh is heir to. On the roof is a large observatory calculated for a "sun-bath." The interior of the building is finished and furnished in excellent taste, and we have no doubt the Sweetlands will make the sanitarium a success.

Masonic Mention.

The Charlevoix Masonic lodge room is to be calcimined, re-painted, and otherwise improved.

A Petoskey mason has an apron over one hundred years old.

Dr. Carlstein, of this place, and Senator John A. Logan, are members of the same lodge in Chicago.

Washington's masonic apron is still preserved at Mount Vernon. It was presented to him by Madam Lafayette.

Knights Templar throughout the United States are preparing to attend the triennial conclave at St. Louis in September. Several Ivanhoe knights will attend with DeMolay Commandery of Grand Rapids.

Ivanhoe Commandery, of Petoskey, which has seven Charlevoix members, is making arrangements for a big excursion to Sault Ste. Marie in June. They go in full force, and will be accompanied by knights from Big Rapids and Grand Rapids.

Charles Dickens, the London litterateur, son of the novelist, is a mason.

The king of the Sandwich Islands is a high up mason.

The movement to establish a Masonic home in Michigan is making headway. Already upwards of $5,000 have been gathered to help on the work. A building for the home will probably be erected next year.

At the annual meeting of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association of Western Michigan, held at Grand Rapids lately, the report of the Secretary showed that during the past year it has paid out $33,000 in death benefits, has now $56,793.24 in the treasury, and has a membership of 5,333. It is now about eleven years since the association was organized, and it has paid out during that time $214,765 in benefits.

Is the president censured, or endorsed? That now seems to the "great moral question" among the adherents of his party. The overwhelming defeat of the Democrats in the April local elections in different States is interpreted by some of the democratic politicians as a censure of the policy of the Administration in regard to the appointments. A Democratic administration that fails to give the offices to democrats is not in favor with the party that it purports to represent. The other way of looking at it is voiced by a Chicago democratic paper, which says that as republican majorities were cast in most of the cities, the President's adherence to republican precedents was indorsed.

If you are thinking of buying carpets or curtains this spring, do not fail to call upon F. W. Craine & Co. They have the largest stock and the lowest prices in town.

The bad roads have brought business to a stand-still, at Ironton.

The Handsomest Cottage of them all.

The Smithson cottage will be completed this week. Have you seen it? You certainly should visit it, as it is a model of convenience and a thing of beauty.

It faces the south. Entering the reception room you face a handsome grate, and mirrored mantel, the latter bearing the Smithson crest and motto, "Faites bien et laissez dire." From this room sliding doors connect with the drawing room. On the first floor are also a bed chamber, dining room and kitchen. Passing up stairs from the reception room you halt in a snug oriel window from which a charming view of Pine lake is obtained. The second story contains four large sleeping rooms and a bath room. Another flight of stairs takes you to the tower. Here may certainly be seen Charlevoix in all her loveliness.

The cottage is plastered throughout, with painted walls, excepting the reception room which is ceiled and sided with ash. The finish throughout is in ash and birch.

An attractive feature is found in the hand-painted door panels, painted by members of Mr. Smithson's own family from himself down, in flower pieces, among which are apple blossoms, pond lilies, morning glories, pansies, daisies, autumn leaves etc.

The handsome grates in the reception room, bed room and dining room are supplied with hammered brass fenders, etc.

The contractors, Messrs Heath & Francis of Charlevoix, certainly deserve high praise for much of the good taste and the fine workmanship displayed.

Ironton.

The kilns were fired last Friday. One containing 45 cords fell on Sunday; the hose was turned on it and the fire put out before any damage was done.

School opened on Monday the 5th, with an attendance of 75 pupils.

The kilns have been fired and preparations are being made to start the furnace.

A channel was cut through the ice from Bedwin's to Tally's dock.

The "bloody shirt" is still being flaunted by some of the late campaigners.

Walter Manney left on Tuesday last for Lincoln, Nebraska. Mrs. Mannay has spent the winter there.

That wild-cat (?) which infested the neighboorhood of the kilns must have been not an ordinary cat. He undoubtedly was seized by a desire to become civilized and with that end in view, left the accustomed haunts of his kind and came out into civilization; but alas! for poor pussy fell into bad company and was ignominiously murdered by one of his associates; he died with only one consoling thought, viz: that of receiving a puff in the only democratic paper in the county.

Prof. Geo. Hause, stopping with his uncle Wm. Hause, has organized a writing class which meets every Tuesday and Friday night. Good progress is being made.

The temperance meeting held in the church on Friday night under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. was well attended and though the ladies had not succeeded in procuring a speaker, an interesting evening was spent in social talk on the subject, interspersed with music.

The buzz of a million mosquitoes resounds through this township, but above the din we hear that Will Robinson has been re-engaged to work John Peterson's farm this season, and that he sowed 5 acres of wheat on Monday, also that Henry Sheldon sowed oats on Wednesday last.

The "Wolverine" Base Ball Club of this place, met and played a game on Saturday. The Club was re-organized and the following new officers chosen: Captain, Bert Sheldon; Secretary, James Mitchel; Treasurer, Willis Coblentz. The boys will meet regularly on Saturday afternoons for practice.

Mrs. Chas. Hardy gave birth to a pair of twin girls on Sunday morning. The babies are doing well, but the mother died at noon the same day.

We're watching for the first boat.

The M. E. S. S. will be supplied with the Epworth hymnal. A S. S. was organized on Sunday by the Congregational people. Have not learned the particulars as yet.

Mr. Pervis took possession of the business of Crouter & Harris at this place. Mr. Pervis is well known here and has the best wishes of a host of friends. He assures us that he will handle a full assortment of groceries and the drug division will be kept up as well as can be under the circumstances. Miss Mary Pervis will manage for a time.

Notice of Dissolution.

Notice is hereby given that the firm of H. V. Riffenburg & Co. is this date dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. W. H. Harris retiring from the firm. Mr. H. V. Riffenburg will continue the business under the firm name of the Riffenburg Milling Company, and who assumes all liabilities, and will collect all debts payable to the aforementioned firm.

Mortgage Sale.

Default having been made in a certain indenture of mortgage bearing date April 1st, 1884 by and between Steve M. Peterson of Charlevoix, Michigan, party of the first part and Stephen E. Cobb, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, party of the second part, and which was on the 5th day of May A. D. 1884, recorded in Liber 4 of mortgages on page 217 in the books of the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Charlevoix county and there now being due on said mortgage the sum of sixty-three dollars and no proceedings having been instituted either in law or equity to collect the same or upon the note accompanying said mortgage. Therefore said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in said mortgage, on Saturday the tenth day of July, A. D. 1886 at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day at public sale to the highest bidder at the front door of Loveday's hall, in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place of holding the Circuit court for Charlevoix county, wherein the premises in said mortgage are situated) or so much of said described premises as are necessary to sell to pay said sum and all reasonable costs. The premises described in said mortgage are described as follows: Commencing on the quarter post on the east line of section thirty-two (32) of town thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west and running thence west on quarter line one hundred and sixty rods, thence north sixty rods, thence east one hundred and sixty rods, thence south sixty rods to place of beginning, situated in Charlevoix county, State of Michigan. The said premises will be sold subject to the principal sum of three hundred dollars and accruing interest yet to become due on the aforesaid mortgage.

Dated April 19th 1886.

PAINTING

BECOMES AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

To every house-holder, and the question arrises What Kind of Paint to buy and where to buy it.

Stockman & Iddings undoubtedly handle a much larger quantity of Paint Supplies than any other house in the County. All goods sold by them are guaranteed to be the BEST in quality, and in PRICE the CHEAPEST.

They offer this year "THE KING," all shades and colors, manufactured and warranted by The Chicago White Lead and Oil Co., SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SOLID PAINTS, in fact others are only imitations.

Also as heretofore Heath & Milligan's BEST Liquid Paints, -Ready Mixed, -well-known and popular.

These Paints have stood the test for years, are well-known to all painters and architects in Charlevoix and vicinity and therefore need no extended notice.

CAUTION.--When you buy paint KNOW which you are buying, READY MIXED which is sold by the gallon, or solid colors, (so called paste paint) which should be sold by the pound, the oil to thin it being sold seperately by the gallon.

IF YOU WANT TO PAINT, CALCIMINE OR DO ANY OTHER SPRING WORK, OR IF YOU WANT A STOVE OF ANY KIND OR ANY OTHER HARDWARE OR BUILDING SUPPLIES, DO NOT FAIL TO GO TO STOCKMAN & IDDINGS' FOR THEM, AND GET THE BEST GOODS AT THE LOWEST PRICES.

The Village Council at its last meeting continued saloon bonds at $3,000, and druggists' at $1,000.

—A. J. McLeod has his new office in the market and Miss Bertie will occupy it this summer as cashier.

W. H. Harris has resigned his position as miller in the Rifenburg flouring mill, to engage in other business.

The Mackinac Island trip on the Hannah, Lay & Co. boats will be one of the pleasures of this summer for tourists.

The filling beneath the south approach to the bridge has caved so badly that the Town Board have ordered it repaired at once.

The trout season is near at hand. Only a few days more ere the law will afford no protection to the speckled beauties over six inches long.

Commodore M. J. Stockman is laid up at the Sweetland Sanitarium for rheumatic repairs, and expects to be launched this week as good as new.

—Geo Weaver, it seems, and Miss Florence Highland were married Christmas, and never let us know anything about it. Congratulations anyhow.

—The Baptists have about contracted for the new Green Hall as a place for holding divine services until they can build upon their lot on State street. Rev. W. G. Clark will remain as their pastor.

The regular meetings of the Historical Society have ceased for the season. The programme that was prepared for the last night, however, will probably be presented sometime during the summer.

—The village council is corresponding with the manufacturers relative to the purchase some time in the future of a steam fire engine. One is offered them for $1,800 above the valuation of the old hand engine.

—The Traverse City council has decided to send their chief of the fire department and one member of each hose company to the annual convention of the State Firemen's Association, held in Big Rapids, May 5th.

And now East Jordan has got it! A genuine strike! All dock hands and laborers have struck for 30 cents an hour for loading vessels. Schooners at Charlevoix have been telegraphed not to proceed to East Jordan until the difficulty is over.

Grand Rapids Eagle: Rev. Father Wycamp, who is the head of the Convent of St. Francis at Cross Village, in Emmet county, has been in the city this week attending the services at the cathedral. He has been a missionary for thirty-one years among the Indians and people of the north.

—The G. R. & I. railroad has just issued a handsome little pamphlet of more than 75 pages. It is printed on tinted paper and contains interesting descriptions of the delightful summer resorts which are situated all along the line of the road. The book abounds in fine wood cuts of the attractive spots and scenes of Northern Michigan, and should be seen and read by all persons who are interested in the "fishing line."

—W. H. Dewey in the Detroit Journal says: We are doing a great deal of repairing at Harbor Point this year and the promise for a better season than last year. Our club has between 63 and 70 stockholders, Thomas Berry and George H. Edwards among them. We got last year about 400 guests from Lansing, Logansport, Wabash, Peoria and many other cities of Michigan, Indiana and Illinois. We shall open about June 15. Everything in the pleasure line is booming over on the Lake Michigan shore.

—A Frankfort dispatch says: Frederick J. Pocock, foreman for the Frankfort Lumber company, was found drowned at the Crystal Lake outlet this morning. The high water had carried away the bridge and dam. As the body was without boots, and the pants were rolled, it is thought he was carried off by the rapid current in trying to wade across the stream. A large amount of money and valuable papers were found on his body. His relatives live in Canada. He was the author and publisher of the "Michigan Pinery Boy Songster," so popular in this section.

—John O'Neill rejoices in the possession of a nine pound boy.

The SENTINEL steam engine was kept busy nearly four days last week.

An 8 pound son now enlivens the home of Minnie Edwards Shepard of Boyne City.

—Mrs. M. P. Burns, who has been spending the winter at Clinton, Ind., is expected home Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Paskett, of Banks, have returned from southern Ohio, where they spent the winter.

The Highway Commissioner has ordered one of the Newman automatic gates for the south approach to the bridge.

Miss Mate Cooper of Charlevoix, formerly principal of the Boyne City schools, will teach the South Arm school the coming term.

The U. S. Signal Service has adopted a new code of signals, indicating the direction of the wind. They will go into use May 1st.

—Among the passengers on the Champlain for Chicago Saturday were J. Reed Emrey, B. W. Miller, G. W. Miller, and Mrs. Ella Smith.

Richard Cooper, although occupying the greater portion of a large bed, is as comfortable as circumstances will permit, and doing well.

—Rumor has it that Hannah, Lay & Co. will sell all their pine mills and dock to some Muskegon parties. Men are out estimating the amount of pine.

—Rev. A. T. Iddings returned from Albion yesterday. He will occupy the M. E. pulpit Sunday morning. In the evening occurs the regular temperance meeting at the same church.

Capt. Penfold's family arrived from Frankfort on the Lawrence on Monday. They will occupy a portion of Dr. Lewis' residence for the present, and later they will make their home in the Fox residence.

—W. O. Hughart, president of the Grand Rapids & Indiana road has returned from New York and announces that he succeeded in placing $700,000 bonds, the money to be used to build the new road from Grand Rapids to Muskegon. Two routes have been surveyed, but neither is yet adopted.

—The Leelanaw Enterprise says: A transfer of some magnitude and importance has just been consummated at Traverse City whereby Hannah, Lay & Co. dispose of their immense lumber interests in this region, inclusive of their docks and saw mills at Traverse City, and their large tracts of pine and other timber, to a syndicate, for a consideration of $1,500,000.

At the special teachers' examination held at Charlevoix on Friday last, there were 23 applicants. The following are the names of those that passed: Misses Flora Nelson, Adele Cassiday, Ella Adams, Mattie O'Neill, Jennie Stover, Esther Allen, Anna Metcalf, Josie Litzau, Ada Cooper, Mary Cooper, Cora Chew, Nellie Burnett, Orlie Tripp, Alice Smith, Irona Rose.

Charlevoix Summer Resort Items.

The boat-houses need painting. Ditto some of the cottages.

R. S. Glover of Louisville, Ky., has sent plans for a cottage to Charlevoix architects.

Miss Lizzie Limprecht will come up this season.

Wm. M. Holden and party of Chicago, will spend a portion of the summer camping on Intermediate lake.

Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Allen, left Kalamazoo Thursday for New York City, where they go to meet their daughter, Miss Fannie, who has been studying in Italy for the past two years.

A Composition on Columbus.

London Standard: The following story comes from a school in the midlands: The master told the boys of the third class to write a short essay on Columbus. The following was sent up by an ambitious essayist: "Clumbus was a man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The king of Spain said to Clumbus: 'Can you discover America?' 'Yes,' said Clumbus, 'if you will give me a ship.' So he had a ship and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarreled and said they believed there was no such place. But after many days the pilot came to him and said: 'Clumbus, I see land.' 'Then that is America,' said Clumbus. When the ship got near, the land was full of black men. Clumbus said: 'Is this America?' 'Yes, it is,' said they. Then he said: 'I suppose you are the niggers?' 'Yes,' they said, 'we are.' The chief said: 'I suppose you are Clumbus?' 'You are right,' said he. Then the chief turned to his men and said: 'There is no help for it; we are discovered at last.'"

Mr. Garland says that what he lost at poker he won back at law, but he does not seem to realize that he lost something in the Pan Electric game that he will never succeed in winning back. The man who publicly announces that he has tried to make money by gambling at cards is hardly a fit person for attorney general of a country that still retains some fixed ideas upon decency.

Marine.

The ice in Pine Lake disappeared last Thursday.

The tug men demand a bell on the bridge, and they should have it.

The tug Martin is laid up temporarily to repair a defect in her boiler.

The tug Sea Wing received considerable repair at her dock last week.

The "boarding house scow" has been launched from Campbell's ship yard.

The steamers Gazelle and Clara Belle commenced making regular trips Monday.

The schooner Stampede went out easily on Saturday, drawing eleven feet of water.

The scow Union has been re-caulked at Washburn's ship yard. She goes to Georgian Bay.

The tug Payne will come out the last of this week, and go into commission in the Penfold line.

S'more noise in the air soon. The steamer Gazelle has ordered a whistle similar to that on the tug Sea Wing.

Capt. H. G. Edwards left on the Champlain Saturday for Chicago, and expects to bring back a schooner with him.

The tug competition is lively. Four tugs meandered to the vicinity of Cat Head Thursday, in quest of tows.

The tug Minnie Warren will be launched the last of this week. She has has nearly 3,000,000 feet of logs to tow.

The steamer Faxton will run between Traverse City and Chicago until May 5th, in the place of the City of Traverse.

Last Wednesday navigation was declared open at the straits and eleven steam barges and consorts passed through.

When the Northern Michigan line launch the "City of Charlevoix," they can expect something handsome in the way of colors.

The steamer Remora of Detroit, arrived this morning. She is owned by the Davis Fish Company, and is used in transferring fish.

In port as we go to press: Schrs. Hattie Hutt, Carrier, Dan Mahee, Stampede, Hercules, Sea Gem, Mocking Bird and Harriet Ross.

The steamer Cummings will stop over night at Northport, this season, three or four nights each week, and the balance of the time at Old Mission.

On her home trip Monday evening, the steamer Gazelle met with an accident to her boiler, and laid up at Sweet's Landing until two o'clock in the morning.

The schooner Stampede, Capt. Buchanan, left here last Saturday noon for Sheboygan, and returned yesterday noon, having made the round trip in 69 hours, the quickest on record.

The steamer Lawrence now has a new stand of colors. She came into port Monday with all colors flying. Four streamers bore the names Chicago, Milwaukee, Charlevoix and Cheboygan.

The tug Martin, while towing the schooner H. B. Moore in Friday night, got a sunken log in her wheel just above the bridge, and was obliged to let go the vessel, which drifted back to the piers.

The Schr. Kilderhouse, Capt. Milt Edwards, is aground on St. Helena Island. She has 23,000 bushels of corn on for Midland, Ont. She is out one foot forward and has 20 feet of water under her stern.

The steamer Friant arrived Thursday: the City of Grand Rapids came in decked out in her colors Monday, and the Lawrence arrived the same day from Chicago, looking like a new boat, which she practically is.

The tug Campbell brought down the schooner Stampede Friday night during the squall, and Capt. Tuluse, in trying to make the cut in the intense darkness landed himself and tow in the sand. The tug Hall was near and put the schooner at an anchor.

Petoskey Democrat: Capt. Louis Gebo has been secured by Burbeck & Caskey to take charge of the popular propeller Van Raalte, the coming season. Capt. Gebo has been a resident of the Grand Traverse region for about twenty-five years, and has been connected with steam and sail vessels a greater portion of the time. The Van Raalte will be in good hands. The vessel is in first-class shape, and will run on the same route this season as last.

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix, for ports outside the Michigan District, for the week ending yesterday evening.

22—Schr. Evening Star, 100,000 ft hardwood lumber, Gibson & Porter, to Chicago.

22—Schr. Fleetwing, 1,100 cedar ties, Upright & Emrey to Milwaukee.

23—Schr. Charlie Marshall, 9,000 posts, Upright & Emrey to Chicago.

24—Schr. Stampede, 233,000 ft hardwood lumber, Pine Lake Lumber Co. to Sheboygan.

26—Schr. L. B. Shepard, 6,000 ties, [illegible] to Chicago.

27—Schr. H. B. Moore, 170 cds wood, [illegible] to Chicago.

DEMOCRATIC PURITY.

Foot-Prints of the Guileless Party Which Appear in Different Parts of the Country.

The three causes which aided the Democrats in 1884 in securing the Presidency were the petty jealousy of a little coterie of Mugwumps, the charge of corruption against the Republicans and colossal Democratic fraud in the Southern States. The silliness of the first cause has been sufficiently demonstrated and the truth of the last one has long since passed beyond dispute. The falseness of the charge that Republican rule was corrupt is every day receiving its refutation from the failure of the Democrats, although they have been a year in power, to discover proofs of wrongdoing.

But what evidence has the Democratic party given of the superior virtue it claimed to possess during the campaign of 1884, when its orators went around the country prating about the need of cleaning out the Augean stables? The party had not been in power six months before some of its most trusted leaders were discovered to be interested in a speculative scheme to further their private fortunes by the use of their official trusts. Democratic Congressmen, department officers and the head of the office of Justice of the United States Government are among the implicated persons. Such an exposure at once turned the Democratic claim of superior purity into a roaring farce.

Another illustration of Democratic cleanliness is given in New York City, where the corrupt transactions of the Democratic board of aldermen are being ...

A DISSOLVING CABINET.

The Embarrassing and Ridiculous Position in Which President Cleveland's Advisers Have Placed Themselves.

It is regarded at Washington as absolutely certain that the Cleveland Cabinet can not under any circumstances hold together for another year, and it is probable that the serious illness of Secretary Manning will necessitate his immediate retirement from public life and involve further important and immediate changes in the President's staff of executive advisers. It was a weak and incoherent Cabinet from the start, and its dissolution at this early period in President Cleveland's term ought not to excite surprise in any quarter. Under its jangling and scheming advice the Administration has blundered, and lied, and disgraced its office until it has disgusted not only the country in general, but a very large and respectable element of its own party.

The Attorney-General is so obtuse a scamp that he does not appear to be cognizant of the slightest impropriety in a scandalized and corrupt agent of a private scheme to rob the public holding on to an important public office, and he is therefore calmly awaiting the Presidential kick which must come sooner or later. It would be astounding indeed if even so autocratic an Executive as Cleveland should deliberately defy public opinion throughout an entire Presidential term by the retention of a proven corruptionist in one of the most important places in his Cabinet. It is conceded by Democrats that Garland must go, or the permanent disgrace of the Administration be ...

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Discourse on the Trials of Newspaper Editors and Reporters.

The Shams They See and the Temptations They Meet in Their Search for News—An Underpaid Class as a Rule, and Their Souls Nobody's Care.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, in a recent sermon, took up the cudgel for the newspaper men, illustrating their trials, temptations and almost ceaseless labors in the fight for current news in a forcible manner. He took for his text:

Behold a flying roll!—Zechariah v., 1.

Dr. Talmage said: This winged sheet of the text had on it a prophecy. The flying roll to-day is the newspaper. In calculating the influences that affect society you can no more afford to ignore it than you can ignore the noonday sun or the Atlantic Ocean.

It is high time that I preach a sermon expressing my appreciation of what the newspaper press has done and is doing. No man, living or dead, is or has been so indebted to it as I am, for it gives me perpetual audience in every city, town and neighborhood of Christendom, and I take this opportunity before God and this people to thank the editors and publishers, and compositors and type-setters the world over, and I give fair notice that I shall take every opportunity of enlarging this field, whether by stenographic report on the Sabbath, or galley-proofs on Monday, or previous dictation. I have said again and again to the officers of this church, whoever else are crowded, don't let the reporters be crowded. Each responsible and intelligent reporter is ten or fifteen churches built on to this church. Ninety-five per cent. of the newspapers are now my friends, and do me full justice and more than justice ...

... with swords, but with steel pens; not with bullets, but with type; not with cannon, but with lightning perfecting presses; and the Sumters, and the Moultries, and the Pulaskis, and the Gibraltars of that conflict will be the editorial and reportorial rooms of our great newspaper establishments. Men of the press, under God you are to decide whether the human race shall be saved or lost. God has put a more stupendous responsibility upon you than upon any other class of persons. What long strides your profession has made in influence and power since the day when Peter Schoeffer invented cast metal type, and because two books were found just alike they were ascribed to the work of the devil; and books were printed on strips of bamboo; and Rev. Jesse Glover originated the first American printing press; and the Common Council of New York, in solemn resolution, offered forty pounds to any printer who would come there and live; and when the Speaker of the House of Parliament in England announced with indignation that the public prints had recognized some of their doings; until in this day, when we have in this country about five hundred skilled photographers, and about thirteen thousand newspapers, printing in one year 2,500,000,000 copies. The press and the telegraph have gone down into the same great harvest field to reap, and the telegraph says to the newspaper: "I'll rake while you bind;" and the iron teeth of the telegraph are set down at one end of the harvest field and drawn clean across, and the newspaper gathers up the sheaves, setting down one sheaf on the breakfast table in the shape of a morning newspaper, and putting down another sheaf on the tea table in the shape of an evening newspaper; and that man who neither reads nor takes a newspaper would be a curiosity. What vast progress since the day when Cardinal Wolsey declared that either the printing press must go down or the Church of God must go down ...

... healthy intelligence. You blame the newspaper press for giving such prominence to murders and scandals. Do you suppose that so many papers would give prominence to these things if the people did not demand them? I go into the meat market of a foreign city, and I find that the butchers hang up on the most conspicuous hooks meat that is tainted, while the meat that is fresh and savory is put away without any especial care. I come to the conclusion that the people of that city love tainted meat. You know very well that if the great mass of people in this country get hold of a newspaper and there are in it no runaway matches, no broken-up families, no defamation of men in high position, they pronounce the paper insipid. They say, "It is shockingly dull to-night." I believe it is one of the trials of the newspaper press, that the people of this country demand moral slush instead of healthy, intellectual food. Now, you are a respectable man, an intelligent man, and a paper comes into your hand. You open it, and there are three columns of splendidly written editorial, recommending some moral sentiment, or evolving some scientific theory. In the next column there is a miserable, contemptible divorce case. Which do you read first? You dip into the editorial long enough to say: "Well, that's very ably written," and you read the divorce case from the "long primer" type at the top, to the "nonpareil" type at the bottom, and then you ask your wife if she has read it! O, it is only a case of supply and demand. Newspaper men are no fools. They know what you want, and they give it to you. I believe that if the church and the world bought nothing but pure, honest and healthful newspapers, nothing but pure, honest and healthful newspapers would be published. If you should gather all the editors and reporters of this country in one great convention, and then ask of them what kind of a paper they would prefer to publish, I believe they would unanimously say: "We would prefer to publish an elevated paper." So long as there is an iniquitous demand, there will be ...

A CHECKERED CAREER.

Story of a Man Who Has Had an Adventurous and Thrilling History.

[Marshfield (Wis.) Special.]

There resides at the little village of Auburndale, near this city, a man who possesses a history so interesting, varied and thrilling as to be worthy of the pen of a novelist. His name is Fred Grube. He was born in Hanover, Prussia, June 15, 1835, and till the age of twenty years was a laborer. About 1855 the Holstein war broke out between Germany and Denmark. Grube was pressed into the service and served as private twenty months. Being of a naturally high-spirited nature, Grube could not endure the insolence of a certain superior, and during an altercation he nearly killed the officer. He was tried by a court martial and sentenced to be shot. On the night previous to the day set for his execution he managed to escape, and after numberless trials and adventures reached England, where he at once enlisted in the English legion of London under the assumed name of Herman Bruder. He was at once sent with the regiment to the seat of the Crimean war, then raging between England and Russia, and passed through all the battles of the peninsula, including the storming of Sebastopol.

After this battle Grube, in company with twenty comrades, was sent on a scouting expedition into Holland, but were surprised by the enemy, and all were killed in the fight or hanged afterward except Grube. He finally reached England, when he was at once sent with the legion to the seat of war then brewing between England and Holland. While in Holland he was sent out as a spy, but was captured and again sentenced to death, but by eluding one guard and killing another he again escaped. He again reached England, where he remained a time, and then came to America, arriving in New York in 1854. Upon the breaking out of the civil war he at once enlisted, and served three years, participating in twenty-three battles. He was finally taken prisoner, and confined in Andersonville prison for eleven months when he was exchanged and sent North ...

Purify Your Blood

Your blood may be full of impurities, but Hood's Sarsaparilla will thoroughly cleanse, enrich and vitalize it. The most severe cases of scrofula, salt rheum, boils, pimples—in fact, all affections arising from impure blood—yield to Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. It also cures dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, kidney and liver complaints, sharpens the appetite and builds up the whole system.

Henry Biggs, Campbell Street, Kansas City, had scrofulous sores all over his body for 15 years. Hood's Sarsaparilla completely cured him.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best spring medicine and blood purifier. It eradicates every impurity from the blood, and cures scrofula, salt rheum, boils, pimples, all humors, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, indigestion, general debility, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney and liver complaints. It overcomes that extreme tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the whole system.

"I was troubled with boils, having several of them at a time. After suffering about all I could bear, I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which entirely cured me. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all like afflicted, being sure they will find permanent relief." E. N. NIGHTINGALE, Quincy, Mass.

Purifies the Blood

"When I bought Hood's Sarsaparilla I made a good investment of one dollar in medicine for the first time. It has driven off rheumatism and improved my appetite so much that my boarding mistress says I must keep it locked up or she will be obliged to raise my board with every other boarder that takes Hood's Sarsaparilla." THOMAS BURRELL, 99 Tillery Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Gladstone's Splendid Courage.

The more it is considered, the more striking becomes the action of Mr. Gladstone in submitting his plan to the English parliament providing for home rule in Ireland. It is a display of magnificent courage for which the history of British legislation finds no complete parallel. The developments already existing show that he was sure to face the certain desertion of leading members of his own cabinet, to be followed by an unknown but certain number of his adherents, less conspicuous but whose votes were no less necessary; that he would encounter the venomous hostility of his political opponents, the tories; that the protestants of Ireland would be timid supporters if not open opposers of the measures, because fearful as to the result of placing large power in the hands of those religiously hostile to them, and that both landlords and people would not and could not be satisfied with the provisions that should be made to meet their directly conflicting demands. The whole great question was hedged about with enormous difficulties and entanglements.

He has boldly faced all in a resolute and earnest endeavor to adjust warring interests, to wholly and radically recast existing relations, and to place the whole broad situation with all its confusing and intricate details upon a basis of justice that should deal fairly by the empire on the one hand and an integral and long-pressed portion of that empire on the other. There is no other man living in England today who would have dared make this attempt, or who could have hoped to stand the slightest chance of success if he had made it. The greatest of living statesmen has done it and his success is already assured.

Not that it is clear that he will carry his plan through the British parliament at this present session, although the probabilities are that he will succeed in doing so. But home rule for Ireland must now come. The question can never be decisively settled but in one way, and substantially Mr. Gladstone's plan will be the one ultimately adopted. Like the wise and earnest man he is, many details are are left to be adjusted, and he avows himself ready to consider and adopt any and every suggestion, come from whatever quarter it may, which promises in any degree to aid in bringing about the great purpose of the measure in hand or to perfect its details in the slightest degree. His own exalted character, his sincere devotion to the interests of the whole empire and every part of it, his one unselfish and controlling desire to do that which shall prove the greatest blessing to his countrymen, shines through all that he has done, and disarms opposition in spite of itself. Such lofty purpose commands respect. It is too high to be reached by the weapons of ordinary politics. It is too great for sneers; too exalted for ridicule; and too impregnably grounded in right and justice to be successfully assailed by direct attack.

But vast pecuniary interests are affected unfavorably by it. The grip of power is to be relaxed, and that is a hold always yielded with reluctance. The dangers of ultimate dismemberment, probably more fanciful than real, but none the less an element full of apprehension and dread, loom up to frighten the weak in faith. The multitude of conflicting details, harassing in their demands and unyielding in their importunities, are all calculated to tax to the utmost the patience that shall seek to harmonize and adjust them while holding subordinate to the chief end ever to be kept in view.

The victory is more than half won already, so courageously and nobly has the great commoner risen to the occasion. The tide is slowly setting in his favor. The great odds against him are being turned back inch by inch. We hope and believe that Mr. Gladstone will be spared to see this crowning act of his long and glorious career go into effect, and open a new and yet more beneficent chapter in the history of that great empire on whose dominion the sun never sets.—Detroit Tribune.

Grand Rapids Eagle: A Rondout, N.Y., man tells a curious Easter story. He says he bought some green dye, intending to color some eggs for his children for Easter and laid the package on a bench in the back yard and forgot about it. When he thought to get it he discovered that his hens had eaten most of the dye stuff. The next day he found two bright green eggs in the nests; the next day three more a shade or two lighter; the third day the eggs had just the slightest tinge of green; the fourth day they resumed their normal appearance. The Demo-Green Fusionists of Michigan might do well to procure some of that dye just before the meeting of their Convention this year. They will find it an amazing help in giving color to their nomination eggs. That it may fade shortly after will make no difference. Once fused, those parties are ready to swallow eggs of any color or odor.

C. W. Caskey, of near Harbor Springs, will plant 40 acres of potatoes this spring.

A. D. Carpenter of Mancelona, has removed to Boyne Falls, his former place of residence.

There is more wood, ties, posts, &c. awaiting shipment at Boyne City than ever before at one time.

The Iron Co. at Mancelona have advanced the price paid to choppers from 65 cents to 75 cents per cord.

Northport is threatened with two more groceries. It is thought the consumers will be able to stand the eruption if the grocers can.

From the Progress we learn that Prosecuting Attorney Hudson, of Mancelona, had five assault and battery cases at Eastport, last Thursday.

W. W. Johnson of Snowflake, Antrim county, is doing a large business this season in forest seedlings. He has filled so far over five hundred orders.

The Boyne City council have voted to place saloon bonds at $4,500. Frank M. Gates was appointed marshal, Dr. Nicholson health officer, and Ira Livingston pound master.

Bowles, the young man arrested at Boyne City three years ago for forgery, and re-arrested when his term expired, at the instance of Petoskey parties, broke jail at Harbor Springs the other day and escaped.

Andrew J. Blackbird, an Ottawa Indian, who was postmaster at Harbor Springs for 11 years, has written a history of the traditions of his tribe, and is giving lectures to enable him to have them printed in a durable form. Blackbird is a college graduate.

Two Indians from Sault St. Marie, four from Cross Village and one from Petoskey, took the train at the latter place on Monday bound for Washington. They claim that the government owes the Indians of this country the sum of $50,000 in accordance with the Treaty of 1855 and they go to ascertain why it is not paid.

Mrs. Jennie Moody, wife of Herbert Moody, a former Traverse City boy and well known in Charlevoix, died at their home in Chicago, last week Thursday, after an illness of some three months. They had been married but a little over a year. Mr. Moody has the sympathy of many friends here, at his old home.

In 1882 V. W. Bruce, of Big Rapids, published in the Current a number of caustic criticisms upon Gen. Bronson, the union candidate for congress. A libel suit resulted, which has been knocking about in the courts ever since. A settlement was reached recently by Bruce paying Bronson $500, including costs and contracting to publish a full and complete retraction.

Through the well directed and able efforts of Hon. S. C. Moffatt, our representative in congress, a larger appropriation has been effected for this district than ever before. He has likewise succeeded in getting an appropriation for a preliminary survey and report as to the feasibility of establishing a harbor of refuge at this place and Empire. Now if our citizens will for once cast aside their petty bickerings, put their shoulders to the wheel as a unit and pull together for the common object in view, Leland may yet be lifted out of gloom and darkness which seems to be settling over it. Let every man go to work with heart and courage.—Leland Enterprise.

East Jordan Enterprise: Corrected returns from the county show the majority against removal to be 61. Hudson, which was at first reported as having polled 32 votes for, and 2 against, having polled but 30 votes, all of where for removal. McKibbin is also elected supervisor, instead of Colwell, as previously reported.

"Sir Charles Williams," having been examined for the fourth time, was adjudged sufficiently off his mental equilibrium Monday, and Deputy Sheriff Rogers left yesterday with him for the asylum at Traverse City. Charlevoix county is furnishing her full quota of insane people this spring.

——C. F. W. Borchardt, after being confined in the jail here a few days awaiting examination, was furnished the necessary articles to make an assignment of all of his real estate and personal property, to the war department at Washington. All documents were dated from the "East Jordan Prison."

THE SILK INDUSTRY.

An Advance in Price Promised—Ending a Long Competition.

The meeting of sewing-silk and twist manufacturers in this city by organizing an association to promote harmony and mutual interests in the trade, took steps toward closing a long and memorable strife. This branch of the silk industry is the oldest in the country. The value of its annual production of goods is more than $10,000,000. About fifty separate concerns are engaged in the manufacture, but the great bulk of the business is done by half a dozen large firms. Nearly all their mills are in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The manufacture of sewing-silk as a household art in Connecticut began in colonial times, and attained importance in the earlier part of this century. Then ensued a long series of efforts, taxing Yankee ingenuity and patience to the utmost, to do the work by power-driven machinery. For many years the product was inferior to the sewing-silk of Europe, and when, by a series of improvements, it surpassed the foreign goods in quality, it had still a hard struggle for reputation. That this point was earned as early as 1843 is shown by a sort of declaration of independence in that year, signed by leading manufacturers at a meeting in this city, declaring that they would no longer conceal their goods under foreign labels. At that period the competition was severe, but it was wholly with the foreign producer. Next came the invention of the sewing-machine, and the demand for a kind of sewing-silk suited to it, which, when duly invented and improved, came to be known distinctively as "machine twist." This gave a great impetus to the business, and the production of "twist" now very far exceeds all the rest of this branch of the industry. As the machine and its "twist" started in life and grew together in this country, there was no foreign competition in the case. All kinds of sewing-silk shared in the improvements of manufacture with the result that foreign competition ceased.

Then sprung up between our own manufacturers a fiercer rivalry than the trade had ever known; and this condition of affairs has continued with few brief interruptions to the present day. In most trades such competition tends to degrade the quality of the product in order to meet lower prices, but this is not the case with sewing-silks, because there are ready means of testing them, and buyers have been educated to require goods that will stand the tests. Practically the competition is solely one of prices, thinly disguised by discounts to purchasers, and presents of "cabinets"—expensive pieces of furniture to display the wares. There could be no more complete demonstration of the fact that home competition is more effective than foreign in bringing down the prices of goods. The sewing-silks of to-day are far better than the once famous "Italian silks," and are less than half the price. But though such proof may be very pleasant to the student of political economy, it is not equally agreeable to the manufacturer, especially when it continues year after year, paring down his margin of profits.

For the last two or three years the cost of raw silk has been slowly but steadily falling. This material is the chief factor in the cost of sewing-silks, and bears a larger proportion to the value of the finished goods than any other branch of the silk industry in this country. Under the stress of competition the prices of goods were forced down in equal step with those of the raw material, and consumers got all the benefit of the decline. But within two or three months the conditions have changed; prices of raw silk rose suddenly, rested a little, then rose again, and now seem still to be rising. All indications point to a permanently-increased cost of the raw material. The logic of the situation is as conclusive as that of Mr. Micawber about income and expenditure. The manufacturers must advance their prices, and now, if ever, they should harmonize their differences.—New York Tribune.

"Prof." Hale of Binghamton, N. Y., recently "broke the world's record" by swinging Indian clubs four hours and fifty minutes. A young man in this town swung Indian clubs in his mother's parlor a few days ago, and, although he didn't break the world's record, he broke nearly everything else in the room, including the chandelier, mantel ornaments, two plaques, a statuette of Minerva, his own head, and one of the commandments. If the world's record had been within reach of his clubs he would have broken that too.—Norristown Herald.

Pete Wilson, an old railroad engineer, is known as a great blowhard. "I tell you when a man has been on the railroad as much as I have been he don't know what fear is. I used to be scared of a locomotive, but I've got over all that," he said to a crowd of listeners in front of a livery stable. "You wouldn't get in front of a locomotive, would you?" asked Gilhooly. "Would I? Well, I should snicker. I'd lay right down in front of a locomotive and smoke my pipe as calm as a summer morn, but of course not if there was fire under the boiler. I'm no durned fool even if I am a reckless daredevil."—Texas Siftings.

A Western member of Congress who went home for a vacation telegraphed his coming to certain friends, and as he rolled into town his ear was on the strain to catch the first notes of the expected brass band. The notes came, but they were a mile away. He looked for the crowd but there was none. Going up the street he met one of the friends who must have received his word, and hotly demanded: "What sort of a way is this to receive your member of Congress?" "My dear sir, it is very unfortunate, but none of your friends are to blame. A champion female roller-skater struck the town this morning, and no Congressman will amount to a pound of putty until her engagement expires. The band, all of the Common Council, and all the county officials are now escorting her to the rink, and the boys are crying, 'Our Congressman be ——!'"—New York Star.

Another lively child has been heard from. This one is dangerous, however. She has upset the peace of a household. She has estranged her father and mother. She has ruined the reputation of a most estimable young school-teacher, and she will probably never know anything about it. It was in school. The school-teacher, wishing to test the intelligence of her little pupils, asked them: "How many of you know that my name is Daisy?" They were silent. Perhaps their intuition told them that to acknowledge the fact would be to exhibit undue familiarity. At last one little thing held up her hand. "I know your name's Daisy." Having made this bold statement she felt she must save herself by an explanation. "I know your name's Daisy, 'cos every day when I go home papa asks ma, 'How's that daisy school-teacher of yours?'"—San Francisco Chronicle.

MACHINE

--AND-- BOILER

WORKS.

We desire to call the attention of Mill and Steamboat owners to the fact that we have in connection with our Iron Works a thoroughly equipped Machine Shop, under the direction of a competent Machinist; and are prepared to do all kinds of repairs on Steam Engines, Boilers or other machinery.

Our Castings are made entirely from CHARCOAL IRON OF OUR OWN MANUFACTURE and our Casting and Moulding Room has been enlarged so we are able to make CASTINGS UP TO TWO TONS and over in weight. We have also a large Oven for PREPARING CORES FOR CASTINGS, also a BRASS FURNACE.

We keep a first class BOILER MAKER AND FLANGER who is thoroughly competent to repair or build Marine, Locomotive or other Boilers, who can go to any point on short notice, thus saving much to those who have heretofore been obliged to send a long distance for this class of work.

Iron Pipe Fittings, Boiler plate Steel, and Iron of the best makes furnished as low as the same class of goods can be obtained in this state.

We solicit your custom and will endeavor to give a class of work superior to that heretofore done in Northern Michigan.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

SATURDAY, April 10.—The Senate, by a vote of 30 to 13, passed a bill authorizing the inhabitants of the Territory of Washington and the adjacent part of Idaho to form a State Government, to be called the State of Washington. In the House bills were passed authorizing the construction of twenty-two bridges, mainly over the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and to establish sixteen new life-saving stations.

MONDAY, April 12.—In the Senate the Indian Appropriation bill was passed, including an item of $20,000 for schools in Alaska. Mr. Sherman introduced an Arbitration bill, and Mr. Chace reported adversely the bill to increase the rate of postage on fourth-class matter to two cents an ounce. In the House bills were introduced: By Mr. Townshend, authorizing the granting of pensions to the parents of deceased soldiers on proof that they are without other means of support than their own manual labor; by Mr. Anderson, for the classification of the public lands, and a revision of the laws relating to public lands. A resolution was passed for the appointment of a committee of seven members to investigate the cause of the railway strike in the Southwest, with power to send for persons and papers. The District of Columbia Appropriation bill was then passed.

TUESDAY, April 13.—In the Senate Mr. Platt spoke in favor of open executive sessions. Mr. Frye's resolution against a commission to settle the fisheries question between the United States and Canada was adopted. In the House the Hurd-Romeis (Ohio) contested election case, in which there are three reports submitted by the Committee on Elections, the majority report, confirming the right of Romeis to the seat, was considered, but no action was taken.

WEDNESDAY, April 14.—In the Senate Mr. Cullom explained the provisions of his Inter-State Commerce bill. The resignation of Mr. Jackson, of Tennessee, who has accepted the appointment of United States Judge of the Sixth circuit, was received. The bill for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service ...

MY SHIP COMES IN.

'Neath Summer's sun and Winter's blast
While the long years swept slowly past,
I waited, looking out to sea,
For sure my ship would come to me.

Ah, sure! for with this morning's sun
My glad heart heard her signal gun,
And safely down the sheltering bay
I saw my ship come in to-day.

And then I learned that she had been
Eleven weeks in quarantine,
While yellow fever sunk the crew
Deep in its complementary blue.

And long before, while tempest tossed,
Her masts and rigging had been lost,
And then the crew, a frightened horde,
Had flung the cargo overboard.

And then a steamer of the line
Laid hold upon this ship of mine,
And towed her through the waters wild,
And tearful claims for salvage filed.

And then I learned the companies
That had insured my ship for me
Had gone up higher than a kite,
Bursted wide open out of sight.

And so again I sit all day
Down where the restless breakers play
And wish—though all the good it does—
My ship had stayed out where it was.

And when the evening, gray and dim,
Falls on the ocean's misty brim,
With weary heart and quivering lip,
I wish I'd never had no ship.

COMRADES ONLY.

"Milton" Given to Mr. Schnuriger by Miss Janes.

The residents of a certain retired street awoke one morning to find a small shop sprung into existence, mushroom fashion, in their midst. The neighborhood was not peopled by the upper ten, yet it grumbled not a little to find its shabby gentility in such close contact to a shop—and a dairy at that. ...

"Fifty, you don't say? I've often wondered, but—Jimmie, stop wetting a finger every time you turn a page of that album. You've left a great thumb mark on every page, you wicked boy. Stop, or I'll whip you."

"No, you won't," nonchalantly retorted Jimmie, continuing to moisten his thumb in order to make the pages turn more easily.

"Did you hear me, Jimmie Richards?"

"Yes, ma."

"Well, you better mind, then. Where was I, Mrs. Stillwell? O, about Luridy Janes' age. According to that, her mother must be nearly a hundred. Awful homely old woman, isn't she?—uncultivated too. Why, what do you think? The other day, says she to me, 'I've been tryin' to persuade Luridy to take dancin' lessons—one is invited out so much more when one dances.' But Luridy says, says she: 'Don't you think it's most too late for me to learn to dance? I'm going on fifty.'"

"I should say!" exclaimed Mrs. Stillwell, who was eyeing Jimmie nervously. He had removed all the bric-a-brac from the mantels, tables and brackets, and had made a Noah's ark procession of the articles, two and two, that stretched clear across the room.

"Jimmie Richards!" cried his mother, "you just put them things back. He don't mean any harm, Mrs. Stillwell. Boys will be boys. Jimmie, mind me this instant."

"Yes, ma," he replied without the smallest idea of obeying.

There was an ominous silence of one minute, then Jimmie rent the air with a piteous howl.

"There, now, you'll disobey me again, will you?"

She thrust him into a chair beside her. Mrs. Stillwell replaced her bric-a-brac, and then the two women resumed their comments, but this time upon people not concerned in this narration.

Lurida, in the meantime, was forming the acquaintance of the shopkeeper, who seemed more like a gentleman of high standing than like a dairyman. He had placed the five cents' worth of milk ...

... as long as no price was attached—but never a check greeted his expectant eyes.

"If I were only a rag-picker," he had repeated over and over, "they would make me a hero."

Stern necessity had forced him to go into some business, and a friend had offered him the city agency of his dairy products. So it came about that destiny had made him "the butter-man of our square." When well settled in the new place, he smiled a grave, amused little smile, and said to himself:

"Well, this will do for present needs, but the publishers will have to come to terms some day, for I shall write, write until I am called back to heaven, and if they have paper and pen there, I have no doubt but that I shall still continue through all time."

Not long after he opened his dairy depot, he wrote a story that seemed to him to be of stirring interest. It was a graphic romance, founded upon a certain Indian massacre which devastated an island in Humboldt Bay, California, some fifty years before. A few weeks after it was sent away, it was returned to him with a note which said:

"We would advise you to stick to butter-making. It may pay you far better than literature."

Whether the message was meant to be offensive or not, he could scarcely tell. It might have come from the weary "reader" of the great publishing house; that over-worked individual who continually felt the humiliating certainty that every thing in the literary profession below the "great lights," was an everlasting grind for which there was no compensation. Schnuriger gave the writer the benefit of the doubt—and even went so far as to say compassionately: "Poor devil!"

Miss Janes' daily calls had established somewhat of a friendly footing between them. He no longer looked upon her as a homely old girl of too youthful proclivities, as he had at first. Indeed, he had found her interesting from many standpoints, and he rather enjoyed his conversations with her. It had not gone far enough for him to ...

WEDNESDAY, April 14.—In the Senate Mr. Cullom explained the provisions of his Inter-State Commerce bill. The resignation of Mr. Jackson, of Tennessee, who has accepted the appointment of United States Judge of the Sixth circuit, was received. The bill for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein, was considered. In the House the Hurd-Romeis contested election case was decided by a vote of 168 to 105 that Romeis (Rep.) should retain his seat. The Agricultural Appropriation bill was passed and the River and Harbor bill made the unfinished business.

FROM WASHINGTON.

IT was shown by the April report of the National Department of Agriculture issued on the 10th, that there was a reduction of five per cent. from last year in the area seeded to winter wheat, Illinois leading the decrease. California exhibits the best condition.

JOSEPH PULITZER, of New York, resigned his seat in Congress on the 10th, preferring to give his whole attention to the World.

REPORTS of the 10th state that many telegrams have been received in Washington from Knights of Labor asking for speedy action on the Curtin resolution for Congressional investigation into the Southwestern strikes.

THE following nominations were sent to the Senate by the President on the 12th: Howell E. Jackson, of Tennessee, to be Circuit Judge of the United States for the Sixth Judicial Circuit, vice John Baxter, deceased; Frank H. Dyer, to be Marshal of the United States for the Territory of Utah.

THE appointment of Brigadier-General Miles as successor to Brigadier-General Crook in the command of the Military Department of the Arizona was made recently.

THE condition of Secretary Manning was improved slightly on the 12th. His nearest friends say that he will not attempt to resume his duties at the Treasury Department again, but will probably go abroad.

THERE were 493,888 standard silver dollars issued from the mints during the week ended on the 10th. The issue during the corresponding period last year was 196,498.

THE nomination of Orlando W. Powers, of Michigan, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah, has been withdrawn by President Cleveland.

IN the treasury at Washington the net gold coin and bullion on the 13th was $153,[illegible], an increase of $27,422,938 since July last. The amount of standard silver dollars in circulation, out of a total coinage of $226,946,121, was $52,264,382.

THE United States has been requested by the Argentine Republic to recall its Minister to Buenos Ayres, Bayless W. Hanna, of Indiana.

AN address was issued on the 11th by Joseph H. Reale, president of the American Agricultural and Dairying Association, to "the farmers and dairymen of the United States," in which he affirms that the enemies of the dairy and of the consumers of butter are organizing to defeat the movement in behalf of honest industry and pure food. He calls upon the farmers of America to organize at once, adopt resolutions and bring their direct influence to bear upon Congress.

THE EAST.

AT Lawrence, Mass., the Pemberton cotton mills were destroyed by fire on the 10th. The loss was about $90,000, and one life was lost. In 1860 a factory on the same site was burned, and 115 persons lost their lives.

NEAR Reading, Pa., Frank Endy, aged twenty-nine years, died on the 10th from the effects of a scratch on the hand by a cat.

THE failure of Roger Brothers, proprietors of a flouring-mill at Bristol, Pa., occurred on the 10th for $250,000.

THE death of Thaddeus Fairbanks, the scale inventor, who was knighted by the Emperor of Austria, occurred on the 12th at St. Johnsbury, Vt., in his ninetieth year.

THE death of John H. Noyes, the founder of the Oneida Community, near Utica, N. Y., occurred on the 13th at Niagara Falls, Ont. He was born at Brattleboro, Vt., in 1811, and was a cousin of ex-President Hayes.

BECAUSE of ill-health the aged wife of Rev. R. T. Smith, a retired Baptist minister of Le Roy, N. Y., committed suicide on the 13th by jumping into a well.

IN the Pennsylvania coke regions all the coal-mine operators on the 13th granted the advance demanded by the men.

FOR alleged bribery in the Broadway Surface-railroad franchise eleven more New York City aldermen were arrested and placed under bail on the 13th.

DR. J. H. ARNETT, superintendent of the American Express Company, died at Niagara Falls on the 14th at the age of seventy years.

TWO FLOWING oil wells were developed in the Grand valley district, ten miles from Titusville, Pa., on the 14th, and producers were flocking there in great numbers.

WEST AND SOUTH.

FIRE on the 12th gutted the Boston Block at Minneapolis, Minn., in which were located the post-office and business firms. The contents of the post-office were removed, but the library of the Bar Association was consumed. The total loss was about $225,000.

A CONFERENCE was held at Lansing by the Michigan Greenbackers on the 13th. The executive committee was reorganized and resolutions were adopted inviting laboring men to join in their movement.

IT was decided by the coroner's jury at East St. Louis on the 13th to hold the deputy sheriffs responsible for the recent shooting affair at that place. A large number of business men met in the court-house and set on foot a movement for arbitration of the strike between the citizens, the Knights of Labor and the railroads. A STRIKE was inaugurated by two thousand tailors at Milwaukee on the 13th because the employers refused to pay the same wages for eight hours' work as they had been paying for ten.

AT Jamestown, D. T., a cyclone on the 14th destroyed seven buildings and leveled trees and fences. No one was injured.

IN a grammar school at North Columbus, O., the pupils struck on the 14th for more recess time, and left the school in a body.

ON Sunday evening, May 2, Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, will commence a series of meetings in Chicago, in the rink where Rev. Sam Jones held his services. Mr. Sankey will accompany Mr. Moody, and they will be preceded by Mr. Sayford, the evangelist, aided by Mr. Towner, the singer.

GOVERNOR OGLESBY has appointed Dr. John Casewell, of Chicago, to be State Veterinarian.

IN a field at Paragould, Ark., Mrs. Thorp and her little daughter were burned to death on the 14th, their clothes catching fire from burning stalks.

FOURTEEN men who were hiding in the swamp and who had sworn to burn the depot were captured on the 14th by the militia stationed at East St. Louis. The threats of incendiarism against the men engaged in working for the railroads were being carried out, the house of Benjamin Frey, an engineer, being fired, but the family awoke in time to extinguish the flames. The railroads were rapidly resuming traffic.

THE towns of St. Cloud, Sauk Rapids and Rice's Station, Minn., were devastated by a cyclone on the afternoon of the 14th, hundreds of homes being wrecked and several persons killed. It was stated that at St. Cloud and Sauk Rapids thirty people were dead, while the list of the injured embraced fifty names. At Rice's Station every house was reported to have been destroyed, and a number of citizens were killed or injured.

A CYCLONE visited the town of Coon Rapids, Ia., at 4:30 p. m., on the 14th, the result being the death of a boy and the destruction of forty or more buildings. At Atlantic, Rockwell City and Fonda much damage was also done.

THE sum of $5,000 was on the 14th appropriated by the Ohio Legislature for the erection of monuments and tablets on the battle-field of Gettysburg.

SECRETARY TURNER, of the Knights of Labor, received a letter on the 14th from T. V. Powderly saying that a circular should go out at once to the order asking them to turn every dollar they could raise into the hands of the Southwestern strikers in support of the fight against the Gould system.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

THE powder magazine at Colon, Cuba, was entered by five thieves a few days ago. During their operations one lighted a match, causing an explosion, which killed seven persons outright, wounded thirty-eight others and wrecked twelve houses.

INDIANS killed two American prospectors recently near Nacosari, Mex.

REPORTS received on the 10th show that Gladstone's Irish plan is treated with scant courtesy in Austria-Hungary, is condemned as dangerous in Germany, is enthusiastically received in France and is watched with the keenest anxiety in Russia.

THE wreck of the steamer Taiaroa, plying along the coast of New Zealand, occurred in a recent gale, with the loss of twenty-nine lives.

A DISPATCH received from Panama recently states that an explosion on the steamer Colombi, near Tumaco, killed fifteen persons and injured twenty-two others.

WHILE riding in a cab in London on the 14th the Earl of Shaftesbury shot himself dead.

BECAUSE the Chamber of Deputies rejected the Government proposals modifying the primary education laws the Dutch Ministry resigned on the 13th.

THE date fixed upon for the second reading of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule bill in the House of Commons is May 10.

LATER.

THE latest reports on the 15th from the cyclone disaster at St. Cloud, Sauk Rapids and Rice's Station, in Minnesota, showed that the loss of life would reach nearly if not quite one hundred, and the injured nearly two hundred. At the latter place, out of a wedding party of twenty-seven, ten were killed, including the bridegroom and minister and the mother of the bride, and the others were all injured. The path cut through the city of St. Cloud was six hundred feet wide. A dozen sign [illegible] blown fifteen miles from Sauk Rapids. Reports from Iowa, Missouri and Kansas tell of destruction to life and property.

NINE persons were killed on the 15th and a number were injured at Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica, by the collapse of a mansion.

MR. POWDERLY on the 15th issued a circular to the Knights of Labor calling for generous contributions to aid the strikers. In Kansas and Texas the strike was virtually at an end, many of the old hands having returned to work, as they said, for good. At East St. Louis order prevailed and trains were running.

THE North Carolina Democratic State Executive Committee met at Raleigh on the 15th and called a State Convention to meet at Raleigh on August 25.

THE running of street-cars by electricity was begun on the 15th at Montgomery, Ala., the machinery working perfectly.

DURING a thunder-storm on the 15th at Louisiana, Mo., two men were struck by lightning, one being killed and the other fatally injured.

THE furniture factory of F. Mayer & Co., in Chicago, employing nearly three hundred men, was closed on the 15th because of a demand for twenty per cent. advance in wages and an eight hour day.

A CYCLONE swept over Wise County, Tex., on the 15th, destroying many houses, killing numerous live stock and injuring twenty persons.

ALL the street-car lines in Baltimore except two were "tied-up" on the 15th by order of the Knights of Labor.

IN the United States Senate on the 15th Mr. Logan spoke in support of the movement for open executive sessions. The Pension bill and the Inter-State Commerce bill were further considered. Bills were reported to establish a sub-treasury at Louisville and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma. In the House bills were reported: By Mr. Singleton, to accept from the Vanderbilt heirs and Mrs. Grant certain objects of art presented by foreign governments to General Grant; by Mr. Caldwell, a Senate bill to fix the day for the meeting of electors of President and Vice-President and to regulate the counting of the votes; by Mr. Hill, for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma; by Mr. Cobb, repealing the pre-emption, timber-culture and desert land laws. The River and Harbor bill was further discussed.

KILLED BY THE SCORE.

Minnesota Villages Almost Totally Demolished by a Cyclone—Between Fifty and Seventy-Five Dead Bodies Found, and the Search Has Not Ended—Great Damage to Property—Sad Ending of a Marriage Feast—Eight of the Guests Killed.

ST. CLOUD, MINN., April 16.—So far from being exaggerated, it is certain that the first reports of the horrible work of Wednesday's cyclone did not reach the full measure of the calamity. It is now known that fifty-eight people have been killed—viz., thirteen at St. Cloud, thirty-three at Sauk Rapids and twelve on the road to Rice's. At least one hundred more are still on the list of injured, and some, it is certain, will only be removed from that list to be added to the roll of the dead.

All of that portion of the village of St. Cloud northwest of the bridge presents a scene of almost total obliteration. Where were the scenes of active business, to-day horror and total destruction reign supreme. The fine passenger and freight depot of the Northern Pacific railroad lies piled up, a huge mass of ground-up lumber. The school-house was rent into the finest pieces imaginable by the destroyer, and, like all the buildings in the line of the storm, is far beyond repair. Fortunately school had been adjourned for vacation last Friday, and no one was in the building at the time. The court-house is a conglomeration of building material fully ten feet deep, which is being rapidly cleared away by the workmen. Nearly all the records are saved intact in the vaults, except a few that were lying loose in the building and in use at the time the cyclone passed through. It was here that the county auditor and register of deeds were killed while working at their post of duty. Sheriff Quinn is working hard with a posse of men to secure the property belonging to the county. Judge of Probate [illegible] received a wound upon his skull in the fall of this building, but he will probably live. The storm seemed to have caused the building to collapse, covering all that was in it at the time beneath its dreadful weight. The buildings did not take fire, or the loss of life and the damage to property would have been much greater.

Sauk Rapids is a sickening sight. The storm first struck J. A. Stanton's large flouring mill and warehouse, completely demolishing and razing it to the ground. All that remains to show what was once the pride of the village stood in a shapeless mass of splinters strewn in every direction. Barrels of flour and sacks of wheat lie as they fell, hurled to a great distance. One-half of the fine wagon bridge across the Mississippi was hurled from its piers, and all that remains is a mass of twisted iron rods and a few timbers.

Foote & Buckman's lumber yard was next struck. The lumber and timbers were twisted in pieces. Their sawmill escaped. The black mass of earth, water and debris next took thirteen freight cars from the track. All that remains of five of them is a pile of naked frames lying some distance away. One car was carried bodily forty feet. The telegraph poles were twisted to splinters. The swath mown is eighty rods wide. The bank was the only building left standing and the top was taken off from that. Seven business blocks were totally demolished. No other has been the wrecking of the town that it is believed here that it will not be rebuilt.

The course of the cyclone after leaving Sauk Rapids was northeasterly through the towns of Wartab, Langola and Buckman, the latter being in Morrison county. Reports from this section of the country are very meager, but enough is learned to show that death and destruction marks the course of the cyclone. The fine brick buildings of Senator [illegible] Buckman were completely demolished and one man—name not learned—reported killed. In Langola, the house of John Wheeler was destroyed. The family escaped by running away. In the same vicinity the house of James McCulloch was blown away. In Buckman town the house of August Delonore was demolished and the whole family, including several children, is reported killed by a farmer coming from that vicinity. [illegible], of Wartab town, nine miles from Sauk Rapids, saw the approaching storm and got all of his family into a root-house underground, but the cyclone passed by close at hand without injuring his property. The sign on the Sauk Rapids depot was carried about fourteen miles and found near Rice Station.

The rumor of the destruction of a wedding party near Rice station forms one of the saddest features of the wholesale destruction of life and property wrought in this section. The party was assembled at the residence of John Schulz, a farmer, to celebrate the wedding of his daughter, Mamie, and the ceremony was performed about one o'clock, by Rev. Gustavus Smith. The afternoon was spent in social enjoyment, and at four o'clock the party, only a few guests having departed, gathered about the wedding feast. It was a happy party of nearly thirty people celebrating the bridal festivities for the favorite daughter of the house. The cyclone came, and in the space of five minutes the house was converted into kindling-wood and scattered all over the farm. The nuptial viands were distributed over several acres, and of the happy party of a few minutes before eight were corpses and many others injured, several of whom will die. There was not a building left in which the few survivors could care for those not past help. The bridegroom was killed outright, but the bride was only injured.

Mrs. J. Schultz and her son, the mother and brother of the bride, are dead. Rev. Mr. Smith, of St. Cloud, who had just performed the marriage ceremony, was killed, as was also his wife. Mrs. Tomeldt, J. Sodge, Mrs. Zeimans, all guests at the wedding feast, are dead, while J. Cutler, Mr. Zeimans, J. Schultz and Mr. Treber are all so seriously injured that they will probably die. Rev. Mr. Tolar, of Royalton, had one leg broken. F. Gondult and son were badly injured. The party numbered twenty-seven, all told.

DES MOINES, IA., April 16.—Reports from the tornado in Western Iowa show that the storm ranged from Taylor County north to Pocahontas County. Four persons are reported killed and about twenty-five seriously injured. From fifty to seventy-five dwellings are demolished and large damage done to barns, stock and trees.

Counterfeiters Captured.

NEW YORK, April 12.—Ramon Arjona, a wealthy merchant of Aspinwall, and an interpreter named Reiz, have been arrested here charged with belonging to a party of Spanish-Americans who are preparing to flood the Republic of Bolivia with spurious bank notes. In Arjona's room was found a trunk containing $200,000 in ten dollar notes on the Bank of Bolivia.

Three Men Drowned.

RICHMOND, VA., April 12.—Information has been received here of the drowning of three members of a surveying party by the upsetting of a boat while crossing the New river at Sunny Side, W. Va.

Terrific Powder Explosion.

HAVANA, April 12.—Mail advices from Colon, Cuba, of March 30 say: Five thieves entered the magazine here recently for the purpose of stealing powder. During their operations a light was let fall, causing an explosion, killing seven persons, wounding thirty-eight others and destroying twelve houses.

NEW ORLEANS, April 12.—The change of gauge which is to be made on all the railways in the South was commenced on Saturday by the Queen City & Crescent system, 200 miles of track on the New Orleans division [illegible]

POWDERLY'S APPEAL.

Knights of Labor Called Upon to Contribute to the Assistance of Striking Brethren—How It Is Proposed to Distribute the Money Which Will Come In.

PHILADELPHIA, April 16.—General Master Workman Powderly, of the Knights of Labor, yesterday addressed the following circular to members of the order:

"NOBLE ORDER OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR OF AMERICA. To the Order Wherever Found—Greeting: You have all read of the great strike on the Gould lines of railway in the Southwest; its history is being written day by day. It makes but little difference now whether the men of the Southwest acted wisely or not. Let us pass that part of the affair over, for it, too, has passed into history.

"The general executive board of the order attempted to settle the trouble and restore harmony. Agreements were made with them by Jay Gould, but when the board reached St. Louis Mr. Hoxie would not treat with them. Not that alone, but he positively refused to employ Knights of Labor, whether they had been active in the strike or not. It now becomes the part of every man and woman in the order to take up the fight of the men of the Southwest, and assist them to the full extent of their means. They have been idle for nearly two months. They have had a most trying ordeal to go through, and are in need of funds. It requires no eloquence or rhetoric to plead the cause of these suffering people. They require aid, and it becomes our duty to extend that aid as quickly as it is possible for us to do so. Send every dollar you can spare to the general secretary and treasurer, who will at once forward it to the men at St. Louis for distribution. Remember the men out there do not ask for charity, they do not ask at all. It is your executive board that makes the appeal in their behalf. He who gives quickly gives doubly. Act at once. Another appeal may be sent to you, and we ask of you to prepare for it now. We must be judged by our actions in this matter. Do not pass resolutions condemning capital, for we are not fighting capital. Do not antagonize the contest we have before us. Let us make a friend of every man who has suffered through monopoly. This battle against the man who represents monopoly must be fought out manfully. Watch his actions everywhere. Keep an eye on the doings of Congress. Urge the committee that has been appointed to do its duty fearlessly. Strengthen their hands. Give them every aid.

"In conclusion, let us again ask that you send at once every dollar you can at present raise to uphold the men who are now out along the lines of the Southwest system of Gould's railways. Do not delay, and, at the same time, make ready to bring the whole power of the order to bear upon the man who wrecks railroads, homes, fortunes and lives in his greed for gold. Let us determine to have it go into history that the men of 1886 struck as grandly for liberty as the men of 1776. The men of 1776 broke the power of an army and dethroned the King. The power which they wrested from the hands of a King was not so great as that which is now held by one man, who, through the corrupt use of money, has brought manufacturer and workman to ruin. The power of the King has passed away. The power of wealth is passing away, and it must now be determined whether honest men shall rule or whether illegitimate wealth shall rule.

"T. V. POWDERLY,
"General Master Workman."

A portion of Mr. Powderly's letter will go out by circular, but it was not given to the press. It is addressed to the Knights, and is as follows:

"Make every preparation to place $1,000,000 where it can be used in this fight with Jay Gould. Neither enter into any new quarrels anywhere. Keep out of disputes and trouble if possible. Turn every energy and effort toward the consummation of the present question. Jay Gould is said to have violated the laws of this land in a thousand places. Let us see to it that he is punished for it. Do not rush into print and say what you intend to do; keep still as death. If we mean to act we can do so without telling the world of it."

The letter of General Master Workman Powderly to Secretary Turner asking for contributions from the order in general throughout the country in aid of the strikers is said by the executive committee to be the result of a unanimous demand upon him by the assemblies of the order to place the strike upon a broad basis—the support of the entire organization—by formal circular.

Mr. Hayes is of the opinion that $100,000 will be raised in this way, which will every cent be spent if necessary in order to carry on the fight. The money will be used in the payment of rent, and the purchase of food and clothing for the strikers. Workmen who are not Knights of Labor, but who are out on strike will be furnished with funds and treated the same as though members of the organization.

THE PAYNE INQUIRY.

The Committee of the Ohio Legislature to Investigate the Charges of Bribery in the Election of Senator Payne Makes Its Report.

COLUMBUS, O., April 16.—The legislative committee appointed to investigate charges of bribery in electing Senator Payne in January, 1884, reported last evening. The majority report, signed by three Republicans, is long, and is accompanied by 800 pages of evidence. Its important points of which are cited to show that while none of the members of the present General Assembly have been conclusively impeached, a case has been made as to the corrupt [illegible], and the testimony fully justifies that it be certified at once to the United States Senate for action by that body in considering Senator Payne's right to his seat.

The majority report is somewhat sensational and has caused a great stir especially the evidence of Hale, which [illegible] tering J. Huntington's [illegible] and finding stacks of bills more money piled up than he ever saw in the bank of which he is director. Huntington has been regarded as the purser of the alleged Payne fund.

The minority report, signed by two Democratic members, is devoted to arguments to impeach the most damaging witnesses; and, while admitting that there have been many newspaper rumors and much testimony of a general nature as to corruption and bribery, that there is no direct evidence, and that the connecting link is cut in every case, so that they hold that such evidence should not be certified to the United States Senate to blacken the character of any man.

Bogus Butter.

WASHINGTON, April 16.—Joseph H. Reale, president of the American Agricultural and Dairying Association, has issued an address to "the farmers and dairymen of the United States," in which he affirms that the enemies of the dairy and of the consumers of butter are organizing to defeat the movement in behalf of honest industry and pure food. He calls upon the farmers of America to organize at once, adopt resolutions, and bring their direct influence to bear upon Congress.

Caceres Elected President of Peru.

LIMA, April 16.—The election returns at hand indicate that Caceres is elected to the Presidency. Lima and Callao voted unanimously in his favor.

The Green Monster Causes a Crime.

BOSTON, April 16.—Caleb M. Guild, of Somerville, aged seventy-six years, shot his wife, aged seventy-two years, and then killed himself Wednesday night. The couple were separated for twelve years and had been living together only six months. The cause of this suicide and attempted murder seems to have been an insane jealousy on the old man's part.

TARIFF REVISION.

Synopsis of the Majority and Minority Reports of the Ways and Means Committee on the New Bill.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—The majority report on the new tariff bill, which will be reported to the House to-day, says that the average rate of the import tax in 1885 was a little over forty-seven per cent., the highest rate paid in any year since 1868, and above the average rate of the war period from 1862 to 1868. The treasury receipts for the year were $323,690,706, and there is a justifiable expectation that the receipts will never fall below that sum without a reduction of taxation. It may be safely estimated that the annual surplus will exceed $90,000,000. The reductions to result from the proposed bill are within this estimated surplus, and a little exceed $24,000,000 on the basis of last year's importations. The report says:

"Some of the materials upon which great industries are built, such as wood, salt, hemp and wood, are placed on the free list. In the last twenty years we have obtained from tax on imported wood an amount estimated at less than $20,000,000 to encourage felling our trees and destroying our forests. In a much shorter period we have given more than 35,000,000 acres of land in bounty to encourage the planting of other trees. The tax on imported salt is remitted to those who catch and trade in fish and to those who pack meats for the foreign markets. It is believed that this tax should be remitted to all. * * * For nearly a century, with only one interval, hemp has been protected, and yet its production has decreased because its culture under protection was unprofitable, while the consumption of articles manufactured from this and kindred fibers has enormously increased, until now the annual tax on imported hemp, manila and similar fibers is several times greater than the annual value of all the hemp in the United States. * * * The price of wool has been downward for many years. It declined when the tax was highest and protection greatest. From the statements of the Ohio and other wool-growers' associations it appears that the market price of wool is not three-fourths of the actual cost of production; but with the existing protective rate of ten cents on the pound the price is still ten cents below the price at which it can be profitably grown in the great wool-growing States of Ohio and Pennsylvania. It appears, therefore, that the attempt to make wool growing profitable by the use of the taxing power has not been successful, while the tax has been the great national hindrance to the woolen manufacturing industry as well as a most grievous burden upon all buyers of woolen clothing."

The duty collected on wool during 1885 was $1,161,296, and the specific duty collected on woolen goods was $11,500,000. This is to be removed, leaving in existence an ad valorem duty of thirty-five per cent. on woolen goods as a protection to the manufacturers and for revenue purposes. The report continues:

"In some of the schedules wherein rates are proposed to be reduced, especially woolen and flax, hemp, jute or linens, the industries are left with substantially the same if not greater advantages than under existing laws. Other articles the rates on which are to be reduced, as cotton yarns, threads and coarser cotton cloths, and sugar, are now dutiable at unnecessarily and unreasonably high rates. These will find compensation in the burdens of taxation sought to be removed for reductions far greater than any proposed by the bill. * * * Sugar with the present low price is left at the high but revenue rate, equivalent to sixty-six per centum, at the present higher rate we collect on sugar more than one-fourth of all revenue derived from customs."

The minority report, which was prepared by Mr. McKinley, of Ohio, says:

"There is no attempt in this bill to equalize the duties upon imported goods on any just principle, or to make equitable reductions throughout the tariff list, of thirty-one or more articles dutiable at from ten to 250 per cent. not one is dealt with in this bill, while other articles, upon which is imposed a duty of from ten to twenty per cent., are cut down or transferred to the free list."

The minority report charges that while the metal, glass, pottery, sugar, rice and other important industries were given ample opportunity to defend themselves before the committee, the wool-growers were led to believe from the bill first before the committee that no adverse action would be had touching their interests. They were therefore not before the committee in an official way, and those who were heard spoke for the restoration of the duty of 1867 without dreaming that the inadequate protection they now enjoyed was to be swept from them. Going on to speak of the wool industry, the report says:

"In 1860 sheep in the United States numbered a little over 22,000,000; in 1881 the number had reached 50,000,000. In 1860 the clip was 60,000,000; in 1883 it reached 320,000,000. The duty of 1867, which gave to wool-growing its greatest encouragement and induced the farmers to increase their flocks and spend their means for the finest varieties of sheep and for their care and improvement, and which finally made the American wools the best in the world, adapted to all the use of manufactures, has added nothing to the cost of wool to the manufacturer or consumer; on the contrary, the cost has been greatly cheapened. In 1867 the price was fifty-one cents, in 1870 it was forty-six cents, in 1875 forty-three cents. There has been a steady reduction until now it is so low as to be temporarily unprofitable. The decay of sheep husbandry in the United States would be a National calamity. It would place our manufacturers at the mercy of the foreign producers. This is an industry which can not be built up in a day; it has required years of care and cost to reach its present development, and sound policy demands its continuance and encouragement. * * * The minority view the bill as the first step toward a reversal of a revenue system founded by the fathers, and the substitution of the British system of tariff for revenue only."

In conclusion the report strongly dissents from the doctrine that the first duties to be safely discarded are those upon raw materials, and declares that the bill is the child of party necessity.

Mrs. Logan to Be Boycotted.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—The latest instance of threatened boycotting is said to be given in an anonymous letter received by Mrs. Logan. Mrs. Logan is one of the ladies interested in the Garfield memorial hospital, for the benefit of which it is proposed to give the calico ball at the Chinese legation building. The writer warns her that if she goes under the roof of the Chinese minister it will be an indication that she sympathizes with Chinese immigration, and the laboring men of the country will, in consequence, boycott General Logan in his political aspirations.

Buried by Falling Walls.

BOSTON, April 12.—Fire broke out in the picker-room of the great Pemberton mills at Lawrence, Mass., Saturday and spread rapidly until the whole building was in flames. After the fire had burned an hour, gutting the picker building completely, the rear walls gave way. Ten firemen were struck by the debris and injured. George McKenzie died an hour after being extricated from the debris. The loss is about $90,000, against which there was an insurance of $86,000. The Pemberton mills are famous for the awful disaster which occurred at their fall on January 10, 1860.

Forty-One Days Without Food.

LA CROSSE, WIS., April 12.—Belle Langan, nine years old, has lived without food forty-one days. She craves no food, and refuses nourishment of any kind. The case mystifies the physicians. The little girl is now beginning to exhibit signs of weakness.

Portions of the State were visited by a severe wind and snow-storm a few days ago. At Port Huron the storm was the worst in years, and business was almost entirely suspended. At Lansing the blizzard was the worst of the season. At Bay City a strong north wind raised the water higher than for years, and docks were submerged. A passenger train was blown from the track seven miles east of Port Huron, three coaches being lifted from the track and buried into a ditch. Eleven people were injured.

The post-office at Homer, Calhoun County, and the one at Northville, Wayne County, have been raised to the Presidential class.

Rev. James Cooper, D. D., district secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, died at his residence in Detroit the other morning. Deceased was born in Boston January 2, 1836. He leaves a widow and six children.

Isaac Pennington and wife of Eagle, Clinton County, celebrated their sixty-seventh marriage anniversary a few days ago.

Early the other morning a fire broke out in the former threshing-machine shops of the Upton Manufacturing Company, at Battle Creek, destroying nearly three hundred feet of the sheds, with a loss of $3,000 worth of lumber. Total loss [illegible]; no insurance. Cause incendiary.

Benjamin Draper died very suddenly of heart disease at St. Ignace, Mackinac County, early the other morning. He was a candidate for supervisor at the recent election and it was thought that the excitement and work at the polls induced the attack.

MY SHIP COMES IN.

'Neath summer's sun and Winter's blast
While the long years swept slowly past,
I waited, looking out to sea,
For sure my ship would come to me.

Ah, sure! for with this morning's sun
My glad heart heard her signal gun,
And safely down the sheltering bay
I saw my ship come in to-day.

And then I learned that she had been
Eleven weeks in quarantine,
While yellow fever sank the crew
Deep in its complementary blue.

And long before, while tempest tossed,
Her masts and rigging had been lost,
And then the crew, a frightened horde,
Had flung the cargo overboard.

And then a steamer of the line
Laid hold upon this ship of mine,
And towed her through the waters wild,
And tearful claims for salvage filed.

And then I learned the companies
That had insured my ship for me
Had gone up higher than a kite,
Bursted while open out of sight.

And so again I sit all day
Down where the restless breakers play
And wish—though all the good it does—
My ship had stayed out where it was.

And when the evening, gray and dim,
Falls on the [illegible]
With weary [illegible] and quivering lip,
I wish I'd [illegible] had no ship.

COMRADES ONLY.

The "Mitten" Given to Mr. Schnurriger by Miss Janes.

The residents of a certain retired street awoke one morning to find a small shop sprung into existence, mushroom fashion, in their midst. The neighborhood was not peopled by the upper ten, yet it grudged not a little to find its shabby gentility in such close contact to a shop and a dairy at that. Yes, there hung the flaunting sign, "Xavier Schnurriger, Dairy Products."

"Why couldn't his name have been John Smith?" querulously remarked the old lady across the way, as she established herself behind the window blind and prepared to take items. "For my part, I don't see any use in names that nobody can pronounce without calling in a dentist afterward," said Mrs. Janes' daughter, an unmarried female somewhere between forty and fifty years of age.

"I wish the man himself would come to the door," continued Mrs. Janes. "A shop in our square! Really, I've lived well on to fifty years, Larida—that was before your time—and this is the first shopkeeper who has had the bold face to open a place of business here right in the very house, too, where Mary Frances Perkins' first husband's sister lived for years. Our square is not exactly the most fashionable one, Larida, but it is eminently respectable and cultivated—no talk of shops. Well, I never! Larida, just come here for a moment and look out."

Miss Larida let her knitting drop to the floor, as she hastily moved over to the window and opened another slat in the persienne, close to her mother's.

"Why, mother, he is young, isn't he? Good-looking, too, in spite of his name. He must have a great deal of pluck to open a store here. His looks would give him a presentation anywhere. I hope his grammar is correct—for it would be a terrible shock if he turned out to be one who said 'them people' or 'usen't,' or 'git out o' thar.' Really, we must encourage him by giving him our patronage. I'll buy to-day's milk there."

"Larida!" exclaimed Mrs. Janes, too astonished to say any thing for a moment; then: "My dear, I wish you would not go on at such a rate. You talk as if we were intending to give him an invitation to call upon us. Invite the shopkeeper in our square? never—no, not if he was as beautiful as the Elwick shepherd."

"How sweetly appropriate your allusions always are, mother," sighed Larida. She was accustomed to these inconsequent comparisons in her mother's speeches, but they never failed to irritate her, for Larida made a great point of culture.

"Larida Janes, anybody would think you were still in your teens to hear you talk and sigh in that sentimental way."

"Well, so I am young, mother, in my feelings. I am going over to get some milk. I want to see what he is like," and the adventurous Larida, donning a hat lined with red, that cast a most unpleasant tinge upon her high cheek bones and her somewhat prominent nose. Taking the milk can from its hook in the kitchen, she went across to the new store to satisfy her natural curiosity.

"If there isn't Laridy Janes a-going to that young man a-ready!" said Mrs. Stillwell, the next door neighbor, to the English pug dog in her lap. "Well, Romeo, that frightful old maid is never happy without there is a man [illegible] at her heels. If I was she, I'd [illegible] settle down—she's fifty if she's a day."

In censuring Larida's fondness for masculine attention, Mrs. Stillwell did not stop to reflect that she herself had recently buried her fourth husband, and that a certain quota of coquetry is understood to have been practiced in order to entrap four spouses. "Charitable comparison is a stranger among neighbors—it is always the mote in the other person's eye that meets our thoughts."

"Ding-a-ling-a-ling"—quavered Mrs. Stillwell's front door-bell at that moment. Romeo barked with unusual vehemence, while his mistress, with a startled flush, stepped to a mirror to see if the parting of her frizette was exactly in the middle; then, throwing a lavender crape shawl about her shoulders, she stepped to the door. It was only Mrs. Richards, who kept a private boarding-house next door but one; and who had brought her impish six-year-old son with her.

"Did you ever!" exclaimed the visitor breathlessly, when she sunk into the depths of the late Mr. Stillwell's favorite easy-chair—an act that seemed little short of sacrilege to the bereaved widow. "Did you ever! Laridy Janes over there already!" indicating the shop with a crook of her ebony finger.

"Just like her," said Mrs. Stillwell, as she moved a little nearer to her caller, in order not to lose a word of the lively gossip that would be forthcoming. Mrs. Richards had a vivid imagination quite equal to the extravagant tales of the Arabian Nights, except that her histories were brimming over with malice that scorched and deadened wherever they touched, like a stream of molten lava.

"Just like her," repeated Mrs. Stillwell. "No minds like the old [illegible]. She's fifty if she's a day."

"Fifty, you don't say? I've often wondered, but—Jimmie, stop wetting a finger every time you turn a page of that album. You've left a great thumb mark on every page, you wicked boy. Stop, or I'll whip you."

"No, you won't," nonchalantly retorted Jimmie, continuing to moisten his thumb in order to make the pages turn more easily.

"Did you hear me, Jimmie Richards?"

"Yes, ma."

"Well, you better mind, then. Where was I, Mrs. Stillwell? O, about Laridy Janes' age. According to that, her mother must be nearly a hundred. Awful homely old woman, isn't she?—uncultivated too. Why, what do you think? The other day, says she to me, 'I've been tryin' to persuade Laridy to take dancin' lessons—one is invited out so much more when one dances.' But Laridy says, says she: 'Don't you think it's most too late for me to learn to dance? I'm going on fifty.'"

"I should say!" exclaimed Mrs. Stillwell, who was eyeing Jimmie nervously. He had removed all the bric-a-brac from the mantels, tables and brackets, and had made a Noah's ark procession of the articles, two and two, that stretched clear across the room.

"Jimmie Richards!" cried his mother, "you just put them things back. He don't mean any harm, Mrs. Stillwell. Boys will be boys. Jimmie, mind me this instant."

"Yes, ma," he replied without the smallest idea of obeying.

There was an ominous silence of one minute, then Jimmie rent the air with a piteous howl.

"There, now, you'll disobey me again, will you?"

She thrust him into a chair beside her. Mrs. Stillwell replaced her bric-a-brac, and then the two women resumed their comments, but this time upon people not concerned in this narration.

Larida, in the meantime, was forming the acquaintance of the shopkeeper, who seemed more like a gentleman of high standing than like a dairyman. He had placed the five cents' worth of milk in the can and returned it to her. Still she lingered.

"Curious old girl, that," irreverently thought the proprietor, who was wondering why she did not go. Larida's eyes rested upon the window, in which were tastefully arranged some plants—two palms and a number of tall ferns.

"How pretty your window is. Who would ever have thought of making a store out of this old house. You can't imagine how surprised we were to see a store opened in our square. It is the first time."

"Just because it never had been, did you think it never could be? Is that the theory you follow out in life?" he asked, with a shadow of annoyance in his voice.

"O, well, we thought we were too far up town to suffer from such an invasion," she answered, without taking his feelings into consideration.

"You are too conservative for an American," he answered, quickly. "I have been trying all my life to make that the central idea of my writings—a broader social democracy than we have now. They talk of European aristocracy—there is no country in the world where people are so rigidly exclusive as in America—exclusive to every thing but money. Bah!"

"You write, then?" asked Larida, with renewed interest, looking about the shop interrogatively.

"You wonder why I am here if I write?" he said. "Well, I wouldn't be here if people bought what I wrote. It is one thing to write, and quite another to make money in that calling."

"Are your family going to live here in the house?" inquired Larida, eager to know more of this singular person.

"Family?" he repeated, with a vague look of dismay. "Family? I have none—never had. Fact is, I am both an orphan and a bachelor."

"Then you will have plenty of room here—and quiet," smilingly responded Larida, taking her leave.

"Well, Larida Janes, did you stop to help him tend shop?" tartly demanded Mrs. Janes, when Larida had come into the sitting-room and hung up her hat.

"He's delightful," remarked Larida, ignoring her mother's ill temper. "He talks like a gentleman and he is a writer. I should think he'd be rather lonely, living in that big house all alone. I always pity a man who has no kith nor kin. But, then, perhaps it is better for a writer to live in seclusion and solitude—he has a chance to concentrate his ideas on his work. Why, mother, is anything the matter?"

"Matter!" said Mrs. Janes, sternly, eyeing her daughter over her spectacles. "Matter enough. Did he tell you all that while you were buying the milk? He's a bad young man, take my word for it, Larida, if his tongue runs on like that."

"But, ma, I asked him the questions. He would never have opened his mouth if I hadn't asked him the questions," said Larida, with a vague tone of apology.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed the mother, more disconcerted than ever. "Larida, you are a fool! The neighbors will have it about to-morrow that you have been running after the store young man. Yes, they will; you needn't shake your head—for I saw Mrs. Richards going into Mrs. Stillwell's a while ago. Then the slats of the window blind were moved, so I knew what was going on. We'll hear of this to-morrow, if I am not mistaken. O, Laridy, Laridy, you little fool!"

Xavier Schnurriger was not altogether dependent upon his custom. The fact was, first he was a man of unlimited literary ambition. In the flush of his youth he had edited the college paper. Later, in his twenty-first year, he had been assistant editor of the political organ of which his father was a manager. His father's death at once caused the failure of the paper, and threw the young man out of his position. The brief glory of being one of the "we" on an editorial staff had unfitted him for any other calling in life—in his own estimation. He was not without ability, but the barriers which publishers must necessarily place about themselves for protection left Schnurriger just without the golden bars behind which manuscripts were retained as "available."

"By Jove!" he often grumbled; "if I was a pig-sticker or a rag-picker the world would be agog with my talent. As it is, because I am in easy circumstances, and for the reason that I have had every advantage, they put me down in their black list."

Of course, this was the view of a disappointed aspirant, but it seemed very real to him. Being by nature a man of indomitable perseverance, he never permitted his disappointment to conquer him beyond all hope. For fully ten years he had written his manuscripts, and sent them upon their way with return stamps enclosed to the best magazines first, then down the list, until as long as no price was attached—but never a check greeted his expectant eyes.

"If I were only a rag-picker," he had repeated over and over, "they would make me a hero."

Stern necessity had forced him to go into some business, and a friend had offered him the city agency of his dairy products. So it came about that destiny had made him "the butter-man of our square." When well settled in the new place, he smiled a grave, amused little smile, and said to himself:

"Well, this will do for present needs, but the publishers will have to come to terms some day, for I shall write, write until I am called back to heaven, and if they have paper and pen there, I have no doubt but that I shall still continue through all time."

Not long after he opened his dairy depot, he wrote a story that seemed to him to be of stirring interest. It was a graphic romance, founded upon a certain Indian massacre which devastated an island in Humboldt Bay, California, some fifty years before. A few weeks after it was sent away, it was returned to him with a note which said:

"We would advise you to stick to butter-making. It may pay you far better than literature."

Whether the message was meant to be offensive or not, he could scarcely tell. It might have come from the weary "reader" of the great publishing house; that over-worked individual who continually felt the humiliating certainty that every thing in the literary profession below the "great lights," was an everlasting grind for which there was no compensation. Schnurriger gave the writer the benefit of the doubt—and even went so far as to say compassionately: "Poor devil!"

Miss Janes's daily calls had established somewhat of a friendly footing between them. He no longer looked upon her as a homely old girl of too youthful proclivities, as he had at first. Indeed, he had found her interesting from many standpoints, and he rather enjoyed his conversations with her. It had not gone far enough for him to call upon her—still the intercourse was very friendly.

One morning Larida came in, and found him in a decidedly bad humor; but she knew she had it in her power to dispel the shadows from that morning at least.

"I have been writing to my cousin," she began, "my cousin in New York."

"Strange!" sarcastically murmured Schnurriger, with no great civility.

Miss Larida colored a bit, but persevered, saying: "Yes. Some time ago I mentioned your name. My cousin is the owner of Popper's Magazine, you know."

"You don't mean it," said Schnurriger, with awakening interest.

"My cousin said that he knew of you," continued Larida, "and he asked my honest opinion in the matter. He has always put great reliance in what I say, and as he is immensely interested in the budding genius of the West, it has fallen into my power to bring him into business relations with quite a number of able men and women here. What do you think he asked me? He asked if you were really a butter-maker, and if you intended to go on wasting ink through all eternity."

Schnurriger bit his lip at this sally, and then bent a scrutinizing gaze upon Miss Larida, to see if she understood the cut, and if she was laughing at him. Apparently, she was innocent of all offense, for she continued, this time coloring slightly: "I wrote back that you were gifted with indomitable perseverance, and—well, I'll not tell you the rest. Finally, I wrote to him that none of the neighbors thought that dairying was quite in your line."

"Confound those women!" he growled. "What makes them think I am not a butter-maker?"

"Well," returned Larida with thoughtful reluctance, "I suppose it is because—because—you know you do make outrageous blunders once in a while when people ask you about dairy management; and then, do you remember the day when you sold that young Jersey cow to Mr. Peters, and he made you take off half the price, because he said that old age had made her lose her upper front teeth, and you believed him? Such blunders don't pass unheeded, my friend. Are you offended?"

"Not at all. But now I would like to ask you for the whole of your cousin's criticism."

"You must remember, Mr. Schnurriger, that you are an absolute stranger to my cousin John," said Miss Larida, with visible embarrassment.

"You mean, then, that the criticism is hardly flattering? My feelings are pretty well calloused by this time; I can endure a great deal," he answered, with a curious half laugh.

"Then I shall ask you to drop in this evening and read the letter yourself; it will be easier than telling you," she said, rising to take her leave.

"What will Mrs. Stillwell say, to see you entertaining the shop-keeper? I heard her tell your mother it was a burning shame for her to permit you to speak to such an inferior person."

"If you don't mind it, I am quite sure I don't."

When she had gone he muttered to himself:

"It would be strange if, after all my prejudices against that woman, she should be my stepping-stone to success. I wonder what compensation she expects. I haven't anything to give her but myself. Bah! what an idea. Such an old woman!" In the evening he made his first call across the way. After much persuasion, Miss Larida brought forth the document, of which it will only be necessary to give the extract in question:

"If the man is really a butter-maker, he shows an extraordinary acquisition of knowledge. If he has had every advantage, then his genius is somewhat colorless, or rather overdone. I would give him a lift if I thought it would do him any good; but he is too much like the ordinary swarm that makes life a burden to me now. Perhaps if he cut out the countless historical and mythological allusions which adorn his work; if he reduced the avoirdupois of his figures of speech; if he cut each one of his long-winded sentences into at least three clean, straightforward, manly statements; if he localized his genius, and let the old European highways severely alone; if he searched for hitherto unwritten bits of legendary history that must be floating about that new western country—if he did this, I might look at his work. For the present style I have no available time. So, Larida, use your judgment; you know I am always willing to prop up your weakling proteges when they deserve propping."

Underneath Larida's plain exterior there ran a vein of earnest purpose, which had made her long to be of some use in the world. Long ago she had found that it was not ordained for her [illegible] looked at her guest her face showed a grave sympathy. Yet she knew that she could not have done him a greater service. His lips were firmly pressed together while he read and re-read the letter. Lifting his eyes from the letter at last, he said:

"By heavens! How can you make gold out of lead? How can you make a new man out of an old one? Well, Miss Larida, at least you know that I am no butter-maker. I lay claims to gentility—may I remain and chat with you?"

The evening passed pleasantly, and when he finally rose to go, he said, gratefully:

"How shall I ever repay you?"

"Repay me for cutting your heart to the core with rough words? But if you are grateful, don't let me see that you feel the obligation, for that would mar my pleasure."

"This is a great service for you to undertake for your butter-maker," he said, with a tinge of bitterness.

"I am too democratic to think of that now, even if I did at first," she replied, smiling a little at his sense of abasement. "Good evening, and remember you are to call often. If I can be a help to you, I will."

"Good evening"—and he was gone.

Their friendship took rapid strides after this—it being no longer necessary for them to confine their conversations to those held over the counter. There came a day, at last, when the postman brought, instead of another "available," an imposing document in a legal envelope, which the expectant author tore open with eager curiosity.

MR. XAVIER SCHNURRIGER—Dear Sir: We shall be pleased to accept the MS. you have kindly sent us. Enclosed you will find check for the same, which, though hardly adequate, is all that we feel we can afford to an author who is yet unknown to fame. Hoping to hear from you from time to time, we remain yours,

"EDITORS POPPER'S MAGAZINE."

To Xavier Schnurriger.

He thrust on his hat, and rushed across the street to tell Miss Janes the news. Larida's face beamed with glad satisfaction as he entered, and before he had time to speak, she had taken his hand cordially, and said:

"I know about it, for I, too, have had a letter. It makes me very happy, for I know the day will come when I shall be proud to say that I had the honor to help you become famous." He almost loved her as she stood before him, making her sympathetic speech. She no longer seemed old or ineligible—she was to him then a cultivated woman, who would make—as she had made—a help-meet.

"I, Miss Larida, I can never thank you—" he began, drawing her a little closer to him.

"Sh!" she answered, smiling at his excess of emotion. "There is no need to speak of any return. Besides, my friend, I am old enough to be your grandmother."

"Not quite—" he laughed, somewhat disconcerted by the shrewd way in which she had anticipated what would have been an awkward scene. "Not quite, Miss Larida; any man might be proud to ask you to be his help-meet."

"Sh!" she entreated. "I am quite enough your senior to be permitted to make of you a protege without any impropriety. We will be friends, comrades, instead."

"Comrades," he repeated, still holding her hand. "That sounds very sweet to a lonely man. Well, good night, and God bless you, comrade," giving her hand another hearty grasp, and taking his leave.

"Yes," he said, as he went across the street, "she is the best little woman on earth; and if she were only ten or fifteen years younger—"

And Mrs. Stillwell said to her pug: "Humph! I do b'lieve she's given him the mitten. Served him right!"—Emilie Tracy Y. Swett, in Overland Monthly.

CONCRETE FLOORS.

How to Prepare the Foundations for a Cement Floor for a Stable.

The first preparation for a concrete floor is to insure complete drainage. Frost is too powerful for concrete—if wet under the floor, frost may destroy it in a day—it should therefore be completely drained before laying such a floor. When this is provided for, then place a layer of broken stone all over the space to be occupied by the floor, and with a paver's mallet drive these into the earth so as to be solid. Now a thin layer of smaller stone over this, and you are ready for the concrete. First make some thin grout by mixing two of sand with one of water lime when dry; then wet this up thin, so that it will run in between the broken stone. As fast as this thin grout fills up the spaces between the rough stone, let the whole be driven down moderately, with small mallet, and all settled solid together; add more grout if required, till all is filled to the top of the broken stone; level it off as well as may be. Now it is ready for the top layer of concrete. This layer is best if made with Portland cement, for it will be much harder than if made with common water lime; yet if Portland cement can not be had, then Akron or other good common water lime will do. If made of Akron cement, mix 1 1-2 of sand with one of cement when dry; if of Portland, mix two of sand with one of cement. Then mix well into thin mortar; spread this, in a layer 3-4 of an inch thick, all over the prepared foundation, rubbing it down well, so that it may be compact. It is important that the surface should be even and uniform. And to this end, a gauge is laid on each side of the floor, and a straight-edge, reaching from one gauge to the other, moved over the space, will show when it is even with the gauges.

This makes a very complete floor, rat and other vermin proof. The Portland cement will stand for a considerable time with no protection from cattle's feet; but cattle, in getting up, place much weight on the toes of the fore-feet, and will soon dig a hole in common concrete—they will in a few years dig holes in stone. It is, therefore, better to lay down a board next the manger, and let the friction of the fore-feet come on this board (some regard it best to lay boards from manger to gutter), which is easily replaced when worn out, and the concrete will remain uninjured. This floor will keep the manure from soaking into the earth, rendering it much easier to keep the stable sweet and wholesome for the animals. But the manure, to save both liquid and solid, should be taken directly to the field, and not piled up in the yard to lose most of its liquid by soakage and evaporation.—Country Gentleman.

A VALUABLE DOG.

He Enables His Master to Spend His Days in Blissful Idleness.

A Detroiter who was skirmishing along the river Rouge the other day with a gun, met a farmer and a dog on the road near the Woodmere cemetery, and as the two men stopped to speak the dog ran down the highway about twenty rods, sat up on end and began to bark.

"What's the matter with your dog?" asked the sportsman.

"Oh, nothing. He is simply getting ready."

"What for?"

"For you to shoot. Whenever any of you folks come gunning around here I set him up at twenty rods for a quarter a shot."

"You do, eh? Well, you can say good-bye to him at once, for I'll kill him at the first shot. Here's your quarter."

"Off-hand shot, you know?"

"Of course."

The sportsman got ready, and the farmer chewed away at a twig and gently whistled "Mollie Darling." The rifle cracked, the smoke flew away, and the dog frisked around in high glee.

"Better try another," suggested the farmer.

"I'll do it! I'll try a hundred! Here's a dollar, and that dog has seen his last spring break-up!"

It was a repeating rifle the man had, and he blazed away again and again until he had fired the four shots. The dog chased his tail around a circle, and the farmer said:

"Mebbe it isn't your day for shooting, you know?"

"Mebbe it isn't, but here's another dollar!"

He cracked away another four times, and as the last shot rang out the dog came toward him on a trot, ears cocked up and eyes looking around for rabbit tracks.

"Well, I guess I must be joggin' along," said the farmer. "I'm very much obleeged for—"

"Not by a durn sight!" shouted the hunter. "I've got two dollars left, and I'll blow every cent of it in on that pup! Send him back!"

"Stranger, the limit on this game is two and a quarter. You've struck hard-pan."

"I'll give you fifty cents a shot."

"Not to-day. In fact, John Henry won't stand over nine shots without bolting."

"Say a dollar a shot," shouted the hunter.

"Can't do it. I'm making eighteen shillings a day off that dog, and I don't want to play dirt on him. If you are down this way to-morrow whistle for me and mebbe I'll raise yer bluff. Come, John Henry."

"Five dollars for a shot!" desperately shouted the hunter.

"Not at present. Come out to-morrow. Come heeled to shoot all day. Good-bye, stranger!"—Detroit Free Press.

A PRETTY STORY.

The Bell of Justice and the Queer Petitioner for Aid.

It is a beautiful story that in one of the cities of Italy the King caused a bell to be hung in a tower in one of the public squares, and called it the "bell of justice," and commanded that any one who had been wronged should go and ring the bell, and so call the magistrate of the city, and ask and receive justice. And, when, in the course of time, the lower end of the bell-rope rotted away, a wild vine was tied to it to lengthen it; and one day an old and starving horse that had been abandoned by its owner and turned out to die, wandered into the tower, and trying to eat the vine rang the bell. And the magistrate of the city, coming to see who had rung the bell, found this old and starving horse, and he caused the owner of the horse, in whose service he had toiled and been worn out, to be summoned before him, and decreed that as his poor horse had rung the bell of justice [illegible]

A RARE FRUIT.

The Marvelous Product of a Strange Indian Ocean Tree.

Frederick Stearns has on exhibition at his office two specimens of the coco-de-mer, or double cocoanut, a remarkable fruit of one of the largest and most wonderful of palm trees. They were sent him by the Hon. E. V. Mussey, United States Consul at the Seychelles, a group of islands in the Indian ocean, north of Madagascar.

This palm tree, it is stated, attains a height of one hundred feet, its stem being nearly two feet in diameter, bearing at the summit a crown of fan-shaped leaves. It is remarkable for growing in a socket of a hard, woody texture, perforated with holes made by the roots. This curious appendage derives its origin from the cotyledon, which in this palm attains the extraordinary length of two feet, growing downward, like a root, having the stem seated in its thickened end. When perfect the thick end opens on one side, like a sheath, out of which rises the first succeeding leaves of the plant, roots also being produced, which make their exit by piercing the end of the sheath. In time the nutriment of the nut becomes exhausted, and the part of the cotyledon between it and the young plant withers. The latter, however, retains its placental vital connection with the sheath end of the cotyledon, which is henceforth nourished by the plant and increases in size with its growth, which thus continues seated in the cradle of its birth through life. This formation appears, however, to be common to the palms, but very much more largely developed in this variety. The fruit is a large oblong nut, covered with a thin rind. After the removal of the outer rind it has the appearance of two oblong nuts firmly united together, often weighing thirty to forty pounds. They are borne in bunches, each consisting of nine or ten nuts, so that a whole bunch will often weigh four hundred pounds. It takes ten years to ripen its fruit, the albumen of which is similar to that of the common cocoanut, but it is too hard and horny to serve as food. The shell is converted into many useful articles by the natives. The leaves are made into hats, baskets and the like. The demand has of late years become so great that in order to obtain the leaves the trees are cut down, and as no care is taken to form new plantations it was at one time feared this palm would eventually become extinct. In 1861 the leading botanists in England petitioned the Government for its protection. By more recent information, however, it appears that in one island alone there are many thousands of these palm trees.—Detroit Free Press.

ORIGIN OF ENGRAVING.

How One of the Most Precious Arts Known to Men Originated.

There are few chapters in the history of art of greater interest than those which unfold to us the discovery of forgotten treasures, and reveal the existence of works which had long ago passed out of remembrance. The intimate connection between the invention of engraving and the art of the silversmith, or rather that branch of the silversmith's work which consists of the chasing of an outline into a plate of precious metal to be subsequently filled up with dark-colored enamel, the so-called Niello work, was never appreciated until, at the close of the last century, Abbé Zani found among some old Italian engravings, in the National Library at Paris, a print which he recognized as similar in subject to the famous Pax, decorated with Niello work, made by Maso Finiguerra for the baptistery of St. John, and paid for, as is proved by the records, in 1452. This Pax or Assumption was subsequently transferred to the cabinet of bronzes in the gallery of Florence, where it is now preserved, and it was proved, on comparing with it the engraving, that the latter had actually been printed from the silver plate, before the enamel was fused into the outline, prior, therefore, to 1452. On the strength of this discovery, Finiguerra has, ever since the year 1796, been credited with the invention of producing engravings on paper from metal plates. There seems little reason to doubt, as has been often pointed out, that many silversmiths of the fifteenth century may have been in the habit of obtaining trials of their work in progress, as did Finiguerra, perchance, when he produced his historical print, representing Christ crowning the Virgin, from his work on the Florentine Pax. It may indeed have been, together with the well-known sulphur casts, a recognized method of obtaining a record of the Niello work, which had been practiced for many years previous to the time in question though no such paper impressions of an earlier date than this have been handed down to us. It was a common practice to take proofs of the work by means of sulphur casts long previous to 1452, as numerous specimens of such casts have been preserved to us, but it is difficult to say who was the first bold innovator to substitute a piece of paper for the sulphur, and thus originate the precious art of engraving. The story of the wet linen, which accidentally gave the idea to Finiguerra, is generally treated as fiction by those who have studied the subject.—Art Journal.

GOOD EVIDENCE.

A Frenchman's Description of His Stem-Winding Time Piece.

Travelers tell us that the popular method of driving the little street donkey in Palestine is by twisting the tail of the beast. The Virginia City Enterprise has found a Frenchman who pursues similar tactics with his watch. The Enterprise says that a day or two since, Mr. Shaw of the Consolidated Virginia Mine, found a watch lying in the snow, where it had evidently been dropped by some one walking in or about the mine. Mr. Shaw wrote a notice to this effect, posting it by the side of the window in which the men came to give their names when going on or coming off the mines.

A little Frenchman soon came to Mr. Shaw, and asked:

"You find one vatch, Mistaire Shaw?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Shaw. "Have you lost a watch?"

"Yes, sair."

"Can you describe it?"

"Oh, yes, saire, ver' perfectly."

"Well, what is it like?"

"Ma vatch he vas a silver vatch."

"Very good. What kind of a face?"

"Well, he had he's face wide open."

"What kind of chain?"

"One leedle brass chain."

"What kind of key was on the chain?" [illegible]

HOME AND FARM.

—Rice Fritters: A good way to use cold rice: One large teacup of boiled rice, two cups of milk, one egg, flour to make a stiff batter, one teaspoon baking powder. Fry on a hot griddle, eat with sugar and butter.—Toledo Blade.

—The best food for young pigs is something which will not ferment, such as dry, unground oats. The thorough mastication needed wonderfully improves digestion. Little pigs will eat a great deal of grass, and this is nature's own best medicine.—Troy Times.

—Let ewes and lambs have clean, well-ventilated apartments. When the weather is mild and warm turn them out into the yard. If it is not convenient to let the ewes out, arrange partitions and pens so that the lambs may enjoy the outside air and sunlight.—Toronto Mail.

—A sieve is a very necessary article about a poultry yard. The pail of ashes may seem to be fine enough to please the daintiest hen, but sift them and you will be surprised to see how many sharp cinders you will obtain—enough to encourage the aforesaid hen in her attempts to use the dust-box.—Western Rural.

—Coffee Jelly: One teacupful of very strong coffee. Dissolve in it a one-ounce packet of gelatine. Put on the fire one pint of milk and six ounces of sugar; when nearly on the boil pour in the coffee and gelatine. Let all boil together for ten minutes; pour into a wetted mold, and keep in a cool place till stiff.—Boston Globe.

—Away from the large cities, if nowhere else, every one who has any ground to cultivate should have a strawberry bed large enough to supply the family. Two hundred plants would give enough, with a surplus to put by for winter; while every one hundred plants in full vigor, would afford a dish nearly every day during the season.—Albany Journal.

—Escalloped Meats: Chop the meat rather coarse, season high with salt and pepper. For a pint of meat use half a cupful of gravy and a heaping cupful of bread crumbs. Put a layer of meat in a baking dish, then a layer of crumbs, then gravy, continue this until the dish is full. The top layer must be of crumbs. Cook in a hot oven until well browned. Mutton or veal is best, as beef is too dry.—The Caterer.

—The comparative idleness of winter makes the horses' shoulders tender, and unless they are hardened, plowing will soon make them sore. The best hardener is strong, pure brine. Apply it with a rag tied around the end of a corn cob. During the work season, soon as the collar is removed, wash the shoulders and apply the salt water. It toughens the flesh, and also cools the shoulder, allaying all irritation and inflammation.—Exchange.

—Farmers' Cake: One-half pound of clear pork, one-half pint of hot water, one-half pint of molasses, one cup of sugar, one large cupful of chopped raisins, two eggs, (or I sometimes use but one and a spoonful of sweet cream), one large teaspoon of soda, a little salt and all kinds of spice. The pork to be chopped fine and the hot water poured over it. Put in flour enough to make a good thick batter. It requires more flour than when more eggs are used.—Boston Bulletin.

CONCERNING MOTHS.

How to Prevent Their Development and How to Destroy Them.

Prevention is the means most to be recommended for escaping annoyance from moths. The ordinary clothes-moth may be overcome with various remedies, but when the carpet-beetle, or buffalo moth, as it is called, takes possession of a house, it is difficult to exterminate.

It is the part of prudence to brush and clean furs and woolen garments and pack them away early in the spring before the moths begin to fly and deposit eggs. First brush and beat them lightly until sure that they are clean; then paste them up perfectly tight in stout brown paper bags, or sew them up securely in linen, remembering that the small, thin clothes-moth can enter through a very slight opening. Be sure there are no holes or imperfections in the bags and the contents will be safe.

Camphor gum, red cedar chips, tobacco leaves and other strong-smelling substances will sometimes prevent moths from depositing eggs, and it is well to put something of the kind among garments packed away in trunks, chests or drawers. But this is not to be depended upon like sealing up securely, as described above.

In a badly infested house the buffalo moth preys upon furs and woolens, but it is especially troublesome on account of the damage it does to carpets and the difficulty of protecting the latter. The buffalo grub eats along the edges of carpets, generally not going more than two feet from the wall, but will often follow a crevice in the flooring for yards, eating quite through the carpet above it. As an excellent preventive to carpets not infested, it has been recommended to seal up all cracks in the flooring (which afford hiding places for the larvæ) with hot wax or tallow. Then lay down strips of gas-tar roofing paper, eighteen inches wide under the edges of the carpet. When there are many of these insects beneath a carpet there is probably no better way to destroy them than to apply benzine freely with a brush or feather along all crevices of the flooring and around the base board. Use benzine with caution on account of its inflammability. This destroys the insect in whatever stage it may be.

A remedy very successful for the common moth is to sprinkle water on the carpet wherever the moths are at work, then lay a damp sheet over it and iron with a hot iron. The steam penetrates the carpet and destroys the larvæ. To destroy them in closets where the larvæ are hidden away in cracks, fumigation with sulphur is the readiest method. Some housekeepers affirm that moths may be kept out of a room by occasionally burning sulphur in it. Stuffed furniture is often protected by having undissolved carbolic acid packed inside it. It should be used with care. Pyrethrum, or Persian insect powder, applied thickly under the edge of carpets is efficacious against the ordinary moth, but totally fails to keep out the buffalo moth. In fact the various remedies in use for moths are of little avail against this. Benzine, or kerosene, and tallow seem thus far the best remedies discovered.—N. Y. World.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

A Spring-Tide Theme — "The Laughter of the Bible."

The Various Phases of Cachinnatory Indulgence, Which are Pleasing or Displeasing to the Lord According to the Spirit Which Induces It.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, in a recent Sunday morning sermon at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, took for his subject "The Laughter of the Bible," taking for his texts the following:

Then was our mouth filled with laughter. Psalms, xxvi, 2.

He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh. --Psalms, ii, 4.

Dr. Talmage said:

Thirty-eight times does the Bible make reference to this configuration of the features and quick expulsion of the breath which we call laughter. Sometimes it is born of the sunshine and sometimes of the midnight. Sometimes it stirs the sympathies of angels and sometimes the cachinnation of devils. All healthy people laugh. Whether it pleases the Lord or displeases Him, that depends upon when we laugh and at what we laugh. My theme this morning is the laughter of the Bible, namely—Sarah's laugh, or that of skepticism; David's laugh, or that of spiritual exultation; the fool's laugh, or that of sinful merriment; God's laugh, or that of infinite condemnation; Heaven's laugh, or that of eternal triumph.

Scene. An oriental tent, the occupants, old Abraham and Sarah, perhaps wrinkled and decrepit. Their three guests are three angels—the Lord Almighty one of them. In return for the hospitality shown by the old people God promises Sarah that she shall become the ancestress of the Lord Jesus Christ. Sarah laughs in the face of God; she does not believe it. She is affrighted at what she has done. She de-[illegible] children; a failure socially, for I am treated in the streets like a pirate; a failure professionally, because I know but one minister who has adopted my sentiments." For a quarter of a century he laughed at Christianity, and ever since Christianity has been laughing at him. Now, it is a mean thing to go into a man's house and steal his goods, but, I tell you, the most gigantic burglary ever invented is the proposition to steal these treasures of our holy religion. The meanest laughter ever uttered is the laughter of the skeptic.

The next laughter mentioned in the Bible is David's laughter, or the laughter of spiritual exultation: "Then was our mouth filled with laughter." He got very much down sometimes, but there are other chapters where four or five times he calls upon the people to praise and exult. It was not a mere twitch of the lips, it was a demonstration that took hold of his whole physical nature. "Then was our mouth filled with laughter." My friends, this world will never be converted to God until Christians cry less and laugh and sing more. The horrors are poor bait. If people are to be persuaded to adopt our holy religion, it will be because they have made up their minds it is happy religion. They don't like a morbid Christianity. I know there are morbid people who enjoy a funeral. They come early to see the friends take leave of the corpse, and they steal a ride to the cemetery; but all healthy people enjoy a wedding better than they do a burial. Now, you make the religion of Christ sepulchral and hearse-like and you make it repulsive.

I say, plant the rose of Sharon along the church walks, and columbine to clamber over the church wall; and have a smile on the lip, and have the mouth filled with holy water. There is no man in the world except the Christian that has a right to feel an untrammeled glee. He is promised everything is to be for the best here, and he is on the way to a delight which will take all the processions with palm branches, and all the orchestras, harped and cymbaled and trumpeted, to express. CABINET QUARREL.

The Secretary of the Treasury Selected by Tilden and Forced Upon the President.

The President is now anxious to have it appear that there has not been any friction between himself and Secretary Manning. To Colonel Lamont has been assigned the duty of retailing the denial. Lamont has connections with the correspondents who represent the Mugwump press, and to these he makes the statement that the President has had no misunderstanding with the Secretary. It was Lamont, by the way, who gave out the story that Secretary Manning had fallen and wrenched his foot, when the fact was he had an apoplectic stroke.

I do not pretend to say what the cause is which has strained the relations between Cleveland and Manning. I do repeat, though, that from a gentleman who heard the heated discussion in the room adjoining the Cabinet chamber, I have it reiterated that there were high words which he plainly heard. The President was seemingly very angry, and Mr. Manning resented with some warmth.

Last night there dropped into the Enquirer bureau a warm friend of ex-Governor Tilden. From him I have some gossip. He says that Manning was not Mr. Cleveland's choice for Secretary of the Treasury. Indeed, he did not intend to put him in the Cabinet at all. It was Cleveland's original intention, according to this informant, to have made William C. Whitney Secretary of the Treasury. This Mr. Tilden desired to prevent. To this end he secured the advice and hearty co-operation of Sam Randall. Tilden also secured financial influence in New York City against Whitney, which included some very wealthy bankers and prominent business men. About a week before he was inaugurated Cleveland [illegible]

the purpose of holding an informal conference regarding the interests of the Democratic party and the world at large. The leaders in the Senate and House went to the Executive Mansion bubbling over with suggestions and advice to give the Executive, thinking that they had a chance to shape matters in proper form, but their disgust was very great and they have not attempted to conceal it upon finding that the political conference was only a three hours' chat upon social topics, story-telling, and the consumption of several bottles of whisky.—Inter Ocean.

WHO IS SECRETARY?

Doubts Expressed as to Whether Mr. Bayard or the English Minister is at the Head of the Department of State.

The Cleveland Administration is peculiar in very many respects, but there is scarcely a more ludicrous feature of it than its management of the Department of State. From the moment of Mr. Bayard's accession to the Secretaryship of the Department, his blunders have been numerous, continuous and disgraceful. His advice to the President concerning nominations to office in the diplomatic service of the country has been foolish and unstatesmanlike to a degree surprising even to the friends of the Secretary. His vacillating course upon about every question that has arisen in his Department since March, 1885, has left the Government practically without any thing that might be called a foreign policy, and the general verdict is that the State Department has not for a quarter of a century been so innately and unwisely handled as it is now.

But there seems from recent developments to be ample room for a still more serious charge against the Bayard style of State Department administration. There is more than cir-[illegible]

A CHINESE FUNERAL.

Peculiar and Interesting Ceremonies at the Place of Interment.

[Baltimore (Md.) Dispatch.]

Wong Gee, a young Chinaman who died here recently was buried with very interesting services. The funeral drew together one of the largest crowds that was ever seen in this city on a like occasion. The coffin was made of plain walnut, and bore the inscription:

WONG GEE,
Died March 23, 1886,
Aged 20 Years.

He was a member of an Episcopal Sunday-school, and was in the habit of singing "Jesus Loves Me." While the body was being prepared for burial two Chinamen burned rice paper and punk in the shape of little red reels with a combustible substance on the end. After the body was placed in a coffin a little package containing Chinese letters, Chinese nuts, rice paper and Chinese coins was laid beneath the corpse. The face was washed with rice paper wetted with whisky. A fan and a fine linen handkerchief were put between the fingers of either hand. Five cent coins were put in the mouth—a custom similar to that of the Greeks who provided an obolus for the Boatman Charon. A pillow wreath and two small baskets of lilies provided by friends were placed on top of the coffin. The public was allowed to view the remains from one o'clock until three o'clock, and fully two thousand availed themselves of the opportunity. Large crowds of people lined the route of the procession. In the line were Chinese bands playing what were said to be dirges, and Chinamen mounted on horseback and wearing sashes. Last of all came Wong Gee's effects, his clothes and his tombstone. This is the first Chinese funeral that has ever occurred here.

INVALIDS' HOTEL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE

No. 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Not a Hospital, but a pleasant Remedial Home, organized with

A FULL STAFF OF EIGHTEEN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS,

And exclusively devoted to the treatment of all Chronic Diseases.

This imposing Establishment was designed and erected to accommodate the large number of invalids who visit Buffalo from every State and Territory, as well as from many foreign lands, that they may avail themselves of the professional services of the Staff of skilled specialists in medicine and surgery that compose the Faculty of this widely-celebrated institution.

A FAIR AND BUSINESS-LIKE OFFER TO INVALIDS.

We earnestly invite you to come, see and examine for yourself, our institutions, appliances, advantages and success in curing chronic diseases. Have a mind of your own. Do not listen to or heed the counsel of skeptical friends or jealous physicians, who know nothing of us, our system of treatment, or means of cure, yet who never lose an opportunity to misrepresent and endeavor to prejudice people against us. We are responsible to you for what we represent, and if you come and visit us and find that we have misrepresented, in any particular, our institutions, advantages or success, we will promptly refund to you all expenses of your trip. We court honest, sincere investigation, have no secrets, and are only too glad to show all interested and candid people what we are doing for suffering humanity.

NOT ALWAYS NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.

By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases just as successfully without as with a personal consultation. While we are always glad to see our patients, and become acquainted with them, show them our institutions, and familiarize them with our system of treatment, yet we have not seen one person in five hundred whom we have cured. The perfect accuracy with which scientists are enabled to deduce the most minute particulars in their several departments, appears almost miraculous, if we view it in the light of the early ages. Take, for example, the electro-magnetic telegraph, the greatest invention of the age. Is it not a marvelous degree of accuracy which enables an operator to exactly locate a fracture in a submarine cable nearly three thousand miles long? Our venerable "clerk of the weather" has become so thoroughly familiar with the most wayward elements of nature that he can accurately predict their movements. He can sit in Washington and foretell what the weather will be in Florida or New York as well as if several hundred miles did not intervene between him and the places named. And so in all departments of modern science, what is required is the knowledge of certain signs. From these scientists deduce accurate conclusions regardless of distance. So, also, in medical science, diseases have certain unmistakable signs, or symptoms, and by reason of this fact, we [illegible] examining our patients. In recognizing diseases without a personal examination of the patient, we claim to possess no miraculous powers. We obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the practical application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. And it is to the accuracy with which this system has endowed us that we owe our almost world-wide reputation of skillfully treating lingering or chronic affections. This system of practice, and the marvelous success which has been attained through it, demonstrate the fact that diseases display certain phenomena, which, being subjected to scientific analysis, furnish abundant and unmistakable data, to guide the judgment of the skillful practitioner aright in determining the nature of diseased conditions. The most ample resources for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of every invalid, however distant he or she may reside from the physicians making the treatment of such affections a specialty. Full particulars of our original, scientific system of examining and treating patients at a distance are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." By R. V. Pierce, M. D. [illegible] pages and over 300 colored and other illustrations. Sent, post-paid, for $1.50. Or write and describe your symptoms, [illegible]

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head, everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. Trial Bottles of this Great Discovery for Consumption free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THE best on earth, can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure, safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. Sold by Druggists.

Very Remarkable Recovery.

Mr. Geo. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved that she is able now to do her own work."

Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THE [illegible] seldom gets well of itself, but deepens until it undermines the constitution, wastes away health, strength and flesh and finally fastens [illegible] Bigelow's Positive Cure is the only safe, sure and speedy remedy for coughs, colds and all throat and lung diseases. Sold by druggists at 50 cents and one dollar. Pleasant to take and safe for children.

CREDIT is due the German women and physicians for first using Red Clover Blossoms as a medicine. Best results are obtained when combined with other medicinal roots and herbs, as in Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which is the best known remedy for all blood diseases, stomach and liver troubles, pimples, costiveness, bad breath, piles, ague and malarial diseases, indigestion, loss of appetite, low spirits, headache and all diseases of the kidneys. Price 50 cents, of Druggists.

XLIXth CONGRESS.

Saturday, April 17.—The Senate was not in session. In the House a bill was passed to authorize the establishment of expert tobacco manufactories and to allow them drawbacks on imported materials. There was a spirited debate on the bill to appropriate $150,000 for the relief of sufferers by the overflow of rivers in Alabama, but no action was taken thereon.

Monday, April 19.—In the Senate Mr. Cullom introduced a bill to increase the pension for total disability to seventy-two dollars per month. A favorable report was made on a measure for the erection of a fire-proof hall of records in Washington. An adverse report was submitted on the bill to grant full pay for life to all Federal judges who may become seventy years of age or resign after thirty years' service. In the House bills were introduced: By Mr. Breckenridge, appropriating $30,000 for a military exploration of the Territory of Alaska; by Mr. Crain, to establish a sub-treasury at Galveston; also to provide for the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands among the States and Territories for educational purposes. Bills were passed to extend the postal immediate-delivery system, and providing for the sale of the Cherokee reservation in the State of Kansas.

Tuesday, April 20.—Senator Logan reintroduced his bill in the Senate to increase the efficiency of the army. Mr. Butler introduced a bill authorizing the President to retire certain army officers. In the House bills were introduced: By Mr. Storm, to give honorably discharged soldiers the preference in public appointments; by Mr. Collins, to fix the salaries of the United States District Judges at $5,000; by Mr. Wellborn, to create the office of Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. THE EXECUTIVE FINGER.

It Is Thrust Into the Labor-Trouble Pie in the Shape of a Special Message from the President to Congress in Which Is Suggested the Appointment of a Permanent Commission to Arbitrate All Difficulties Between Employers and Employes—Jay Gould Gives His Version of the Strike, and Defends His Position.

Washington, April 23.—The President yesterday sent a message to Congress on the subject of the labor troubles. The following is the full text of the message:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: The constitution imposes on the President the duty of recommending to Congress from time to time such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

I am so deeply impressed with the importance of immediately and thoughtfully meeting the problem which recent events and a present condition have thrust upon us, involving the settlement of disputes arising between our laboring men and their employers, that I am constrained to recommend to Congress legislation upon this serious and pressing subject. Under our form of government the value of labor as an element of national prosperity should be distinctly recognized, and the welfare of the laboring man should be regarded as especially entitled to legislative care. In a country which offers to all its citizens the highest attainment of social and political distinction its workingmen can not justly or safely be considered as irrevocably consigned to the limits of a class, and entitled to no attention and allowed no protest against neglect. The laboring man, bearing in his hand an indispensable contribution to our growth and progress, may well insist, with manly courage and as a right, upon the same recognition from those who make our laws as is accorded to any other citizen having a valuable interest in charge, and his reasonable demand should be met in ...

... the purpose of informing the committee that the statements about to be made were made voluntarily. Mr. Gould then entered into a detailed statement of the organization of the Missouri Pacific, and quickly came down to the recent labor troubles and the part he had taken in them.

He said he was away on a West Indian cruise when the strike occurred, and such information as he had, had reached him through official reports. He would be glad to tell the committee every thing he knew, but deemed it proper to say that the facts were not within his own knowledge. He went on to recite the story of his interview with Mr. Powderly and the committee prior to his West Indian cruise, during which he said the Knights declared that the Missouri Pacific had lived up to its agreement and agreed not to strike again, but to come to him "man fashion" and settle any future grievances they might have. Then the strike came after his departure; "yet," said Mr. Gould, "our men told Mr. Hoxie that they had no grievances, and were told to strike." He then produced and read the telegrams passing between Messrs. Powderly, Hoxie and Hopkins. At the date of the strike he had 14,315 employes, while the strikers numbered only 3,717 men, principally employed in the machine shops along the tracks and generally in the lower branches. "What followed the strike?" asked Mr. Gould, showing signs of deep feeling. "They seized St. Louis, Kansas City, Sedalia, Texarkana and our terminal facilities; they took possession and said no man shall run a train over that road. That is what they said," exclaimed Mr. Gould, in a voice exhibiting traces of strong agitation. "Our loyal employes would not run a train, and were deprived of the power to earn their wages. That was what followed the strike—forcible possession. I can't call it any thing else, something the Czar of Russia would hesitate to do with his millions of soldiers behind him."

PLACING THE BLAME.

The Congressional Committee Begins Its Investigation Into the Causes and Cure of the Labor Troubles—Messrs. Powderly and McDowell Testify.

Washington, April 21.—The special committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the labor difficulties in the Southwest commenced operations yesterday at Washington with the testimony of T. V. Powderly. Mr. Powderly said that the opinion which prevailed that the strike on the Missouri Pacific road was caused by the discharge of a man named Hall was erroneous. The real causes the payment of low wages, long hours of service, etc., as set forth in the bill of grievances recently made public by the Knights of Labor at St. Louis. When asked for redress by the men, the officials of the company had refused a conference. Another cause was stated to be that of the practice of the company of compelling their men along the Iron Mountain road, and along some roads in Texas, to purchase food and other necessaries of life from stores owned by the company. Still another was the employment by several branches of the Missouri Pacific road of convicts, who were placed at repairing tracks, the sight being often witnessed of a convict in his prison stripes and another man clothed in the garb of an honest laborer working side by side. Against such a leveling of conditions the honest workman naturally, and with pardonable indignation revolted. Mr. Powderly, in reply to a question, said that the organization of Knights of Labor had for its object the protection of labor against the exactions of employers. Its aims were to secure, if possible by honorable means, ...

AN EASTER INCIDENT.

In moonlight the world was sleeping,
As it slept on that night of old
When the wonderful angel descended
And the stone from the sepulcher rolled;
The vigil of Easter was ended,
The hour of midnight tolled.

In one of the countless chambers
Where slumber held its sway—
Dreaming perhaps of Easter—
A tranquil sleeper lay,
When the whisper of wings beside her
Wafted her dreams away.

Is it a bird? she wondered,
Lifting her startled head,
As she heard the delicate flitting
Circle around her bed,
And anon against the casement
The sweep of those wings outspread.

It was not the palpitant flutter
Of some poor terrified thing
That beateth the bars of its prison,
And bruiseth its tender wing,
But an eager, exultant motion,
Glad as the ... of spring.

The flash of a thought, and the listener
Had lighted her lamp anew,
And wide on the shadowy chamber
Its fullest radiance threw,
When straightway toward its shining
The beautiful visitant flew.

A moth, a marvel of measure,
From tip to tip of its wings
Painted in colors resplendent—
Lightest and fairest of things;
Type of the Resurrection, ...

He Found Out on Easter Sunday What He "Was For."

... everywhere. Ash-barrels and garbage-pails stood all along the sidewalk, and here and there a half-decayed orange, or a lemon peel, or a wilted cabbage was flung in the way of the foot-traveler. Ill-tempered, snarling dogs ran out of the tumble-down tenements, whose human inhabitants looked equally snarling and ill-tempered.

"What if I have made a mistake in coming here at all?" thought the anxious mother, with a shudder, as she looked into the face of her delicate child. "How hard it is to know what is best—but I could not stay any longer with them. They hated me, and they hated my child, though their own son was his father! Ah, William—dear William! How could you leave me to fight their hard hearts alone?"

A sob of anguish tried to struggle up from the almost bursting heart, but the brave little woman crushed it down, and held her child closer to her breast.

Night was coming on, and she felt the urgent need of food and shelter for Bertie; inexperienced as she was, she had but a dim idea of the difficulties before her alone, and in a great city for the first time. She began to glance about anxiously, eagerly—how dark it was!—and how suddenly the night had come on. Then for the first time she observed that the heat was not so great; a cool breeze had sprung up, and it blew straight in from the country fields she had left so far behind her. It was cool and moist, and it bore the ...

... she no longer wept in the night or waked up from dreams of terror, calling for the husband, whose ear was stopped with dust, and then clutching her child to her heart to still its aching. Then Bertie was growing so strong and beautiful—the thought of him filled her life with joy. When she came home in the long bright summer evenings and saw his sweet face pressed against the window, watching for her, there were a thousand rich women with every wish gratified before it could be spoken who would have gladly changed places with Clara Tingler.

There came an evening when Bertie watched at the window longer than ever before for the well known figure and the face that was always raised to his with a smile. But the sunset glow died away and the twilight drew on and brought the night. The lamps were lighted in the streets and the stars glittered in the sky above, and Bertie could not see any face or figure, for he could no longer see through the thick tears that scorched his eyes. At last Mammy Flynn put him to bed, wondering almost as much as himself at the non-appearance of his mother, but not so much alarmed as surprised. She comforted the child with the assurance that "mamma would be there when he waked up," and with that hope in his heart little Bertie had cried himself to sleep.

There had been an accident on Broadway that day—a stage had been ...

... door of her pew and invited him into it; and there he sat during the service. He listened, but didn't understand much till at once he heard words that seemed to drop into his soul.

"For we have all some work to do," he heard the minister say—"the humblest—the smallest of us. It may not be great or wonderful—but it is ours! The one thing appointed for us since the beginning, and in good time it will be shown to us."

To Bertie this seemed a message direct from Heaven; it brought him peace and patience; and he felt that he could wait now till his "work" was pointed out to him.

On the next Sunday he would have stolen out again, but Mammy Flynn bade him take care of Conn, for it was Easter Sunday, and the whole family were going to church. So he stayed with the child, and told him a story of a bird that used to be like a Jenny Wren, but had never known how to sing till the morning of the First Easter Sunday. When the stone was rolled away and Christ had come forth, the bird had burst into triumphant song, and then had flown away, singing to all the world the glad tidings that the Lord had risen.

After the story Conn demanded a song, and Bertie sang an Easter hymn. Long before it was finished the child was fast asleep; and his careful nurse placed him, flushed and beautiful, in his ...

One of the busiest places in this city is the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Its visitors during the day are many, and from morning until midnight the throng continues to come and go, and the street door closes with a lively clatter every few minutes. They come in all styles, the old, the young and middle-aged. They come in garments of wealth, in the rags of poverty and in the soullessness of hard luck, which soon may change. Faces pale with sadness, furrowed with care, bright with anticipation or radiant with happiness; all go through the not overwide portal, and all upon the same sort of errand, either to get or send away messages. Hope and despair jostle with carelessness and selfish joy, and each seldom notes the other. Often the face which comes smiling goes away dark ...

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The House Committee Has Agreed on the Bill. Michigan Gets Her Slice.

The river and harbor bill is practically passed, as every item has been agreed to by the House in committee of the whole, and the test votes show that when the final vote is taken for the passage of the bill the friends of the waterways of the country are apt to secure a majority for the measure. The Michigan appropriations were allowed to stand just as they came from the committee, and, as noted some time ago, they are several hundred thousand dollars in excess of the appropriation that the State received under the last bill that passed the House. Mr. Carleton, who is a member of the committee on Rivers and Harbors, worked hard for the interest of his State, and he was ably assisted so far as it was possible by other members of the Michigan delegation. When the last sections of the bill were reached and the clause providing for the surveys of certain Michigan rivers came up, Gen. Cutcheon offered an amendment providing for a survey to connect Traverse Bay with Torch Lake, in Antrim county. It was late in the afternoon, and there was probably not more than seventy five members of the House present. On a viva voce vote the amendment was declared defeated, and a division being demanded it was also lost. Gen. Cutcheon then also raised the point of no quorum. Mr. Willis begged him to withdraw the point, but Gen. Cutcheon would not, although the former insisted that the committee on Rivers and Harbors could not properly undertake anything in the nature of a canal, which he claimed this was. Several members in order to prevent an adjournment asked that another vote be taken. ...

Ironton.

Matters at Ironton seem to be going forward with the activity that usually precedes going into blast. The furnace is being overhauled and put in shape, kilns are being rebuilt, and the smoke from several indicates that the charcoal product will soon show itself. General repairs and improvements about the Company's premises are the order of the day. The tug Bob Stevenson, which has been submerged for over a year, has been raised and a force of men are at work on her hull and machinery. It is intended to put her in good shape for doing the Company's towing. Mr. Cherrie is personally superintending the Company's improvements in all the branches of the Company's affairs. The date of starting up is not yet decided, but will depend upon the outcome of the labor complications. The Company have got out about 20,000 cords of furnace wood the past winter and if matters adjust themselves satisfactorily the Company is in good shape for a lively season's business. The schooner Narragansett will do the ore carrying again this season from St. Ignace. The good people of Ironton seem to be moving forward in material, social and religious progress. The G. A. R. Post are erecting a neat and commodious hall, erected upon a site kindly given by Mr. Cherrie, and will soon occupy it. The contract for building the "First Congregation church of Ironton," has been let the Charlevoix Manufacturing Company and the work will go forward at once. It will be 30x50 and a neat and well built chapel. Rev. Mr. Van Auken, of this place, has done excellent work at Ironton, and already has a society organized there with something over 10 members. Mr VanAuken will continue his ministrations until such time as they shall secure a settled pastor, which the people of Ironton will be loth to do, so long as they are so ably supplied as at present. Miss Cherrie and Mrs. Adams, Mr. Cherrie's sisters, both active Congregationalists in their home church at Chicago, have done much to make the Ironton church a success, ...

The Charlevoix Club.

From the Chicago Journal

In the Summer of 1880 a party of Chicago gentlemen were visiting Charlevoix, Mich., on a trip of recreation. One of them, looking across beautiful Round Lake over at the promontory, expressed his thoughts with the words, "That point would make a splendid place for a Club house." This remark, unanimously concurred in by the other gentlemen present, led to further talk on the subject, and so impressed were they all with the feasibility of the idea, that plans for its realization were discussed and perfected. A refusal of the tract of land was secured, a payment was made to bind the bargain, and from this impromptu beginning the CHICAGO SUMMER RESORT COMPANY had its birth. After the return of the gentlemen to Chicago their enthusiasm on the subject was imparted to a few congenial friends, and a stock company was organized and incorporated June 2, 1881. One hundred shares at $100 each were issued and quickly taken up. An Executive Committee was organized, and authorized to proceed at once with the construction of a club-house of sufficient capacity to accommodate as many of the stockholders and their families as would probably avail themselves of its accommodations the first year. A plan, substantial, two-story building with two wings, 100x30 feet each, with high central cupola, from which can be had the most comprehensive and charming view to be seen anywhere in that vicinity, was erected. The Chicago Resort speedily grew in popularity, and to relieve the pressure of the demand for accomodation in the public house, individual cottages were erected by some of the stock holders where their families could retire by themselves and enjoy the seclusion, quiet and rest of their own homes. The plan from the first was to establish a common resort where members and their families could enjoy social worship and intercourse and amusements. ...

THE OLDEST HARDWARE HOUSE IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

AT THIS TIME OF THE YEAR

PAINTING

BECOMES AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

To every house-holder, and the question arrises What Kind of Paint to buy and where to buy it.

Stockman & Iddings undoubtedly handle a much larger quantity of Paint Supplies than any other house in the County. All goods sold by them are guaranteed to be the BEST in quality, and in PRICE the CHEAPEST.

They offer this year "THE KING," all shades and colors, manufactured and warranted by The Chicago White Lead and Oil Co., SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SOLID PAINTS, in fact others are only imitations.

Also as heretofore Heath & Milligan's BEST Liquid Paints,-Ready Mixed,-well-known and popular.

These Paints have stood the test for years, are well-known to all painters and architects in Charlevoix and vicinity and therefore need no extended notice.

CAUTION.--When you buy paint KNOW which you are buying, READY MIXED which is sold by the gallon, or solid colors, (so called paste paint) which should be sold by the pound, the oil to thin it being sold seperately by the gallon.

IF YOU WANT TO PAINT, CALCIMINE OR DO ANY OTHER SPRING WORK, OR IF YOU WANT A STOVE OF ANY KIND OR ANY OTHER HARDWARE OR BUILDING SUPPLIES, DO NOT FAIL TO GO TO STOCKMAN & IDDINGS' FOR THEM, AND GET THE BEST GOODS AT THE LOWEST PRICES.

Yours for the Improvement of Charlevoix and Charlevoix County,

STOCKMAN & IDDINGS.
